A striking case of bad judgment and management on the part of some official connected with the Navy Department came to light this week, when it was announced that the converted yacht Vixen, which was recently ordered to South American waters, would be put out of commission and probably sold. After the Vixen had been fitted up with a modern battery and otherwise equipped as a gun boat, it was discovered that there was not room aboard her to carry a sufficient amount of provisions, for her crew, for even a moderately long voyage. It is evident that somebody neglected their duty in not making this discovery before the government had gone to the expense of converting the yacht into a gun boat.

The country has no reason to feel proud of the final action of the Naval board on Construction as to the plans of three new battleships, which were this week determined upon, since it is admitted, even by the members of the board, that these battleships, when completed, will be inferior in almost every respect to the latest battleship of Great Britain, France, Germany Russia and Japan. Because American crews are best in the world is no reason why millions of the peoples money should be spent in building inferior ships for them, and Congress should prevent these vessels being constructed. If we can't build battleships equal or better in every way than those other nations are building, we would better build none. The board also decided upon the plans for three new armored cruisers. The oddest part of this whole business is that, although these six warships are to cost more than $30,000,000, not one of the famous fighting officers of our navy were consulted or even asked to make a suggestion to the board, which is composed of naval officers known as able theorists, but not as fighters.

Don't Store Your Wheat.

Farmers generally do not realize the effect on the market or storing wheat in elevators or they would not do it. Every bushel of stored wheat helps to depress the price of all the rest of the wheat in the world. When you take a load of wheat to town and store it you may think you are the only one besides the buyer that knows anything about the transaction but it is the buyer's duty to report at once to headquarters all the grain taken in for storage and the next day your stored wheat figures in all the world as "wheat in sight." It is known in Liverpool by noon the next day and has more effect in depressing the price than if you had sold it, as it looks as if you had so much wheat you had no place to keep it, and was obliged to put a small part of it somewhere else. If all the wheat growers in the U. S. would quit storing wheat for thirty days the price of it would go up like a sky rocket and there would be a lot of dead bears around the wheat pits. No combination of manipulators could keep down the price if the "visible supply" should suddenly drop off, as it would if people quit storing their wheat. Besides losing the cost of storage the chances are ten to one you will take less for your wheat when you sell it than you could have had the day you stored it. When you store it you have done all you possibly can to depress the price of it and it won't be your fault if you make a profit by holding it. If you want to store your wheat the place to do so is in your own granary. If all the farmers in the U. S. who hold wheat now should store it in the next thirty days it is my candid opinion it would drive the price down to 20cts a bushel on the farm, while if no one stored any for that length of time the price would advance in such a way as to make Leiter dizzy. Let all the farmers try it for a time and all agricultural papers please copy.—C. E. Kittinger in Dakota Farmer.

HER UNCLE'S JOKE.

"No, Kitty; you must never marry without my consent. You are not in love now, are you?"

"Why, no, uncle. How could I be when I don't know any one."

"That's so. You didn't have much chance to fall in love at school, and your vacations were spent with me. Now, Kitty, the man I want you to marry is Mr. Right."

"Mr. Wright?"

"Yes. You have never seen him?" he asked, his eyes twinkling.

"No. I don't know any Mr. Wright."

"Well, he's the man I want you to marry, and if you do you shall have every cent of my money."

"But, uncle, I have never seen him and might not care for him, and if I did perhaps he wouldn't want me."

"Oh, you'll fall in love with him fast enough, and as for him not wanting you—why, I'd like to find the man who couldn't want Kitty Clinton, even if she didn't have a nice pocketful of money. But don't worry your pretty head about him, for there's lots of time. Charlie Emery is coming here next week, and you can have a good time with him and we will see about Mr. Right later on. You remember Charlie, don't you?"

"Yes, indeed, I remember Charlie. I haven't seen him since I was 14 and he was 20. How nice he was to me, although I was so much younger. But do you know, uncle, he was in love with some one, for one day a picture of a young lady fell from his pocket and I ran away with it." She laughed as she thought how he had chased her through the fields, and when worn out she had dropped down under a tree to rest and have a look at the picture until he came up, tired and cross, to claim it. He had blushed as she handed it back, asking, "Is that the future Mrs. Emery?"

"No, it is Miss Emery, my cousin."

"Well, you needn't blush so. I'm a sort of cousin, too, but you never carry my picture with you," she said, getting up and going quickly towards the house. "Why, Kitty," he said, following her, "I think——"

"Oh, I don't care what you think," she said, as she started to run. "You can marry her for all I care," and she had gone in the house and never appeared until at dinner, when she was her old mischievous self again. He had left the next morning and she had never seen him since, but she had heard of him frequently. After graduating from college he had gone abroad and but lately returned. Miss Emery had married a college friend of his. Where did he keep that picture now?

"Now, Kitty," said her uncle, "run away and don't worry about Mr. Right. He'll be your ideal, I'll promise you."

"Well, well," he said, as she left the room. "I thought she'd see through the joke. Guess I'll let it go now. My experience is that if you want a couple to marry, make them think it impossible and then nothing can prevent them. But she'll go and fall in love with the man I want her to, thinking Mr. Right really exists."

But Kitty did let it worry her, and again and again she questioned her uncle about Mr. Wright (as she believed his name to be), but his answers gave her little or no satisfaction. Finally she determined she would forget him, while Charlie was with them, anyway.

When she saw Charlie she said she would never have taken that bearded man for the smooth-faced boy she had known four summers before. She herself was the same little sprite, with her sparkling eyes and mass of dark brown hair. When she inquired after his "fair cousin," he laughingly replied that he had spent the last Sunday with her and Tom. "What a chase you led me that day, and I never told you, but that night I received a letter from home telling me of her marriage, and I was so cross I tore the picture up."

Thus they talked of the past and the many pleasant days they had spent together. That night in her own room Kitty said softly as she put out the light, "I wish Charlie was Mr. Wright."

* * * *

They had been in the boat all the afternoon, and were just returning home.

"No, Charlie, I cannot be your wife, for uncle would never consent."

"And why didn't he tell me so? He might know what the consequences would be if I spent much time in your company."

"Oh, Charlie, didn't you know there is some Mr. Wright uncle wants me to marry? I thought likely you knew, and never said anything about it. Uncle never changes his mind, either."

"Well, he'll have to, this time," he said, as he helped her out of the boat, "for if he doesn't, I'll carry you off by force."

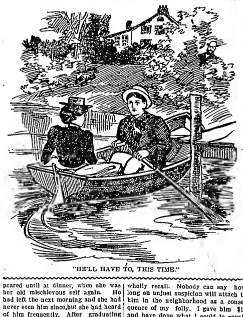
"Oh, you needn't do that, young man," said a voice close beside him, "I guess you're Mr. Right, and have my consent before you've asked it."

"But, uncle, Charlie's name isn't Wright."

"I know his name isn't Wright. That was just a joke of mine, which you didn't see through. I think he appears to be the right man, though."

"Am I, Kitty?"

"I think you are, but what a funny way for uncle to put it," and the old man laughed softly as he went into the house.—Boston Post.



"HE'LL HAVE TO, THIS TIME."

REGRET FOR HASTY JUDGMENT

Unfortunate Impression Which It Created Against an Innocent Boy.

"I received a valuable lesson in taking snap judgment the other day," said a retail merchant to a New Orleans Times-Democrat man. "I had managed to get some paint on my hands from a marking brush, and stepped into a hotel where I am well known to wash it off. Before proceeding with the scrubbing I took off my ring, which, as you see, is rather a handsome solitaire, and hung it on the faucet. When I went away I forgot to put it on, and didn't observe the fact until a quarter of an hour later, when I was in the place of a friend several blocks away. Of course, I rushed back immediately, and just as I feared there was no sign of the ring in the lavatory. A porter happened to pass while I was searching, and he told me that he had seen one of the bellboys take a ring from the faucet a moment or two before and at once slip out of the house by the back way. He gave me the name of the boy, and I started instantly to raise an alarm. As I went through the office I told the clerk in a loud voice, audible to a dozen people standing around, that the boy had stolen my ring, and I wanted him arrested on sight. Then I tore out and gave the same word to a couple of policemen and some people I knew in the adjacent shops. Inside of ten minutes I made a pretty thorough tour of the neighborhood, telling everybody to look out for the thief. Then I went to my store, hot and excited, and there stood the bellboy, with my ring in his hand. He had recognized it as my property, and came over at once to deliver it. Really, I cannot describe my mortification and chagrin. Here I had branded the poor little chap as a thief, and spread broadcast a story that I can never wholly recall. Nobody can say how long an unjust suspicion will attach to him in the neighborhood as a consequence of my folly. I gave him $10 and have done what I could to repair the mischief. The lesson was one I shall never forget."

A Good Cleaning Oil.

An excellent cleaner and polisher for furniture with a very high finish is recommended by an experienced dealer in rare woods. To one tablespoonful of linseed oil add an equal portion of turpentine, together with a piece of any pure soap the size of a walnut. Pour this into a vessel containing one quart of boiling water, and let the whole boil for about 10 minutes, stirring it occasionally, so that it may be well mixed. This liquid can be used either warm or cold, but experience teaches that it is more effective when warm; it can be heated several times before it will need renewing. Apply with a soft flannel cloth, well wrung out, to a small portion of the surface to be cleaned. After the dirt has been well wiped off, take a fresh flannel to polish with, and a few minutes' vigorous rubbing will soon restore the wood to its original brilliancy. Crude oil is the polisher used in most of the furniture shops. But it is well to remember that in the stores there is scarcely a day when each piece of furniture is not carefully wiped off with a soft cloth, keeping the surfaces perfectly clean, so that the aid of the oil is only called in to take off the cloudy appearance which will at times disfigure the most carefully tended furniture.—New York Evening Post.

Theory of Lubricating Oils.

In a lecture on "The Relations of Physics to the Mechanical Arts," Prof. Abbe stated that Prof. Reynolds was the first to show lubrication is simply a case of the flow of a viscous fluid through a narrow channel. When the journal presses on its bearing, the intermediate space is probably 1-10000th of an inch in thickness. This space being filled with oil constitutes the thin film that converts the rubbing and tearing of the metals into the sliding and rolling of liquid molecules, like myriads of minute steel friction balls. The results of the difficult researches in molecular physics of Stokes, Kirchoff, and Helmholtz have thus a direct application to the lubricating action of oils.

COLERIDGE AND OPIUM HABIT.

How the Great Author Acquired the Fatal Practice.

The following has been often quoted, but it cannot be too widely known. It is an account in Coleridge's own words of how he was led into the fatal habit of using opium: "I wrote a few stanzas twenty-three years ago, soon after my eyes had been opened to the true nature of the habit into which I had been ignorantly deluded by the seeming magic effects of opium in the sudden removal of a supposed rheumatism, attended with swellings in my knees and palpitations of the heart and pains all over me by which I had been bedridden for nearly six months. Unhappily among my neighbors and landlord's books were a large parcel of medical reviews and magazines. I had always a fondness—a common case but most mischievous turn with reading men who are at all dyspeptic—for dabbling in medical writings, and in one of these I met a case which I fancied very like my own, in which a cure had been effected by the Kendal black drop. In an evil hour I procured it; it worked miracles—the swellings disappeared, the pains vanished; I was all alive, and all around me being as ignorant as myself, nothing could exceed my triumph. I talked of nothing else, prescribed the newly discovered panacea for all complaints and carried a bottle about with me, not to lose an opportunity of administering instant relief and speedy cure to all complainers simple and gentle. Need I say that my own apparent convalescence was of no long continuance? But what then? The remedy was at hand infallible. Alas! it is with a bitter smile, a laugh of gall and bitterness, that I recall this period of unsuspecting delusion, and how I first became aware of the maelstrom, the fatal whirlpool to which I was drawing, just then the current was beyond my strength to stem. The state of my mind is truly portrayed in the following effusion, for which God knows that moment I was the victim of pain and terror, nor had I at any time taken the flattering poison as a stimulus or any craving after pleasurable sensations. I needed none, and oh, with what unutterable sorrow did I read the 'Confessions of an Opium Eater,' in which the writer with morbid vanity makes a boast of what was my misfortune, for he had faithfully and with an agony of zeal been warned off the gulf and yet willfully struck into the current. Heaven be merciful to him!"

A Rainy Day in Manila.

To any one who enjoys the funny side of life as well as the pathetic, and sees the ridiculous in everything, a rainy day on the Escolta is well worth seeing. Perhaps the most striking feature to an American is the apparent unconcern with which the natives take the "cloud-burst," for no other name is applicable to the rain as it comes down in Manila; also the numerous ways they have of keeping dry. The most approved fashion for a Quilez driver is to roll his trousers well up above the knee, without shoe or stocking, don a mackintosh, and he is thoroughly equipped for a heavy storm. If he is not lucky enough to own a mackintosh, it doesn't seem to matter much, for he takes the rain as a natural consequence and says nothing. The women all discard their velvet slippers and take one twist at the long-suffering skirt band, which lifts the skirt far above the danger of contamination with the water and mud of the "Calle;" then, if she is fortunate enough to possess an umbrella, she is provided for, and if not the proud owner of a paraguas, she substitutes her large market basket, which she balances gracefully on her head, and this answers a double purpose—keeps her cigarette from being put out by the rain and also preserves the freshness of the vegetables which are to supply the family for at least 12 hours. The children seem to be in their element. Arrayed only in a smile, they paddle in the rain and the mud very much like the native duck.—Manila Freedom.

The Length of Sermons.

From the London Graphic: In the current Methodist Times, long-winded preachers are lashed with scathing rhetoric. They are accused of "wicked self-indulgence," and told that they are "guilty of the same moral offense as the drunkard." It is an ingenious analogy, though it cannot be pressed too far; for even those of us to whom long sermons are most abhorrent would hesitate to say of the "moderate preacher" such hard things as some teetotalers say of the "moderate drinker." On the other hand, the comparison holds good in this—that, just as there are "three-bottle men" who can carry their liquor with dignity, so there are "three-quarters of an hour men" who can preach for that length of time without wearying their hearers. The difficulty is for any preacher to discover what should be the duration of his discourse in order to produce the maximum effect upon his congregation. Perhaps he might find a way out of it by taking a postcard plebiscite of his parishioners.

Rescued Their Comrade.

The Royal Humane Society has just awarded its testimonial on vellum to two little girls belonging to Ditchingham, near Bungay, for their courageous action in rescuing a comrade from the Waveney recently. Three children on their way home from school had to cross the river Waveney by a single plank, when one of them, named Helen Williamson, missed her footing and fell in. The river here is 22 feet wide and 6 feet deep. Ethel Williamson, aged eight, at once jumped in to try and save her sister, while the third child, Violet Moore, aged 11, also went in, but retained hold of the plank with one hand. There being little stream running, they thus managed to reach the bank, after which they carried home their little charge in a state of unconsciousness, from which she did not recover for three hours.

WIDOW PIPER'S NEIGHBORS.

What They Did for Her in Her Hour of Need.

The sad news went out over the Kansas prairie neighborhood one day in early May, "Farmer Piper is dead," says the Youth's Companion. He had come to the community several years before, but had not made a success of his little claim. The wife and three small children were in sore straits when the father and provider was called away, and the first thought of the neighbors when they heard of Farmer Piper's death was: "What will become of the family?" The widow herself could not answer the query. She could hold her claim if there was a crop in the waiting fields, but they lay unplowed, with sturdy weeds springing up through the old cornstalks of last year. She had no relatives to whom she could appeal, and there was nothing after the doctor's bill was paid that could be used to hire help. What was her surprise one morning, three weeks after her husband passed away, on looking out of her window, to see the vicinity of the house alive with teams and men. There were men with plows, men with harrows, men with listers and men with corn-planters. Work began without asking leave. While one team drew the stalk-cutting machine, others followed with plows. Then came the harrows and the planters, while the listers rapidly planted the corn on the fields that did not need so much care. Men were busy selecting and shelling the seed corn, and when the late spring evening came there were seventy-five acres planted and as pretty as any in the neighborhood. In the company were thirty-nine teams and twice as many men and boys, all of whom did their part in making the day a good one for the widow and her family. Toward night the visitors filed out of the yard with wagons rattling, plowshares jingling and men and boys cheering and waving good-by. The widow and her children stood in the door of the little prairie cabin. Tears did not allow them to recognize every one, but in their hearts was a thankfulness not to be put into words.

PRIESTS OF CASTILIAN BLOOD

Two Grand Old Men of Wonderful Energy and Ability.

"These high-class Spanish priests are wonderful men," said a prominent Catholic to a New Orleans Times-Democrat man. "I never encountered two finer gentlemen and more accomplished scholars than Archbishop Barnada, who was consecrated here recently, and Archbishop Zubiria, who passed through New Orleans recently. Monsignor Barnada is archbishop of Santiago de Cuba and Monsignor Zubiria is archbishop of Durango, old Mexico. Both are over 75, yet they are actively administering offices that are fully as important from a merely material standpoint and vastly more trying than the governorship of states. Their duties are complex and arduous to the last degree, yet they think nothing of long journeys by land and sea, and neither of them betrayed the least signs of fatigue. Such physical vitality was amazing and their mental activity was equally remarkable. I found them not only men of wide general culture, but they were thoroughly au fait in the affairs of the day and exhibited a keen and lively interest in current events. I found it almost impossible to realize that they had reached a period when all cares are laid aside. The two archbishops have the best Castilian blood in their veins and are certainly magnificent types of their race. I doubt whether the present generation will produce many such grand old men."

Thrilling Balloon Experience.

Danbury (Conn.) Special New York Herald: One of the features at the Danbury fair was a balloon ascension by Miss Laura Hasbrook, a young woman from Newark, Del. She made the ascension clinging to a trapeze, which swung from a parachute attached to the balloon. She expected to cut the parachute from the balloon at the height of 1,000 feet, but was unable to use her knife. She was carried to the height of a mile, and then the balloon drifted toward Danbury, two miles away, with the helpless woman appearing a mere speck to the observers. As it passed over the city the balloon dropped a considerable distance, and half the population rushed into the streets, expecting to see the young woman fall. Men in wagons and on bicycles followed the balloon across the city. At Prospect street it collapsed at a height of 500 feet, and fell rapidly, carrying the woman with it. Suddenly a gust of wind swept the balloon toward a tree. The parachute ropes caught in the branches, holding it fast. The woman clung to the ropes until she was rescued by means of ladders. Then she lost consciousness.

Why He Tore His Hair.

An editor who is well known in Fleet street once began a leading article thus: "Tomorrow is the anniversary of the death of Louis Philippe." The editor's writing was not of the clearest, so when he received the proof it ran: "Tomorrow is the anniversary of the death of Sam Philips." Justly indignant, he wrote on the margin: "Who the dickens is Sam Philips?" Having reproved the printer he went home, but at breakfast the following morning when he turned with pride to the article, which he considered better than usual, he tore his hair, for it began thus: "Tomorrow is the anniversary of the death of Sam Philips. Who the dickens is Sam Philips"—Spare Moments.

Literary Switzerland.

From the London Mail: A French statistician records that Switzerland produces annually more books than any other country in proportion to the number of inhabitants, namely, one to every 3,000. Germany comes next with one for every 3,200; Italy with one for every 3,300; France one for 3,500, England one for 6,500, United States one for 12,400.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

SOME GOOD STORIES FOR OUR JUNIOR READERS.

The Neighborhood Dog—Three Great Men—A Kind-Hearted Gander, His Devotion to an Unfortunate Old Blind Goose.

Hyacinths.

Long time my hyacinths abode
In cerement swathing gloom;
To-day they fill the spicy breath
And light of loveliest bloom
The chamber where my darling sits,
And cheer her darkened room.

So out of shadowy cell full oft
Streams forth a golden ray
To show the path our feet shall tread,
To smooth a doubtful way,
And evermore, fast following night,
Comes on the kindling day.

Dear little garden preachers, who
Such tender lessons speak,
The meaning of my hyacinths
Is never far to seek;
You give the sorrowing sympathy,
And strength you give the weak.
—Harper's Bazar.

The Neighborhood Dog.

Following the boys on the heights of Ashland you will always see a mongrel dog of a dirty no color, but wearing a beautiful silver collar. The boys cannot remember just when they began to notice the dog ever at their heels. He was neither big nor little, light nor dark, smooth nor curly, but just betwixt and between in all things but his disposition, which was perfect. When the stranger first joined them he was driven off with many a kick, cuff and cross word, but he soon made himself so useful in finding lost balls and carrying packages that the boys grew fond of him, and were ready to quarrel for the privilege of taking him home for dinner and the night. But "Tramp" was so impartial there could be no quarrels. If the boys forgot whom he stayed with last, he never did, but went frisking home with a different boy each night. The boys had another follower, little "Curly" Wilson, aged five, who would have been a nuisance but for Tramp, who kept as good watch over him as the stray balls and missing hats, shoes and coats. Twice Tramp just escaped the poundman's wagon, and it was then the boys clubbed their pocket money and bought a leather collar and a license for him, and gave him his name of Tramp. During school hours Tramp played with Curly, or snoozed by the gate of some boy, or chased cats; but noon and 4 o'clock found him waiting at the steps where the boys left the street car coming from school. They took him to the lake for a swim on Saturdays, or when they were too busy Tramp went by himself. Now, this little lake, although lovely to look at, had its dangers, like all lakes, and one that most lakes have not. It is an artificial lake made by walling in an arm of the bay, and has its tides like the ocean. When the tide is out, about half around the lake lies a smooth, broad, slippery belt of deep mud. Tramp knew enough to keep off it, but little Curly was not so wise! So one Saturday when the boys were very busy with plans for an afternoon outing they sent Tramp to bathe alone. Unseen to them, Curly followed him. When they reached the lake the tide was just beginning to creep in, and Tramp waited for deeper water. The two friends raced about the asphalt boulevard for a while; then Curly ventured on the sand, and then, no boys being near, and tempted by the shining mud, he took off his shoes and stockings and stepped out on it. Oh, how good and cool it felt to his little bare toes! Tramp tried to coax him back, but could not, and soon Curly went one step too far, sank to his ankles and stuck fast! Poor Tramp! He couldn't get him out, and he hated to leave him. But help must be had! So, seizing Curly's little wet hat, he dashed off up the hill to the boys. They saw him coming far off, and wondered what treasure he was bringing them. Some guessed rat, some duck, some rabbit; but when he dropped the little hat before them, and flew madly back, the boys all cried, "Poor Curly's drowned!" and rushed after. Now, we know he wasn't drowned, nor in very much danger yet, although the tide was coming fast, and he stood in water above his knees when the boys reached the lake—a very scared, uncomfortable little boy. It was no easy matter to get him out, for the boys sank so deep in the mud. They each tried and they tried together, but all to no purpose, and the water was slowly rising; they had finally to go out in a boat from the other side, and finally by hard pulling they got him out. For days his feet and legs were so bruised and lame he could get into no mischief. Tramp was the hero of the hour, and Curly's mother gave him the fine silver collar.—Lizzie E. Johnson.

Three Great Men.

When Posy came back with papa from a visit to New York, he felt very proud. "I saw lots of people, an' the parade—an' President Cleveland!" he exclaimed, strutting up and down the room, with his hands in his pockets. "It's nice to be a great man, isn't it, mamma?" Posy remarked. "It's a good thing to be a great man, but a great thing to be a good man,'" mamma quoted, and she added, "I once saw three great men together."

"On a platform?" said Posy, eagerly. "Yes, on the platform of a car," smiling. "When I was a little girl I had a brother, who was the only boy in the family, and he was 8 years old before a name was found for him. Then father decided that he should be named for the great general who had just taken Richmond and helped end the cruel war. So Grant was his name. Privately my brother informed me that he wanted to be called Farragut, for he was an admirer of the brave admiral. Well, there came a day when a special train was to go through our town, and everybody went down to the station. I carried a bouquet of mignonette and sweet peas which Brother Grant and I thought nice enough to present to any great man. By and by there was a far away whistle, then the train steamed into view. Cannon were fired, and the crowd hurrahed. There were so many people pushing and jostling, such an array of soldiers in blue uniforms, that Grant and I couldn't see much until we climbed on a handcar, piled with trunks, switched off on the track next to the special. From this perch we had a good view of the occupants of the rear platform. Three men drew our attention. 'The smooth faced one with the solemn look is President Andrew Johnson; the short, thick-set one with whiskers is Gen. Grant,' whispered my brother, and he added, with an ecstatic chuckle, 'and the trim fellow with the lean face and pleasant, twinkling eyes is Farragut. Say, Mollie, I mean to throw the bouquet to him!' Seizing the flowers, he leaned over to throw them at the feet of his beloved admiral. The bouquet reached its destination, but my brother lost his balance and went sprawling over the lowest trunk on the handcar! His mishap made something of a commotion, and a schoolboy near by us shouted mischievously, 'Hurrah for Grant!' meaning my brother. But the crowd, thinking only of the illustrious general, took up the cry until the whole station rang with 'Hurrah for Grant!'

"'Never mind!' said my brother, as he scrambled up by my side. 'The general—he got the shouting, but my admiral—he got the flowers!' And somehow, I always thought that the dear old sailor knew how it was, for he looked toward us, gave one of his courtly bows and genial smiles, and no one in that vast crowd was happier than my brother and I."—Mary E. Q. Brush.

The Cat and the Coon.

"One of the strangest cases of animal friendship I ever laid eyes on," said a Baronne street business man, "may be seen at a big machine shop out on Bayou St. John. A few weeks ago the engineer caught a good-sized coon—I mean a coon of the four-legged variety—prowling around the loft. How the beast got there nobody knows, and at first he showed fight and plenty of it. However, the engineer is one of those men who seem to have a mysterious natural power over wild animals, and in a few days his prisoner was eating out of his hand, coming at his call, and going around loose, as tame as a dog. That would be sufficiently wonderful of itself, but it was nothing to the friendship that soon developed between the newcomer and Tom, the pet cat of the establishment. Tom is a monstrous black and white feline, and such a talented scrapper that he has frequently licked full grown dogs. The first time he met the coon there was a battle royal, which impartial spectators declare was a draw. At any rate, it must have given the pair a mutual respect for one another, for they immediately agreed to a protocol, and have since entered into a full treaty of peace, including an offensive and defensive alliance against all other cats or coons found on the premises. At present they sleep curled up in one furry ball, eat out of the same dish and play together like a couple of kittens. One of the coon's favorite tricks is to throw his paws around the cat's neck and make the latter drag him around the yard. It is a strange sight, and I could hardly believe my eyes when I first saw them. I pity any quadruped that attempts to tackle that combination.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A Kind-Hearted Gander.

My grandfather had a Swan river gander, which had been reared near the house, and had consequently attached himself to the members of the family; so much so that, on seeing any of them at a distance, he would run to meet them, with all possible demonstrations of delight. But Swanny was quite an outcast from his own tribe, and as often as he made humble overtures to the other geese, so often was he driven away with great contempt, and on such occasions he would frequently run to some of his human friends, and, laying his head on their lap, seem to seek for sympathy. At last, however, he found a friend among his own species. An old gray goose, becoming blind, was also discarded by her more fortunate companions, and Swanny lost no opportunity of recognizing this comrade in distress. He at once took her under his protection and led her about. When he considered it well for her to have a swim he would gently take her neck in his beak and thus lead her, sometimes a great distance, to the water's edge. Having fairly launched her, he kept close by her side, and guided her from dangerous places by arching his neck over hers, and so turning her to a convenient landing place and taking her neck in his bill as before, lead her to terra firma again. When she had goslings he would proudly convoy the whole party to the water side, and if any ill-fated gosling got into difficulties in a hole or a deep cart rut, Swanny, with ready skill, would put his bill under its body and carefully raise it to the level ground.

Through a Pane of Glass.

Very few of us know how beautiful the bottom of the ocean is. In southern waters we can see much deeper than in our northern waters. In Bermuda a wooden box about twelve or fifteen inches deep, with a glass bottom, is used to look at the water life. This box is trailed after the boat or held at the side, revealing wonderful beautiful plants, fish, sea flowers, caves and mountains and sea forests. In the Island of Santa Catalina, on the Pacific coast, boats for travelers are used having panes of heavy plate glass about twelve feet long inserted in the bottom, raised so that in running in and out shore it will not be struck by rocks. The passengers sit on either side of this pane of glass and watch the wonderful sea life over which they are passing. These boats are used at night, when the water is illuminated. Every move of the boat, the water dripping from the oars, brings the most beautiful colors into view. Sometimes it seems as if great worms were floating in the water. These appear and disappear; coming to the top, they are caught, and prove to be sea worms, that, held in the hand, emit about as much light as a smoldering sulphur match. Another thing revealed by these glass-bottomed boats is the destruction caused by some of the sea insects—such tiny creatures that you can scarcely see them. They eat into the great trunks of trees used to hold wharves, and so honeycomb them that the wharf falls into the water after a time. The piles of the wharves are ablaze with light given out by these tiny creatures at night.

TRICKS OF CHOIR SINGERS.

Carrying on Conversation While Pretending to Sing the Service.

One of the English bishops has been complaining that he notices about many choir boys and men a want of reverence and of attention to the services that are going on, and he exemplifies this by saying that the choristers talk in song, and have a sort of "voluntary" of their own, wherein they drop the original words, and, to sacred music, chant, "I am so hungry; I hope we shall finish soon!"

But this is, in reality, a very old complaint, and the average stage manager is far more afflicted by it than even are choirmasters connected with places of worship. The rows of chorus men and girls one sees on the stage carry on long and animated conversations about everything under the sun, and all to music. And all the time they indulge in the gestures they have been taught as appropriate to the scene, their thoughts are really with the themes of their musical chat, and thus it is that these gestures seem so wooden and artificial. And it is a fact that the great bulk of the chorus people engaged in the highest-class "Italian" opera, sing any gibberish they please.

QUALITY AND NEWS.

FAME AND EXCELLENCE ARE DETERMINING FACTORS IN SUCCESSFUL DEVELOPMENT.

One of the Important Functions of High-Class Newspapers.

In presenting interesting phases of scientific and economic problems, high-class newspapers frequently give information of as great value in their advertising columns as in those devoted to the publication of the principal events of the day; and when the fame of a product is extended beyond its natural limits into foreign lands, and a large demand created throughout Great Britain and her colonies and the principal seaports and cities of Europe, Asia and Africa, it becomes a pleasant duty to note the fact and to tell of the points of excellence on which so great a success is based. We refer to the now world-famed laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs, the product of the California Fig Syrup Company. The merits of this well-known excellent laxative were first made known to the world through the medical journals and newspapers of the United States; and is one of the distinct achievements of the press. It is now well known that Syrup of Figs is an ethical proprietary remedy, approved by the most eminent physicians everywhere, because it is simple and effective, yet pleasant to the taste and acceptable to the system, and not only prompt in its beneficial effects, but also wholly free from any unpleasant after-effects. It is frequently referred to as the remedy of the healthy, because it is used by people who enjoy good health and who live well and feel well and are well informed on all subjects generally, including laxatives. In order to get its beneficial effects, it is necessary to get the genuine Syrup of Figs, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

WHO DRINK WHISKY?

The Brightest, Brainiest Men in the World Indulge to Excess.

It is the brightest, brainiest men in the world, the leaders in public affairs, in churches, in business and in the various professions, who drink liquor to excess. It is such men who are sought after; who are made much of in a social way, and who, consequently, are tempted to indulge in liquor. When they discover that the habit has become a disease and that they cannot stop drinking, they feel the necessity of a cure for the disease.

The experience of twenty years has taught the public that the Keeley Cure is the only cure which science has discovered for drunkenness. There are many imitators and frauds, but none have a cure, although they will promise anything to secure a man's money.

At the Minneapolis Keeley Institute the class of patients is above the average in intelligence. Lawyers, doctors, ministers, architects, business men, etc., are found in every class. It is such men who realize the necessity for a cure and desire to stop drinking. The bums and sots, who live in the low resorts, do not go to the Keeley Institute for two reasons: a lack of funds and a lack of inclination to be cured.

In almost every large business concern it will be found that among the best men are those who have taken the Keeley Cure. Employers frequently find it to their advantage to send an employe to the Minneapolis Keeley Institute to be cured, therefore making him a more valued employe. Railroads frequently send their employes who are addicted to drink to the Institute.

A man will spend the greater portion of his earnings in the saloons if he is a convivial drinker. He makes a material saving if he takes the Keeley Cure.

The management of the Minneapolis Keeley Institute always make it a point to send literature in a plain envelope to any who will send their address to the corner of Tenth street south and Park avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

An Absent-Minded Bridegroom.

Robert Dewar, brother of Lord William Dewar, the British scientist, who was the first experimenter to liquefy air, is a remarkably absent-minded man. It is said that on one occasion he left his home early one morning and repaired to the house of a friend, in which there was a fine library to which he had access. That afternoon his relatives and friends searched the neighborhood in vain for him. At length he was run down in this library. By his side was a new suit of clothes.

"It's a nice man you are," ironically said the spokesman.

"What is the matter now?" returned Robert, irritably.

"Your bride and the preacher are waiting for you for two hours. Don't you know this is your wedding day, man?"

"I declare!" said the groom, "I'd forgotten all about it! Wait until I dress, and I'll go along with you."—Philadelphia Post.

A homely woman who is vain doubts the accuracy of mirrors.

MRS. PINKHAM says that irritability indicates disease. Women who are nervous and snappish are to be pitied. Their homes are uncomfortable; their dispositions grow constantly worse. Such women need the counsel and treatment of a woman who understands the peculiar troubles of her sex.

EVERY-DAY TALKS WITH WOMEN

MRS. ANNA E. HALL, of Milldale, Conn., was all run down in health and had completely lost control of her nerves. She wrote to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Now she writes:

"I wish to thank you for what your Vegetable Compound has done for me. It has helped me more than anything else. I suffered for a long time with nervousness, pains in back and limbs and falling of the womb; also had neuralgia in my head and could not sleep. I told my husband that something must be done, for I was nearly frantic with pain. Having read of the wonderful cures Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had performed, I determined to try it. I have taken it and am happy to say I am cured. I recommend it to all my friends and never tire of telling the benefit I have derived from its use. I have you alone to thank for my recovery."

MRS. ELLEN FLANAGAN, 1810 Mountain St., Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Three years ago I was a sufferer from chronic dyspepsia, was irritable and cross, and can say that after taking seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was entirely cured. I take great pleasure in writing this to you and would be pleased to be interviewed by any one who is afflicted with that distressing complaint. I am very grateful to you."

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Sorghums Popular with Kansas Stockmen

The returns of assessors to the Kansas board of agriculture show the acreage of Kafir corn to be 47,152 acres, or about 9 per cent greater than last year. The rapidity with which Kafir corn has found favor among feeders and farmers is demonstrated by the fact that seven years ago, when the crop was first reported to the state board of agriculture, there were but 46,941 acres, while the returns now give 582,895 acres, a marvelous increase of 1,142 per cent, showing that it has taken rank among the most valued foods for live stock in all sections of the state. Milo maize and Jerusalem corn, nonsaccharine sorghums near kin to Kafir corn, and of no mean value, have for four years past steadily declined in acreage, the former about one-half and the latter from 32,000 to 3,715 acres. Saccharine sorghum, the running-mate of Kafir corn as a forage, shows a superb increase in acreage, rising from 388,259 acres last year to 448,791 this year, a gain of 60,532 acres, or 15.59 per cent. The leading sorghum-growing counties are: Finney, with 18,148 acres; Butler, 17,264; Barber, 16,597; Cowley, 11,540; Sumner, 9,659; Marion, 9,240, and Dickinson, 9,032. Sorghum has made an annual average increase of nearly 20 per cent since 1893, when Kafir corn first came into prominence.

Horticultural Observations.

Will some one develop a black seedless grape? We have white seedless grapes, but suitable only to the climate of California, and now we want a good black grape without seeds. Such a grape would sell at a fancy price on the market. The fear of appendicitis causes many people to take out the seeds when eating grapes, and this greatly detracts from the pleasure of grape eating. A grape of the character described would bring a good deal more than the common grape.

The grape crop this year is unusually large, according to reports from all parts of the country. It is going into the markets in good shape and seems to be selling very well, probably due to the fact that most of our other fruit is short in supply. The people that did not can large quantities of other fruits because they were scarce and high will to some extent make it up on grapes. So we may expect the demand for grapes to be brisk all through the fall. If we had the large crop of grapes in good fruit years that we have this year the price must have dropped sharply, but the grape crop comes in this year to fill a very large deficiency in our general fruit supply.

A standard apple barrel is needed in every state. Some of the societies that have to do with shipping apples have long since adopted a barrel that they try to make obligatory on all members, but they are able to succeed only in certain localities. The apples that are being sent to Chicago are being packed in barrels that are very often found to be far below the standard. It is reported that apples from Michigan are coming forward in such small barrels that they threaten to do great damage to the reputation of Michigan apples. In fact, when a man orders a barrel of apples he is frequently disappointed at getting an under-sized barrel. It would be well if our state laws described some kind of a barrel that could be considered legal. The buyer would then at least have some rights in the case, for he could return every under-sized barrel and demand the refunding of his money. As it is now he seems without recourse. Meanwhile the men that are shipping fruit in honest barrels are being injured, for the tendency of the under-sized barrel is to drag down the price per barrel.

It requires some care to keep onions in the best of condition, whether the amount be large or small. Of course it is more difficult to keep large than small quantities on account of the tendency of large quantities to heat and thus start growth. The onions should, in any case, be stored loosely in such a manner that the air can move through them. It is better not to store them on tight floors where no air can pass. If the storage must be over such a floor, it is better to create an air space between it and the onions. This may be done by laying scantlings over the floor, and put loose boards above them, with good-sized crocks between them. This does not give an ideal draft, it is true, but it is better than no airing at all. There is more danger of onions sprouting than freezing, and the temperature must be kept down. A good temperature for onions is about the freezing point, which will not injure them. If they do get frozen, no attempt should be made to thaw them out, but they should be covered up with straw or something of like nature, so that the thawing will be gradual. Frozen onions should not be handled, as it causes bruising and consequent rotting.

The fall of the year is the time to manure the ground for certain early spring crops, and this manuring should be done early enough in the fall to permit the manure to become incorporated with the soil and partly rotted. It must be remembered that it takes time for this to be done, and that time does not exist in the spring between the time when the ground is warm enough for seed and when early crop seeds are planted. Thus, if we want early peas, they must be put in the ground in March. If they have plenty of plant food, prepared for them the previous fall, they will push up rapidly and make a good growth before flowering, which means that the harvest will be abundant. If, as is frequently the case, the manure, green at that, has been put in the ground at about the same time as the peas, they will be unable to use it in time to do much good. The early stimulation is of the most value. What applies to early peas, applies, equally well to manuring for early cabbage, lettuce, radishes, and in fact all early vegetables. The farmer should decide now what ground is to be given them the next year, and begin laying his foundation for good crops in good fertilization of the ground for them.

South Australia Butter Production.

Whether South Australia is destined to become a great butter producer or not remains to be seen, says the Farm and Dairy, published at Sydney. Her attempts hitherto have not been altogether satisfactory, though there are signs of improvement. The bonus act, which came into force in October, 1893, gave an impetus to the industry. The first shipment of ten tons of butter was forwarded to London in that year. At the conclusion of the season in February, 1894, the quantity sent away amounted to a little over 167 tons. The following year 598 tons of butter were exported, the total amount of the bonus paid during the two years the act was in force being £11,508. The withdrawal of government assistance was coincident with the setting in of dry seasons, and the result was disaster to many of the factories that had been established; but there are now distinct signs of revival. Seven years ago there were only twenty-five butter and cheese factories in South Australia, but last year the number had increased to fifty-seven, besides which there were twenty-three creameries. For the season 1896-7 the quantities produced of butter and cheese respectively were 4,616,675 pounds and 907,123 pounds, while during 1897-8 3,900,118 pounds of butter and 849,845 pounds of cheese were made, a substantial reduction of the previous season's output, a result due entirely to the severe drought.

The Profit in Hog Raising.

Charles Haines: The profit lies in getting to market promptly and often. No breeder or feeder loses anything by constantly keeping his hogs in a condition ready for market. Care, judgment and skill pay proportionately as well in raising porkers as thoroughbreds, but remember that life is too short to waste in feeding scrubs; the lower the price of pork the more important it is that the farmer have the best machine to work up corn at a profit. Pigs intended for pork should be crowded as rapidly as possible to be the most profitable. The advantage of growing improved stock does not lie merely in its better adaptation to the market wants and to the fact that it will respond more promptly and continuously to feed; the early age at which it matures is one of the sources of profit to its owner. Early maturity is chiefly a question of feeding for generations with a view of making rapid and continuous growth, the early maturing quality being transmitted, as it gradually increases, by heredity. Breeding at an early age also probably has much to do with the creation of quality. It is possible to push it so far as that the results will be inconsistent with full and healthy development, but if this be avoided early maturity is one of the most valuable attributes of the improved animal.

Our Horses in Germany

Exports of horses to Germany continue to attract attention both at home and abroad. Regarding American horses in Germany, the Hamburger Nachrichten, in a recent article, says: "Importations from America have caused the horse-raisers of Holstein to suffer much of late. A stock company has just been formed in Berlin for the express purpose of importing horses from the United States. The Americans have succeeded in breeding a horse which compares very favorably in every way with the Holstein animal, especially in those points so highly prized in a work horse, namely, broad hips and large build generally. The best markets for Holstein horses have always been the provinces of Saxony, Thuringia and Brunswick. The demand is created by the large sugar factories. This market has been decreasing of late, owing to American horses being purchased in Berlin. A few days ago this Berlin company shipped a drove of eighty through Hamburg en route for Milan, Italy, where they are to be used on the tramways. Almost every week a long freight train filled with American horses leaves the Berliner Bahnhof for various parts of Germany. In spite of expensive freight and a tariff of $7 per head, the Americans have built up a very respectable competition in the German market."

Adjusting the Cultivator.—To say that some men do not know how to select good corn or do not know how to cultivate corn is presuming a good deal, but it is true, nevertheless, says a correspondent of Iowa Homestead. I am sure of this when I see farmers planting corn that I know will not grow under the most favorable conditions, and when I see men cultivating corn who do not know how to adjust the fenders, I have to believe that not all men who try to farm are farmers, even though they live on farms. To know how to adjust the fenders so the pulverized dirt will fall through on the small weeds, covering them up without covering the corn, is a knack not possessed by every farmer. I will not work a half-hour with a cultivator that is not properly adjusted in every way.

A Castor Bean Market.—Perry, the county seat of Noble county, Oklahoma, is the greatest shipping point for castor beans in the United States, says the Kansas City Journal. In 1897 there was shipped from Perry 75,000 bushels of castor beans. In 1898 the yield was hardly as heavy, and this year's output will be about the same as in 1898. The season begins about Aug. 1 and continues till frost. Absence of protection against foreign beans prevents shippers getting the highest price; the wild Indian beans also are bought and tend to lower the price of the cultivated. The price of the latter in 1897 was $1 per bushel; last year, 80 to 90 cents. The Perry beans are chiefly grown in Payne and Pawnee counties, along the Cimarron river.

From worthless weeds have been developed some of our choicest vegetables; and it is more than probable that some of our present weed pests will, in like manner, prove to be our friends.

Diœcious plants bear the sexes on distinct plants. Among diœcious plants are spinach and asparagus.

True Economy

The difference of cost between a good and a poor baking powder would not amount for a family's supply to one dollar a year. The poor powder would cost many times this in doctors' bills.

Royal Baking Powder may cost a little more per can, but it insures perfect, wholesome food. In fact, it is more economical in the end, because it goes further in leavening and never spoils the food.

Royal Baking Powder used always in making the biscuit and cake saves both health and money.

You cannot, if you value good health, afford to use cheap, low-grade, alum baking powders. They are apt to spoil the food; they do endanger the health. All physicians will tell you that alum in food is deleterious.

A Remarkable Career.

Jno. M. Smyth, head of the great house of Jno. M. Smyth Co., of Chicago, commenced life in a very humble way, but by dint of hard work and great business ability has built up the largest concern of its kind in the world. His name is a synonym for honesty and fair dealing. The great guitar bargain shown in another column of this paper should be of interest to those who are musically inclined, and their mammoth catalogue of everything to eat, wear or use should be in the hands of everyone.

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY

FOURTEEN PERSONS BURNED TO DEATH IN ALABAMA.

Two Houses Accidentally Burned and Their Occupants Cremated—Death Evidently Came While the People Were Sleeping—Pine Trees Surrounding the Houses Caught Fire, Preventing Any Assistance From Reaching the Persons Within—Feeling of Gloom Pervades the Colony.

Mobile, Ala., Oct. 28.—The startling news was received in this city yesterday that fourteen people had been burned to death at a place known as Faires, in Baldwin county, about thirty miles northeast of here. The information was brought to this city by Capt. Joseph E. Jordan, who resides in the locality of the fatality. It appears that some time during Monday night a fire destroyed the dwelling of Harry Goodlow and also that of Samuel Smithson, cremating all the occupants of both houses. The Goodlow family consisted of father, mother and six children. There were six persons residing in the Smithson home, the husband, wife, three children and a sister of Mrs. Smithson. No cause could be discovered for the fire and it is believed to have been of accidental origin. The pine trees surrounding the house caught fire from the flames and added to the destruction. They also prevented any assistance from reaching the persons in the house. After the bodies were found in the houses and rooms where the different members of the family were accustomed to sleep it gave the impression that death had came while the people were sleeping. The families formed part of a colony of emigrants who had settled in this region. These two families had come from Iowa, Goodlow having been in the neighborhood for some three years, while Smithson had only recently reached the locality. Goodlow was highly esteemed by the settlers. The fatalities cause a feeling of gloom to overspread the colony. The bodies were interred in the little graveyard of the settlement, one of the colonists acting as minister.

GERMAN NAVY.

Important Conferences, but Not of a Threatening Nature.

Berlin, Oct. 28.—The correspondent here of the Associated Press learns authoritatively that the conferences between the secretary of the admiralty, Admiral Tirpitz; the minister of foreign affairs, Count von Buelow, and the imperial chancellor, Prince Hohenlohe, related solely to the increase of the German navy by speedier and larger ships than contemplated under the existing programme. This is due to the radically changed political situation of the world. It is not intended as a threat to any one. The conference did not refer to sending warships to South Africa, and no decision has been reached as to the shape in which the new naval plans will reach the reichstag.

START FOR SANTA ROSA.

Gen. Young's Column on the Move—Three Men Missing.

San Isidro, P. I., Oct. 28—Atipo Gonzales, mayor of San Isidro, who fled when the Americans took possession of the town, returned yesterday. Gen. Lawton has established a civil government. One of Low's scouts and two men of the signal corps are missing. It is supposed they have been captured. This morning at daybreak Gen. Young's column, consisting of Gastnor's scouts, a company of the Twenty-seventh infantry, three troops of the Third cavalry, nine troops of the Fourth cavalry, a body of engineers and Russell's signal corps, with rations for seven days, left in the direction of Santa Rosa.

BORDER WARFARE.

Troops Sent to Preserve Order Between Cowboys.

Washington, Oct. 28.—The Mexican ambassador, Senor Aspiroz, has received word that two Americans were killed and two Mexican gendarmes were wounded in the border clash near Naco, Mex., the other day. The ambassador called at the state department, accompanied by Mr. Romero, his secretary, and had a talk with assistant Secretary Hill. Assurances of regret were expressed over the affair and both sides have taken steps in sending troops to the scene which are considered ample to maintain peace and stop border ruffianism. Secretary Root has ordered a company of United States troops from Huachuca to Naco.

Denver, Colo., Oct. 28. — Dr. Van Tull of Riverside, Ill., died in this city by stabbing himself five times in the region of the heart. Dr. Van Tull came to Denver in search of health but did not improve very rapidly. Saw a White Deer.

YULE'S CLOSE CALL.

Boer Stupidity Saves His Column From Destruction.

London, Oct. 28. — The official announcement of the joining of Gen. White and Gen. Yulue has come as a great relief, and all the more so that later dispatches have shown that nothing but the incapacity of the intelligence department of the Boers saved Gen. Yule's column from destruction. It seems that on Friday Dundee was full of alarms. Heavy firing was heard at 1 o'clock and again at 4. A severe thunderstorm soon afterward stopped the Boer cannonade.

Saturday passed in the same anxious manner in momentary expectation of an attack. The British finally evacuated, taking all they could, but leaving plenty behind for the Boers to loot. Gen. Yule's column had a very exhausting march, chiefly, it is believed, by night. The reason for a night march is not given, but it was probably a fear of Boer surprises. The heavy rain and mist hampered the march but were perhaps the means of saving Gen. Yule from molestation. It took the column twenty-four hours to cover the last sixteen miles.

The only news this morning consists of more detailed accounts of the battles already reported. A correspondent who visited the hospital at Ladysmith, where the Boers wounded at Elandslaagte, who were captured, are being tended, reports that Gen. Jan Kock, who was badly wounded in the thigh and shoulder, said that the advance of the patrol under Commandant Plenar, without guns, was simply with the object of cutting the railway, and that this body was subsequently reinforced without Gen. Joubert's orders, Gen. Viljoen accompanying them. The latter was killed early in the fight.

Col. Schiel assured the correspondent that nothing could stand against the accuracy of the British field guns, which repeatedly drove the Transvaal gunners from their embrasures. The British infantry fire was also, he said, a complete surprise to the Boers, who were confident of their ability to master any infantry attack.

With regard to the Western frontier it is reported that President Steyn recently visited a force of 2,000 Boers encamped ten miles south of Kimberley.

The war is having its natural effect in Cape Colony. Everything is at famine prices and horse flesh is at a tremendous premium.

A Dutch circular is being secretly circulated in the Burghersdorp district appealing to the Dutch to stand shoulder to shoulder against the "tyrant, who never keeps faith."

Flight of Dundee Residents.

London, Oct. 28. — The Daily Mail publishes the following dispatch from Pietermaritzburg, dated Oct. 24.

"The residents of Dundee had a weary tramp of forty miles to the nearest town, where they arrived in a pitiable plight, having lost everything. The refugees included Harry Escombe, former premier of Natal, and the Dundee magistrate. One of the Dundee people says that all day Saturday trains were arriving at Commandant Gen. Joubert's headquarters at Danahauser from the Transvaal border bringing burghers, and there must have been 10,000 on the hills that surround Dundee. The natives report that the Boers took sixteen wagons loaded with their dead from the field of the first battle at Glencoe. Among the killed were several Natal Dutch."

Will Attack Free State Forces.

London, Oct. 27.—Gen. Sir Stewart White, according to a dispatch to the Daily Mail from Cape Town, will attack the Orange Free State forces in Natal as soon as Gen. Yule's men have rested. Strong reinforcements are being sent up from the Cape.

GEN. SYMONS DEAD.

Wound Received in the Battle at Glencoe Proves Fatal.

London, Oct. 28.—The death of Gen. Sir William Penn Symons, the British commander at Glencoe, who was shot in the stomach in the battle with the Boers there Oct. 20, was officially announced at the house of commons yesterday. The parliamentary secretary of the war office in announcing the death of Gen. Symons, said:

"The news was considerately sent to Gen. White by Gen. Joubert, which confirms the impression that Gen. Yule had to leave him wounded at Dundee. We hope to have shortly full information on the disposition made by Gen. Yule for his wounded before leaving. The house," he added, "will be glad to know that we have a further report from Mafeking, which was all right on Oct. 21. As the establishment of the Eighteenth Hussars was complete, there is no explanation why infantry officers fell into the enemy's hands at the same time, and it is assumed that they were mounted infantry."

Havana, Oct. 28.—A Spaniard named Lorenzo applied for work on a sugar plantation at Matanzas. He was attacked by a number of Cuban laborers armed with machetes and received three wounds on the head. SMALLPOX EPIDEMIC.

Albert Lea the Center—Other Places in Southern Minnesota Affected.

La Crosse, Wis., Oct. 28. — There seems to be no abatement to the smallpox epidemic along the Southern Minnesota division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad. There have been three deaths at Albert Lea, Minn., which appears to be the center of the epidemic. One of the fatal cases was a brakeman of the Milwaukee road, and it is feared that he scattered the infection broadcast. There are twenty-seven cases now at Albert Lea, all corralled in the pest house. Other towns along the line report from one to three new cases.

It is understood that the lease of these elevators was made for the purpose of handling this year's crop of barley by a corporation separate from the malting company. Driven From Their Trenches With Heavy Loss.

Manila, Oct. 25. — The insurgents around Calambo and Angeles have bothered the Americans lately with their repeated attacks, like most of the Filipino attacks, consisting of shooting a lot of ammunition into their opponents' camp at long range. Maj. Cheatham's battalion of the Thirty-seventh infantry, three companies of the Twenty-first infantry, a battery of artillery and a gatling gun sallied out yesterday morning from Calambo, drove the Filipinos from their trenches and pursued them for three miles, inflicting heavy loss on them. One American was killed and three wounded of the Twenty-first infantry. Lieut. Ferguson, with twenty scouts of the Thirty-sixth regiment, reconnoitering near Labo, encountered a party of mounted Filipinos. He killed six of them and captured eight with ten rifles.

Four men from the gunboat Mariveles, were lured ashore eighteen miles from Iloilo by a flag of truce, and the insurgents killed one of them, wounded one and captured a third. Gen. Funston has already received notification of his intended reappointment, and has accepted, directing him to report to Maj. Gen. Otis for assignment to a brigade command. ST. PAUL, Nov. 6, 1899.

CONFESSIONAL!

God of our Sires who hither fled
Across a strange and stormy sea
Who suffered exile, toiled and bled
To make themselves and children free,
—God of the Pilgrims Smite us not!
We have forgot! We have forgot!

How runs the story? Far away
We hear the epoch opening gun
Fired by our Minute Men at bay
Upon the green at Lexington.
But far and faint we heed it not.
— Lord God of Hosts, we have forgot!

The Bill of Rights our Fathers signed
And sealed with shot and saber-stroke,
Their just appeal to all mankind.
Their prayers sent up through battle-smoke,
Their faith humane, without a blot,
Lord Christ, forgive! — We have forgot!

Ah, if, where sun-set islands lie,
Thy brave brown men their blood shall spill,
Shall strike for liberty and die,
Slain by the heirs of Bunker Hill.
Thou wilt remember, wilt thou not?
Though we, Thy people, have forgot!

We have forgot! A Roman lust
Profanes our ancient, holy things;
We trample justice in the dust;
We have the rabies of the kings!
The scarlet rags of gun and sword!
Have mercy on Thy people, Lord!
Amen!

—HOWARD S. TAYLOR.

While these lines are being written there is every sign of victory in the pivotal states. But whatever the result it can but inspire all of our forces, who know they are right both in morals and on the question of the real interests of the people, to continued effort which they will never cease until triumph is obtained. The idea was thus expressed in a letter from our state leaders to Mr. Bryan, writing of pending matters of importance. The letter said:

"I am more than sorry to intrude upon your resting time, but you can take plenty of it, especially if the fight you have been waging goes as now expected. And if it does not, why you may have to take a shorter rest time, and we all draw on our reserves of hope and courage."

Hanna's coming message, which McKinley is preparing, will, it is said, ask for still further increase of the standing army. How did this escape "Jerry J.'s" eagle Graphite?

Says the Republican governor of Wisconsin on McKinley's declared policy of the Philippines:

"It seems to me that the continued existence of our present form of government is threatened by this problem. We are a great nation, but we have our limitations. It is folly to talk of maintaining permanently our supremacy over those people."

Thus does the list of "traitors" and "copperheads" continue to increase, and by the best blood of the republic.

And still another "copperhead" is President Dowe, of the Commercial Travellers' National League, New York, who has resigned from a Republican organization on account of the McKinley imperialism.

Hanna has explained on the stump in Ohio how no trusts or bad combinations in restraint of trade exist. The National Watchman, from Holt's "Commercial Year Book," publishes a complete list of trusts, coming under the accepted definition, covering whole pages of The Watchman. They number 455, representing a "capital" of $4,250,000,000, of which 70 concerns, representing nearly $1,000,000, have been organized since last March. Of the total capitalization more than half is "water," on which dividends are forced by blood drawn from the people. Almost every industry in the land, except those producers from the soil, are covered in these trusts. No, there are no combinations in restraint of trade. Soon there will be no trade in restraint of the combinations and no government by the people.

Even the Minneapolis Tribune knows of one trust, the coal trust, of which it says—which might be sent to Hanna:

"Of all the pernicious trusts, the coal trust that advances the price of coal to extortionate figures at the beginning of a hard winter is the most cruel."

The following are the features of a single day's market reports last week:

Wheat drops a cent to 65¼, Minneapolis; one year ago, 61¼. Average Minnesota country price (estimated) 54¼. Bar silver, 58¼.
Oats dull and lower.
Corn lower and weaker.
Hogs and stock lower.
Potatoes dull, 12 to 15c in carload lots.
Provisions (Chicago) slow and weak.
Minneapolis flour dull. Three mills closed to reduce stocks.
Wall street.
Call money, New York, 5 to 20 per cent.
Sugar Trust, up one point.
Steel combine stock higher. Iron and tin and glass stocks higher—whose higher for all manufactures and articles of consumption, etc., etc., etc., etc.
Lower prices for producers, higher for monopoly.

St. Paul Globe: Trusts have raised prices on almost every article that the farmer is obliged to buy. But the farmer cannot form a corn, wheat, pork, beef or potato trust. He is at the mercy of all capitalistic combinations and defenseless against extortion.

And speaking of the combines, every one should have the "Book of Trusts," issued by the Traveling Men's League, of which Henry L. Chaffee is secretary. Address, 409 N. W. Building, Minneapolis.

Of the "Price Question Up to Date." Hon. George H. Shibley, director of department of money and banking, bureau of economic research, has demonstrations which are going to our daily press, with full diagrams, that conclusively apply the increased gold supply to what has really happened to prices outside of the raises by combines and trusts. It is the increase in the volume of metallic money, on the same theory of the free coinage advocates in 1896. His charts show how prices have followed the rising flood of gold, the "real thing" being that the supply of gold increasing, the purchasing power of gold diminishes, the other way of saying that prices rise.

Mr. Shibley discusses the subject most thoroughly in all its bearings, and is conducting a work of the most vital importance. Let us suggest that all interested avail themselves of the issues his bureau is making, especially our daily press which honestly desires to know the light, his address being 52 Lafayette Place, New York City.

It should make the American stop and think to read in the English dispatches that the Ladysmith disaster is like that that befell Burgoyne and Cornwallis! "It is safe to say," said the English report, "that the empire is face to face with a repulse compared only to the surrender of Burgoyne to the embattled farmers of our American colonies."

Says Olive Schreiner, writing from the Boer standpoint:

"The intellect and conscience of England are with us in our struggle for justice. From Herbert Spencer and John Morley to Frederick Harrison, the loftiest voices of the English nation are raised to recall their people to the path of justice and wisdom and in denunciation of the policy which would murder a nation to fill a few pockets."

"To fill a few pockets." How well that fits the case of America in the McKinley-Hanna regime.

The purpose of the anti-imperialists to subordinate all questions to the one of preservation of the republic, was well expressed by Professor A. H. Tolman of the University of Chicago, at the recent anti-imperialist conference when he said:

"The gold of our coinage is not so precious to me as the fine gold of our history."

We commend this sentiment to certain members of the faculty of Minnesota university. Thank God there are some of them who stand on this, as on other issues, with the masses. But far too many and too prominent of them are "chained to their idols," at the state expense!

National Committeeman T. D. O'Brien:—"The constitution of the United States has produced the best class of citizens in the world. Let us guard it as we would guard our own homes."

The state situation continues to trouble the goppite press. "Be not too confident," says the Preston Times. "A royal battle is in store for us a year from now." "The fact that Governor Lind is avoiding blunders, and making a good administration, is enough to make us pause and consider," says the Northfield News. And the uppermost thought of the one is that its editor is the man for secretary of state, and the other the man for governor. And the fact that neither will be "chosen" makes us all sad.

Jan. 10, 1900, has been fixed for date of the great Jackson Day banquet at Minneapolis, under auspices of the State League of Democratic Clubs. The whole Northwest is to be invited, and Mr. Bryan will be the great character present. Hon. William Baldwin will be at the head of arrangements. Full particulars later.

It seems that Admiral Schley is a great favorite with the Peoples' party national leaders, who would like to see the ticket made "Bryan and Schley." At this outlook such a ticket would be so much expansion that more territory would be needed for it to run on.

The cat is now clear out of the bag as to the purpose of the state Republican "machine," made clear by the capture of the "documents in the case," to-wit, the confidential circular issued by the Republican state magnates. It is jointly the action of the so-called League of Republican clubs of odoriferous John Goodnow memory, and the Republican state central committee, the Goppite chief thus officiating being Hon. F. B. Wright for the former and Hon. John H. Steele for the latter, better known as the Eustis manager of '98.

The scheme has been fully laid bare by The Globe and other of our state press, but is not in fact so stupendous as to call for all the secrecy and mysticism that has attended the incubation. In a word, it is but the selection of the Minneapolis Tribune's country issue, the Farmers' Tribune as the organ of the bodies mentioned, and as the medium of conducting a sort of bureau work. The object of this special machine favor, is the paper long edited by one, Captain C. L. Smith, who pieced out his meager Tribune "salary," by the fat one paid him by the state, in the dairy department, the loss of which, at the hands of Major Bowler, who appointed a better man in his place, was made the occasion of so loud a "squeal" by the military gentleman mentioned.

In order to bring the large elevator concerns into compliance with the law, regarding the asking of reports, Inspector Reishus has reported a large number of them to the attorney general for prosecution for violation of law. Does any one believe that Inspector Clausen would have bothered the elevators for that or any other shortcomings?

FINISH FOR AGGIE

MOST IMPORTANT EXPEDITION OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Gen. Wheaton With a Brigade Loaded on Transports and Accompanied by a Naval Escort Starts, Presumably for Dagupan—Plan to Advance on Aguinaldo From Three Sides, Which, With Mountains Hemming in the Other Side, Will Soon Make His Capital Untenable.

Manila, Nov. 7.—Yesterday evening a fleet of transports and gunboats left Manila for the most important expedition of the autumn campaign. Its destination is supposed to be Dagupan, or some other northern port. Gen. Wheaton commands, with a brigade consisting of the Thirteenth infantry, Thirty-third infantry, two guns of the Sixth artillery and two Gatlings. The transports Sheridan, Francisco de Reyes and Aztec carry the troops, with the gunboat Helena as an escort.

A dispatch boat was sent to arrange a rendezvous with the cruiser Charleston and other warships which are patrolling the northern coast of Luzon. The landing will be made under cover of the guns of the fleet. It is assumed here that the purpose of the expedition is to move down the Dagupan-Manila railway toward the east, or to prevent Aguinaldo's forces making another base further north.

Dagupan and Aparri are strongholds of the insurgents in the north, and it is supposed are the points where most of the filibustering expeditions land. Since the beginning of hostilities it has been the unanimous opinion of military experts here that Dagupan should be made a but sufficient troops heretofore have been lacking. With Generals Wheaton, MacArthur and Lawton moving upon the enemy from three directions and the mountains hemming in the other side, the insurgents' capital will soon become untenable. Aguinaldo may attempt to shift his headquarters to the rich tobacco country at the northern end of the island. Possibly he may slide around Gen. Lawton's front to the southern provinces, but as MacArthur's and Gen. Wheaton's troops are spread across the country from Angeles to Cabanatuan, it will be difficult for the insurgents to escape.

Should the concerted operations succeed organized insurrection on a large scale should be at an end early next spring, although guerilla warfare is likely to continue for a long time. No one anticipates that the insurgents will make many hard battles. The problem is to move the troops about the country, to maintain transportation and to hold the territory gained. The moral effect of the arrival of a large American army is calculated upon to sap Aguinaldo's strength by desertions and through the loss of hope among the supporters of the revolutionary movement.

MacArthur Takes Magalang.

Manila, Nov. 7. — Two columns of Gen. MacArthur's division yesterday took Magalang, about six miles northeast of Angeles. Col. Smith, with two battalions of the Seventeenth infantry, two guns of the First artillery and a body of engineers advanced from Angeles. Maj. O'Brien, with a battalion of the Seventeenth infantry and two troops of the Forty-eighth cavalry, moved from Calulut. Col. Smith killed eleven insurgents, wounded 123 and captured fifty, as well as taking a lot of insurgent transportation. Maj. O'Brien killed forty-nine insurgents, wounded many and took forty-eight prisoners. The Americans had eleven wounded.

NOT HER HUSBAND.

Illinois Woman Buries a Stranger and Collects Insurance.

La Salle, Ill., Nov. 7.—The body of a man was found in a pasture north of Peru about ten days ago and identified by Mrs. John Roberts as her husband. The coroner's jury brought in a verdict of death from exposure and exhaustion. The body was interred by Mrs. Roberts in the family burying ground. Roberts' insurance in the Metropolitan Life Insurance company was collected by Mrs. Roberts. She has just received a letter from her husband, from which it appears he is in the county poor house at Ottawa, where he had been sent by the supervisors. The affair has created a sensation here. The authorities are investigating the case.

BOTH BADLY DAMAGED.

Steamer Collides With a Schooner Off Long Branch.

New York, Nov. 7.—The steamer Tallahassee returned to her pier at midnight yesterday. Capt. Askins reports that when off Long Branch at 9:40 p. m. his steamer collided with the four-mosted schooner Senator Sullivan, which struck on the forward port bows, the jib boom going through the plates on the main deck in the forecastle. The bowsprit then struck the ship about fifteen feet further aft and ten feet lower down, about five feet from the water line. Each hole is from four to six feet square. The Sullivan was towed here badly damaged. She lost her jibboom, bowsprit, cutwater and had all her head gear carried away.

HEAVY LOSS BY FIRE.

Kansas City Has the Worst Fire in Its History.

Kansas City, Nov. 7.—Half a million dollars' worth of property was destroyed by fire after midnight, starting in Jones Bros.' big department store, North Main and Sixth streets, and spread to half a block of other buildings on Main and Walnut streets. The aggregate insurance is estimated at $365,000. The heaviest losers are Jones Bros., who estimate their stock, which was totally destroyed, as worth $300,000. The insurance carried by this firm amounted to 82 per cent of the loss. It is the most destructive fire that has ever visited the up-town business district.

The fire started in the building occupied by Jones Bros. shortly after midnight, and its inflammable contents burned with remarkable rapidity. In twenty minutes the entire six stories were a mass of flames and burning embers were being carried by a stiff breeze in all directions. Twenty minutes later part of the main street wall fell with a terrific crash. Within a short time the south wall tottered and fell, crashing into the Humboldt building, a five-story structure across Sixth street, carrying down a part of the latter building. In a little more than an hour after the fire started the Jones stock was entirely destroyed and nothing was left of the building but the foundation. In the meantime the fire had spread south to the Humboldt building, north to the Jones annex and Quinn's grocery, all five-story buildings, and flying embers had caught the old St. James hotel, five stories high, half a block north on Walnut street, the next street east. The hotel was partially saved, but the walls are bulging out and the building will have to be torn down. Absolutely nothing of the stock of the Emerich Dry Goods company was saved, and their building is a total wreck. Two stories of the Quinn building were burned and Quinn's stock was ruined. The other losses were caused principally by water and smoke. Every fire company in the city was called to the scene and help was sent by Kansas City, Kan. Firemen had many narrow escapes from falling walls. Don Donovan fell thirty feet through a skylight at the St. James hotel and was seriously hurt but will recover.

BRITISH FALL BACK.

Towns Evacuated by Order of Gen. Buller.

London, Nov. 7.—The war office late Saturday afternoon issued a bulletin to the effect that Colenso had been evacuated and that the British troops had concentrated farther to the south. It further states that women and children from Ladysmith are arriving at Pietermaritzburg. This commonly means that Gen. White has surrendered, as it is rumored in the continental dispatches, or is at least completely surrounded.

The British war office either cannot or will not give out the news. Since Wednesday London has been practically famishing for information from the front, but except the long lists of killed and injured, which appear longer every day, and one bulletin Saturday, not a line of fresh tidings has been given for three days.

The general belief in London is that the Boers are now waiting for more guns from Pretoria before attacking Ladysmith. The fact that Gen. Buller appears to have ordered a retirement from Stromberg, and, perhaps, from other places, relieves to some extent the public mind, which, otherwise, would have been further alarmed. Confidence is felt in any measures that Gen. Buller may deem desirable. The knowledge that the pigeon post is working has also come as a relief to the great anxiety previously felt.

Moved Back by Buller.

London, Nov. 7. — The Daily Mail publishes the following dispatch from Burghersdorf, dated Nov. 2:

"The large British camp at Stromberg Junction has been broken up by order of Gen. Buller. Everything, including guns, stores, tents and the usual paraphernalia of a camp, is being removed to Queenstown, about five miles southwest of Stromberg. An Orange Free State force, about 3,500 strong, with several guns, which for some time was concentrated just across the Orange river, has crossed the bridge at Bethulie, destroying portions of the railway on its march. This is obviously with the intention of checking the coming advance of our army corps. The enemy now appear to be awaiting information before making a further move to the southward. The impression here is that the removal of the Stromberg camp may result in a large number of the colonial Boers joining the enemy. The English section is nearly upset at the withdrawal of the British forces and the serious news from Natal."

The Cape Town correspondent of the Daily Mail says he understands that in addition to Stromberg, Rosmead Junction and Naauw Poort are to be evacuated.

Boers Suffer Heavy Loss.

London, Nov. 7.—A special dispatch from Ladysmith, describing the engagement at Bester's hill, says the Boers were completely routed and suffered heavy loss. Their entire camp was captured. The correspondent goes on to say: "An artillery duel is in progress. A British shell struck a Boer forty-pounder and completely wrecked it."

Many Boers Were Killed.

London, Nov. 7. — The Times publishes a dispatch from Pietermaritzburg, dated Nov. 3, which says:

"The Dutch residents here have received news of a sanguinary battle fought yesterday, probably between Ladysmith and Colenso. A large number of Boers were killed, many being relatives of Natal Dutch residing in this place. The English residents have no knowledge of any engagement."

Ladysmith Completely Invested.

London, Nov. 7.—The correspondent of the Times at Ladysmith, under date of Nov. 2, confirms the report of artillery exchanges. He says:

"The investment of the town is now practically complete. Last night the enemy tapped the wires in our rear. He can therefore cut our communication whenever he pleases. It is suggested however, that the Boers believe Ladysmith is in their power and that they are therefore anxious to have us get up all our military stores before they attack us.

Captured the Boers' Camp.

London, Nov. 7.—A special dispatch from Ladysmith, filed Thursday afternoon, says:

"While the naval brigade was pounding away at the Boer batteries this morning a party of British cavalry and volunteers were sent out. Creeping around the hills, they surprised and captured one of the enemy's camps."

Boers Will Employ Privateers.

Paris, Nov. 7.—The Temps corroborates the statement of the Eclair that the Boers have decided to employ privateers, and says: There is an immense fleet of transports now at sea carrying troops. The Transvaal cannot seriously threaten these, but there is no doubt that it has issued letters of marque in Europe and the United States and British commerce may suffer, even if the transports do not."

Annexed by Boers.

Cape Town, Nov. 4. — Delayed in Transmission.—Another dispatch from Ladysmith says the Boers have proclaimed the upper Tugela division of Natal annexed to the Orange Free State.

Bombarding Mafeking.

Cape Town, Nov. 4. — Delayed in Transmission—Advices from Mafeking announce that the Boers placed in position a big pretoria gun several miles from Mafeking, firing sixteen shots at the town. Only one reached the mark, resulting in the burning of Well's store. The garrison having suffered no harm thus far, is jubilant and an attack from the rear is not expected.

It takes a very small mirror to reflect the whole surface of the sun, and a single paragraph from a private letter expresses the less frankly avowed attitude of many a present-day undergraduate. More than two centuries ago, Edmund Verney wrote from Oxford: "Most Honored Father: I want a Hatt, and a payre of Fringed Gloves, before Sunday next, for as I come from church everybody gazeth upon me and asketh who I am. This I was told by a Friend of Myne who was asked by Two of Three who t was." The reader of today may well smile, for in all classes of society worth courting, the trained and honest hand may go gloveless, if it pleases, and the head is distinctly valued above the "Hatt."

Kipling's story, "The Man Who Would Be King," has found a strange parallel in central Africa, where a romance as weird and bloody as any ever penned by the English writer has just reached its finale. Two French officers, dreaming of great empires with themselves as rulers, headed a mutiny and murdered their commander. Then, with their supposedly devoted followers, they plunged into the wilderness and were there in turn murdered by the native soldiery on whom they counted for the arms that could win their kingdoms. To make a fitting climax to the story, the news of their fate reached Paris on the very day when memorial services were being celebrated for the officer they slew. Fiction's pages can furnish few more thrilling narratives, and the novelist would indeed be dull who could not weave a tale of fascinating interest around the ambitions, crimes and endings of the soldiers who wanted to rule a tropic world.

Consul Heenan at Odessa reports on a curious device to prevent rats carrying contagious diseases into ships. The cable of the ship was run through a piece of iron pipe about a foot in length, and welded on the end of the pipe was a flange or funnel, which looked like the end of a trumpet with the wide end facing the ship. The iron pipe was stuffed with oakum to prevent rats from passing through it. This novel construction was quite close to the ship. The Russian authorities furnish these appliances and oblige all ships to use them whenever they come from a part infected with the plague, in order to prevent the rats on the ship coming on shore. It is generally conceded that the plague has been carried and spread by rats which have left ships coming from infected ports. It is known that rats make use of the cable to come on shore, and this iron pipe, with its funnel-shaped arrangement was employed to prevent such visits, if possible. These devices are attached to each cable by which the ship is moored. In addition to this precaution the master of the ship is obliged to take down his loading stages every night and erect them again the following morning in order to prevent the rats coming on shore.

The report of the medical register of the North London Hospital for Consumption at Hampstead states that 183 cases have been treated on the open air principle since January, and of these 43.7 per cent left the hospital to return to work, 32.3 per cent distinctly improved, 7.6 slightly improved, 4.3 did not improve, and 3.9 died. It is stated to be a common occurrence for patients to enter the hospital with marked signs of the disease and to leave after nine or ten weeks with no sign of active disease and an increase of ten to twenty pounds in weight.

The latest report of the pension office has just been given to the public. The rolls now contain 991,000 names, of which one-fourth represent widows and other dependents. The amount paid on this account during the last fiscal year was $138,500,000. The total outlay for pensions up to date has been $2,400,000,000, a sum which, as the Outlook intimates, would have paid for all the real estate in the seceding states. Economically considered, the afterclap of war strikes quite as hard as the original blow.

UNCLE SAM'S TEA FARM.

Government Industry in South Carolina a Big Success.

Tea gardens in the United States are now an accomplished fact, for, after many experiments, it has been amply demonstrated that tea can be grown at a profit. The department of agriculture has made careful inquiry and examination into this industry, as proved by Dr. C. U. Shepard on his Pinehurst plantation in South Carolina, and now believes that tea can be grown at a fair profit in many of the cotton-producing states. From these successful experiments it also believes that within fifteen years there will be hundreds of tea plantations scattered through the cotton belt.

The estate of Pinehurst, where these experiments have been made, comprises about seven hundred acres. The surface throughout is gently undulating, and the soil mainly a sandy loam. In some of the lower parts it is composed of a certain amount of peaty matter, but these portions are confined to small areas. The domain is well supplied with belts and groups of natural tree growth, among which the southern, or long-leafed, pine (pinus palustris) abounds. It should be understood that in all tea-growing countries the plantations are called tea gardens. Whether the area under cultivation is one acre or 1,000 acres, it is recognized as a garden, and in all features of the industry this appellation is employed.

Dr. Shepard has tea gardens planted on different sites. This is for the purpose of experiment with varied aspects and varied conditions. Some of the gardens are producing, others are set out with young plants and others are in the experiment stage. The first experiments were such failures that Dr. Shepard thought seriously of abandoning the work. The plants were not hardy enough for this climate. Seeds of a hardier variety were secured and later experiments were successful. One of the Pinehurst gardens is producing an average of five ounces of tea to the plant, which equals the Ceylon and Indian average, and is double that of the Chinese and Japanese plants. A prominent tea grower of Ceylon, who visited Pinehurst, pronounced the tea grown here equal to any in the world. One attraction for visitors to the Pinehurst gardens is the foliage, which is a deep, velvety green.

One of the first problems to be solved in promoting this industry was that of growing tea in a district which has a yearly rainfall of fifty-six inches, while Asiatic authorities claim that it should not be less than eighty to one hundred inches. Some of the best tea districts have one hundred and twenty inches of yearly rainfall. Again, it was found that authorities agree that the temperature should never be lower than 40 degrees Fahrenheit, for although the plant can survive zero, yet the best production is obtained from plants where frost does not prevail. At Pinehurst 15 degrees may be expected during winter. In regard to moisture, the profitable production of tea depends principally upon rainfall or the presence of moisture in the soil. With an ample supply of water, the plants are maintained in constant vigor, and the operation of manufacture proceeds uninterruptedly during the whole period of active growth. In districts favored with sufficient heat and rains the plants furnish from fifteen to twenty pickings yearly. In some parts of China the plants are picked four times only. Of course something depends upon the soil. If it is poor, the growths will be limited compared to what will be realized if it is rich, although the rainfall may be the same in both cases. The condition of the soil is specially important where there is a lack of rain, as then the richest soil will support the best growth.

To establish a system of soil treatment that would, as far as practicable, compensate for the scarcity and unequal distribution of rainfall, Dr. Shepard concluded to pay particular attention to its physical condition and its relation to air and moisture. He therefore, as a first step toward improvement, underdrained his land; it was afterward plowed deeply, followed with a subsoil plow, stirring up and pulverizing to a depth of eighteen inches or more. This system of soil preparation is not confined to low grounds or those seemingly wet, but it is applied to high and rolling lands, in order to prevent the rapid flow of rainfall from the surface and washing of the soil. It is now recognized that draining, in connection with deep cultivation, secures a more ample and lasting supply of moisture in dry times, and maintains the continuous growth of vegetation during even severe droughts. This is well exemplified in these tea gardens, those on rolling grounds showing a verdant color of leaf equally with those on lower and richer-looking spots. This conversation of moisture is further enhanced by a careful system of surface culture, which prevents in a great degree the evaporation of moisture from the upper stratum of soil. Thus a gain of moisture equivalent to a fall of ten or fifteen inches of rain is secured.

This, although largely a step in overcoming the lack of moisture, has had the attention of the department of agriculture and from experiments made in irrigation by Elwood Mead, expert in charge of such experiments, has been further enhanced. Conducted on the scale of Dr. Shepard's experiments, the tea gardens net a profit of ten cents per pound, or about $40 an acre may be realized.

In all considerations relating to the profitable culture of tea in this country the labor question is another dominant factor. It has seemed impracticable to compete with the cheap labor of Oriental peoples, and while some of the process of manufacture have been delegated to machinery, the picking of the leaves, requiring discrimination in selection, has to be done by hand. At the lowest estimate, it costs about eight times more to pick one pound of tea in South Carolina than the prices paid for the same service in Asia. This is the most serious consideration that presents itself to the tea growers.

Dr. Shepard soon found himself face to face with this problem. His tea gardens not being of sufficient area to employ a constant force, in the gathering of the first flush, he would obtain any week all the pickers required, but when the next flush became due he would find his former pickers scattered and unobtainable just when most needed. In this way his operations were so embarrassed as to entail loss, for it is all important to pick leaves when at their best condition, which is of short duration. They rapidly develop beyond the requisite tenderness, after which they are not fit for use.

After bestowing much thought upon methods for the betterment of this state of affairs, Dr. Shepard matured plans and put them into execution, and is so far well pleased with the result. He built a schoolhouse, a comfortable, home-like cottage building, having ample, well-furnished rooms, containing all the requisites for teaching. After engaging a competent teacher, he invited the colored families of the neighborhood to send their children to his school free of charge. They would be taught reading and writing and such other accomplishments as are ordinarily taught in primary schools; they would also be taught to pick tea, and thus earn to help buy them food and clothing. This offer was favorably received and acted upon, so that Dr. Shepard has a goodly list of scholars, from which he draws his pickers in numbers as required.

ROMANCE

Concealed in a Ring Bought in an Old Curiosity Shop.

New Orleans Times-Democrat: "I picked up this ring in a Royal street curio shop," said a visitor from New York to some friends the other evening, extending his forefinger as he spoke and exhibiting an antique gold hooop, set with a veined red stone, not over half an inch across. "You think it is rather ugly, I suppose," he continued, "and so do I, but while examining it at the shop I happened to notice that the setting was inordinately thick, and I bought the thing 'on suspicion,' as the saying goes. When I got outside I put my knifeblade to the edge of the little band around the stone and this is what happened—see!" The dull red setting opened like a lid, disclosing a tiny portrait of a woman, the smallest and most perfect miniature any of the admiring group had ever seen. The face was strangely sweet and pensive; it was that of a woman apparently about 25 years old, and the arrangement of the hair, as well as what could be seen of the dress, indicated a period somewhere in the forties. On the edge of the setting were some curious angular marks, but whether they were intended for a name or a date nobody could determine. "I first thought the picture was a daguerreotype," said the owner of the ring, "but closer inspection showed that it was painted, either on enamel or ivory. You will notice that the cheeks are tinted, after the old style, while the rest is in black and white. It is certainly a wonderfully fine piece of work, and that there is a romance connected with it goes without saying. Look at the hoop—how it is worn. The miniature must have been painted more than half a century ago, and I dare say this woman is sleeping now in one of the old cemeteries here in town. I would give a good deal to know the history of this trinket, but it seems to be lost—hopelessly lost."

Russian Naval Budget.

Dispatches announce that the Russian naval credit for 1900 will be 87,500,000 rubles. This is a substantial increase over last year, when the outlay was 67,000,000, but it is merely part of the general plan adopted two years ago, when it was decided to spend 413,000,000 in a period of seven years. Russia aims to increase its navy greatly during the next few years. All of the shipbuilding firms to Russia are busy; while two yards in France and two in Germany are at work upon men-of-war for the czar.

FOOD AND INSANITY.

Poor Nutrition as a Factor in Mental Weakness.

Dr. C. G. Hill in Baltimore Sun: More and more expert opinion is leaning to the idea that insanity need not always be a purely mental disease, but that impurities of the blood have a powerful effect upon the psychical being. There are two effective agents in bringing about a physical condition that invites insanity. One is overfeeding and the other underfeeding. Overfeeding has wrecked more constitutions and minds than the great majority of persons have any idea. The name of the evils that follow in its train is legion. All the proper functions of the body are thrown out of gear, diseases of vital organs and of the blood are invited, with their corresponding effect upon the brain structure. When one reflects that even the middle classes of today live better and have more of the conveniences of life than dukes and kings two centuries ago, it is easy to see the tendency toward enervation. Among the more fortunate classes the women have little to occupy their attention save eating, reading, gossip and other engagements. There is no cultivation of healthy exercise. The men are at a high mental pressure all the time, with little physical culture, and find their chief relaxation in overindulgence, either in eating or drinking or both. Men and women are prone to keep late hours and to seek exciting diversions. While the physical nature is being weakened by excesses, the mental nature is kept aflame with excitement, and the frequent result of the combination is some form of insanity. Underfeeding breaks down the mind and body in an opposite manner. The tissues are not nourished, the vital forces not properly maintained, and the weakening physical man is attended in his deteriorating stages by the weakening mental man. The social and industrial conditions of today are rapidly dividing humanity into two great classes—extremes—in which insanity finds a ready foothold for the reasons given.

MARRIAGE IN GREECE.

Arranged on Common-Sense Lines—Is Usually a Success.

Marriage is looked forward to as a matter of course in Greece, says a writer in Good Words. The preparation of a girl's trousseau is often begun by her careful mother while she is still a child. This is more especially the case among the working and peasant classes. The former purchase by degrees the materials necessary according to their means, leaving to the maiden herself the task of converting them into wearing apparel and articles for domestic use. The daughter of a well-to-do peasant will receive as her portion a sum ranging from £30 to £100, a good stock of house linen and home-made carpets and rugs, several articles of furniture, and two or three suits of clothes, including a gala costume for Sundays and holidays. A husband for a portionless girl being hard to find, Greek fathers make it their first duty to save a dot for their daughters, and brothers in a father's place consider it incumbent on them to see their sisters settled in life before taking wives unto themselves. Though Greek marriages are thus for the most part marriages de convenance, marital dissensions are extremely rare, especially among the upper and middle classes. Greek men, besides being good sons and brothers, are exemplary husbands, and the women in their turn are the most devoted of wives. Unions which result in serious incompatibility of temper or want of sympathy arising from other unforseen causes, are occasionally dissolved by a council of elders, presided over by the archbishop of the diocese. The proceedings are kept strictly private and all the evidence is heard in camera, thus avoiding the scandal attached to divorce cases in the west.

He Had Not Changed.

From the Memphis Scimetar: Graham Macfarlane relates that the other day he was in a barber shop presided over by a tonsorial artist who is a man of color. The operation of shaving Mr. Macfarlane was about half finished when there came in another negro, a hack driver, who demanded $2 that the barber owed him for a hack at a funeral. "Come in next week, an' I'll have it," said the barber, as he continued to scrape. But the creditor got on his ear. "Look a-hyar!" said he, "I'se gittin' mighty tired o' comin' eroun' here after dis yere money. Hit's always de same thing. Come eroun' nex' week. I'm tired o' comin' eroun' nex' week. I wants ma money! I come in las' week, an' yo' tole me to come in nex' week, an' I comes nex' week and yo' tells me ter come de week after. I wants ma money!" With that the barber took the middle of the floor and declared himself. "Look a-hyar, black man," said he, "whut yo' pesterin' me about yo' money? Isn't I tole yo' to come nex' week. What yo' expec'? I've done tole yer de samo all de time. Nex' week! Nex' week! I tole yer dat las' week, and I tells yer dat now. I hasn't changed. I'se prepared to do jas' whut I says."

The Proper Sphere of Mathematics.

In a review of Prof. Perry's "Steam Engine and Oil and Gas Engines," the Engineer says the professor is one of the cleverest and most accurate of modern mathematicians. He has consistently preached and practiced the doctrine that truth is not pumped from any mathematical well, but can only be won by quarrying the rocks of physical nature with the tools of direct observation. Make sure of your facts first, and then use mathematics as a servant to dust and sort them out, and put them away each in its proper pigeon-hole, but do not let mathematics become the master to ride away with the imagination and train it into belief. The best books on physics are those through whose pages there runs the smallest stream of equations.

The Weed-Destroyers.

The Department of Agriculture announces that the best weed-destroyers among the birds of this country are the goldfinches, the grosbeaks and the native sparrows. The destruction is effected by eating the seeds. The English sparrow is too much of a pillager to be included among the more useful birds.

TRADE RISKS TO EYESIGHT.

Grinders' Eyes Are Frequently Injured by Particles of Steel.

Few of us, perhaps, recognize the dangers to sight that are involved in some occupations. Simeon Snell, in his presidential address to the ophthalmological section of Portsmouth, said that to many trades associated with iron and steel small foreign bodies were very apt to be lodged in the workmen's cornea. Even in the course of a single day a grinder might get several such bodies fixed in his cornea. If the cornea of a grinder were carefully examined with a magnifying glass it would not infrequently be found to be studded over with minute nebulae caused by the repeated slight injuries which had been thus received, and, if further testimony of the risks to which the grinder's eyes are exposed were required, it might be found by examining the spectacles of such grinders as use them. The surface would be found to be studded all over with marks caused by the impact of particles of steel or emery. Many workmen were, he said, very skillful in removing "motes," as these particles were called, when they stick in the cornea, and the number which they removed in the course of a single day was sometimes very large. One man, a timekeeper at works where 1,000 men besides outworkers were employed, stated that sometimes he had extracted a score or more a day, sometimes less, but that for many years he had not passed a day without having had at least one case. He, however, was not the only man at these works who had a reputation for removing "motes," and probably the total number of such accidents was very large indeed.—The Hospital.

Is It Malaria or Alum?

(Popular Science Monthly.)

Languor, loss of appetite, indigestion and often feverishness are the common symptoms of a physiological condition termed "malaria." All these symptoms may be and frequently are the effect of the use of alum baking powders in food making. There is no question about the poisonous effect of alum upon the system. It obstructs digestion, prostrates the nerves, coagulates and devitalizes the blood. All this has been made clear, thanks to physicians, boards of health, and food commissions. So "highly injurious to the health of the community" does the eminent head of the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. Barker, consider the alum baking powders, that he says "their sale should be prohibited by law."

Under these circumstances it is worth the while of every housewife to employ the very little care that is necessary to keep so dangerous an element from the food of her family.

A pure cream of tartar baking powder, which is the only kind that should be used, ought to cost about forty-five to fifty cents a pound. Therefore if you are paying much less, something is wrong; if you are paying twenty-five cents or less per pound, the powder is certainly made from alum.

Always bear these simple facts in mind when purchasing baking powder.

ASBESTOS SCENERY.

Its Expense Is the Chief Disadvantage About It.

"There are some decided disadvantages about asbestos scenery," said Theatrical Artist Theodore Behr to a New Orleans Times-Democrat man. "The first and foremost is its enormous expense. The cost of asbestos canvas is almost prohibitive, and there is no special reason for believing that it will ever be any cheaper. The mineral fiber of which it is made is not overabundant, and it is hard to mine and difficult to weave. Then, again, the fabric does not afford a good painting surface. It has an indescribable greasy feeling, and soaks up colors like a piece of blotting paper. It is impossible to obtain bold, sweeping effects, and the paint has to be daubed on in a way that calls for unlimited time and patience. No scenic artist likes to work on the stuff. However, the cost is the essential handicap, and if the material was cheaper all large theaters would employ it on account of the reduction it secures in insurance rates. At the same time its general introduction would contribute very little to safety. Modern theaters are invariably provided with non-inflammable drop curtains, and such precautions are taken back of the stage that a fire in the scenery is next to impossible. Nowadays it is the rarest thing in the world for a fire to originate in that quarter during a performance."

The Ten Persecutions of the Church.

The "ten persecutions of the Christian church" were: 1. The persecution under Nero, A. D. 64, when the emperor, having set fire to Rome, threw the odium of the execrable action on the Christians. 2. The general persecution under Dometian, A. D. 95; 40,000 supposed to have suffered martyrdom. 3. In the year 106, under Trajan. 4. Under Marcus Aurelius. 5. Under Severus. An edict, 197, prohibited every subject of the empire, under severe penalties, from embracing the Jewish or Christian faith. 6. Under Emperor Maximinus, A. D. 235. 7. This, the most dreadful persecution, occurred during the short reign of Decius. The imperial edict for persecuting the Christians was published A. D. 249. 8. Under Emperor Aurelian, A. D. 274. 10. The last general persecution of the Christians began in the nineteenth year of the Emperor Diocletian, A. D. 303. Houses, filled with Christians, were set on fire, and droves of them were bound together with ropes and cast into the sea.

Meissonier the Artist.

Among European artists none ever worked more conscientiously than Meissonier, some of whose tiny canvases, with their microscopic perfection of details, were valued at more than $5,000 a square foot. When Meissonier was painting his "Napoleon in 1814," and wished to give a realistic picture of the snow-covered, trampled road over which the French army traveled, he had a small platform made and covered with clay. He kneaded and pounded the clay, wheeled over it a miniature cannon, impressed hoofmarks on it, re-kneaded it, and repeated the process until he was satisfied with the result. Then he sprinkled salt over the rutty, hoof-marked, trampled clay and got the final snow-effect he sought.

COINING THE WORDS.

HOW SLANG EXPRESSIONS BECOME REAL THINGS.

Get Grafted Into English Despite the Scorn and Derision of Scholars—"Cinch," "Come On," "Easy Mark" and "On the Hog" Seeking Recognition.

Within the last fifty years over 60,000 words and phrases have crept into the English language, some of them for but an ephemeral existence, while others which were but a short time ago classed as slang or vulgarisms are today permanent parts of the language. Unless the origin of a slang word is known it is almost impossible to tell how long it has been in use. Many words originate in one part of the country, where they may keep their peculiar significance, but by the time they have traveled a few hundred miles they have an entirely different meaning. The following are a few examples of modern slang: "Cinch" for sinecure, "come-on" for one uninitiated in some game or business, a "good thing" or an "easy mark" for one peculiarly gullible, "up against it" and "on the hog." The phrase "on the hog," which means to be financially embarrassed, originated in Chicago several years ago, when the price of pork fell many points on the produce exchange. Of course many persons who had bought pork when it was high lost considerable money, and it became common to say, "I hear so and so lost money 'on the hog.'" "Con-game" is another expression of western birth. Several years ago there was a well-known card sharper in the west of the name of Connor, but better known by his nickname, "Con." His cleverness at cards became so widely known that any person who was thought to be particularly sharp at card playing was said to be playing a "con" game. The word "bogus," meaning counterfeit or false, though commonly used now, was looked upon at one time as being as inelegant an expression as con game is today, and its origin was somewhat similar. Over half a century ago a man of the name of Borghese did a tremendous business in the way of supplying the great west and portions of the southwest with counterfeit bills and bills of fictitious banks. Westerners fell into the habit of shortening the name to Bogus, and his bills, as well as all others of like character, were universally styled by them as bogus currency. The word "lobster" has come into use lately as a contemptuous adjective. This word acquired the later-day meaning on the race course, when track followers got into the habit of saying that a slow horse ran like a lobster.—New York Sun.

EDUCATING RUSSIAN NOBLES.

Free Schools to Be Established for Rich Children.

The nobility of Russia in each and every province, who form a kind of corporation in the eyes of the government, with a marshal at its head, are to be allowed to establish special boarding-houses or homes for those of their children who attend the middle-class schools, but quite separate from such schools. The government undertakes to pay the full cost of establishing these institutions, which will come under the supreme control of the minister of public instruction, and in which the pupils are to receive board, lodging, clothing, linen, boots, school books, pecuniary assistance and, if necessary, personal help in doing their home lessons after school hours. The government also engages to pay half the yearly cost of supporting them. The preference in accepting boarders as well as gratuitous maintenance will be given to the children whose fathers hold any official post in the corporation of their class or in the zemstvos, or who have formerly held any such post for not less a period than nine years. The nobility are also granted the right of founding scholarships for their boys in the higher and intermediary establishments of education, for which the government likewise provides half the necessary funds. At the same time an annual sum of 186,750 rubles will be paid out of the imperial exchequer for the free education of 416 boys in two of the new military cadet schools. This curious piece of class legislation will give the landed nobility of Russia a far cheaper education for their children than any that is put in the way of the other antiquated social categories into which the Russian population is still divided.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Importance of Vital Statistics.

In a review of Dr. Newsholme's "Elements of Vital Statistics" in Science, Mr. Willcox of the Census office states that vital statistics are probably the best avenue along which to approach the general field of statistics. It is the oldest, most developed, and most systematized branch of the subject. Dr. Newsholme cares little for theory or refinements of analysis unless they have a clear bearing on the results, but he is strong in all such practical discussions as statistical evidence for the utility of vaccination, the causes of infant mortality, or the fallacies to which statistical arguments are exposed. The argumentative parts of his book are sound, temperate, and convincing.

Fixes Teeth Under Fire.

Manila (P. I.) Freedom: Private Emmet J. Craig of the hospital corps is probably the only dentist in the civilized world who enjoys the reputation of doctoring teeth under fire, and the Second division is probably the only organization of the army which can boast the services of a first-class dentist on the firing line. Acting Hospital Steward Fred W. Boshan of the Second division field hospital is exhibiting a handsome gold bridge and a crown in his mouth that was put in on June 16, when San Fernando was attacked from four sides by insurgents and shot was falling in the houses and streets as fast as hailstones in a Kansas storm.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

SOME GOOD STORIES FOR OUR JUNIOR READERS.

How Little Great Grandmother Wrote Letters — A Tramp Cat—How the Neglected Animal Came to Save a Little Girl's Life.

Compensation.

The truest words we ever speak
  Are words of cheer.
Life has its shade, its valleys deep;
But round our feet the shadows creep,
  To prove the sunlight near.
Between the hills those valleys sleep—
  The sun-crowned hills;
And down their sides will those who seek
With hopeful spirit, brave though meek,
  Find gently flowing rills.

For every cloud a silvery light;
  God wills it so.
For every vale a shining height,
A glorious morn for every night,
  And birth for labor's throe.
For snow's white wing a verdant field,
  A gain for loss;
For buried seed a harvest yield,
For pain a strength, a joy revealed,
  A crown for every cross.

Little Great-Grandmother's Letter.

"Oh, dear!" said Clarice, "how dreadful it is to write letters!" Clarice was writing a letter to go across plains and mountains and rivers, to grandma in far-off California. At first the lines had all been straight, and the upright, precise little letters neat and nice. "And now look at 'em!" scoffed Clarice, "all up-hilly and down-daley! I guess grandma'll think they're puffeckly miser'ble! She said she liked to have 'em all toe the mark, as if they were in the g'ography class—oh, dear!"

"You're tired, dear," mamma's sweet voice said, comfortingly. "Put the letter away and come over here. I'll tell you how little great-grandmother wrote letters fifty years ago. What do you suppose she did first?"

"Got some paper 'n' envelopes an' a fine-toothed pen and the ink," said Clarice promptly. She couldn't see how it was going to be very interesting to talk about that. Stories were a good deal more interesting. "She got the paper and the ink, but she didn't get any envelope or postage stamp, and the pen was made out of a goose-quill with the pretty feather on one end. I expect she got great-great-grandfather to sharpen it for her before she began."

"Sharpen a pen—what an idea!" Clarice was getting interested so soon. "Why, it's pencils you sharpen, mamma." Mamma smiled. "Yes, and little great-grandmother quill pens, too. They had to be 'sharpened' carefully, to get them into pen shape, ready to write with. Then came the big sheet of paper. I think little great-grandmother's must have been of a pretty blue color. And of course she made little, neat, straight letters on it." Mamma looked soberly at Clarice. "Yes'm; that toed the mark an' said their g'ography," murmured Clarice, 'same as mine don't."

"Same as yours do, dear, almost always. And little great-grandmother was particular about the blots, too, I expect, just as you are."

"Oh, yes," cried Clarice, brightening. "Of course she didn't want her letter all blotted up. Do you s'pose she had pink blotting paper, mamma? That's the prettiest."

"She didn't have any blotting paper at all!" laughed mamma. Clarice's mouth rounded into a little red circle all ready to say "oh,' just as mamma went on. "She probably borrowed great-great-grandfather's sand-shaker that stood beside the ink bottle on the mantel piece. It was made of lignum-vitae wood and looked a good deal like my salt-shaker, only it widened out more around the top, which was hollowed out like a little basin. I think there's one at grandpa's that I can show you some day. Great-great-grandfather's was full of very fine sand. When little great-grandmother had written her page all over, she sprinkled it carefully with sand that misted down through the tiny holes in the shaker—a little 'sand storm.' Then after a minute or two she lifted both sides of the big sheet and let the sand slide back into the sand box again. That was why the top was hollowed out like a basin." Mamma stopped to thread a needle. "Oh," murmured Clarice, "I think it's very int'resting 'bout the sand shower. Go on, mamma."

"Well, it must have been a pretty long letter that little great-grandmother wrote, because the sheet was so big. And then, you see, the postage was high so long ago and people could only afford to write letters occasionally."

"Why, what an idea!" cried Clarice, in great astonishment. "Yes," mamma went on, "at that time it cost according to the distance the letter was going—not just one stamp or two stamps to go all over the country. And I don't believe little great-grandmother ever sent a letter that didn't cost as much as five cents. That was one queer thing about little great-grandmother's letters. The envelope was another."

"I thought there wasn't any, mamma."

"Why, there wasn't—that was what was queer!" laughed mamma. "But when the letter was all ready to send, it looked very much as if 'twas in a regular envelope. Little great-grandmother first folded the top down and then the bottom up, so that the edges just met in the middle—so." Mamma illustrated with a piece of paper. "Then she folded both sides inward and tucked one into the other. That made a neat little shape like an envelope, you see, all ready to be directed on the outside. Of course she had only written on three sides of the big blue sheet, so the outside page would be blank."

"Oh my, that's another queer thing!" cried Clarice, softly. "But that isn't all. Next came the sealing of the letter. How do you suppose little great-grandmother did that?"

"I s'pose with the tipsy-tip of her tongue. 'I do.'"

"Not at all! She had a much nicer way. She sealed it with a dainty little patch of sealing wax, just where the two ends met. That kept the letter as snug and safe as your letter will be. Perhaps the sealing wax was red or green or blue. And maybe the seal was a perfect square or round, and had a little picture or some words on it. One beautiful little glass seal I know of had 'All's Well' on it. Could anything be prettier than that? Why, that was little great-grandmother's seal itself—my grandmother's. It's upstairs." Mamma stopped, as if she were thinking about her dear old white-capped grandmother. Her face put on a tender look that Clarice liked. "Was that all, mamma?" she asked softly, after a minute. "No—oh, no. Then little great-grandmother directed her letter and took it to the postoffice. That's another queerness, for I expect maybe she had to ride a good many miles, and who knows but that it was up behind great-great-grandfather on old Whitenose's back?"

"Oh, my! Truly?"

"I shouldn't wonder a bit. At the postoffice they marked 'Paid 5,' or whatever sum the postage amounted to, in one corner in big red letters. That was all the postage stamp it had. In the other corner was stamped the big queer looking postmark. Then the letter was ready to go. A horseback rider took it, perhaps, in his mail saddle bags, and then a mail coach carried it the rest of the way. It took a long time to get there. And that's the end of the story, with a period." Clarice sat a moment or two, wondering over little great-grandmother's queer letter. Then she went back to her own. "I want to!" she cried. "I've got so much to tell grandma 'bout now! I needn't put in any more weather or anything. I know for certain grandma'll be int'rested in this. And, O mamma, can't I fold it an' seal it like little great-grandmother's, just this once?" Mamma laughed, but when the letter was finished it was carefully folded as nearly as possible like little great-grandmother's letter, and sealed with her very own tiny glass seal that said "All's Well." But there was a postage stamp in one corner. Mamma said there must be.

ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL.

A Tramp Cat.

A few months ago a strange cat strolled into the house of a Kentucky farmer and sat blinking at the kitchen fire with an air of great assurance, as if to say: "I've concluded to come and live with you." But the farmer did not take kindly to the newcomer; he tried several times to throw the cat out of the house; but pussy scratched him so viciously that he was glad to leave her in quiet possession. The cat immediately became very fond of Lizzie, the 5-year-old daughter of the farmer, and followed her everywhere she went. One day Lizzie went into the garden to play among the flowers, and the cat took up her position about six feet away. After awhile the little girl rose to depart, when, to her surprise and dismay, she saw an ugly, poisonous snake, about three feet long, behind her, coiled up and ready to strike. But the cat had seen the reptile, too, and with one bound she pounced upon him and bit him on the neck. Then ensued a long and desperate fight, in which the cat was getting the best of it, when the screams of the little girl attracted the farmer's wife to the scene of the catastrophe, and his snakeship was speedily dispatched with a garden tool. The farmer now says he is glad the "tramp cat" stayed; and ever since her brave encounter with the snake pussy gets an extra saucer of milk from the hand of her little friend Lizzie. On such occasions she blinks and looks at the farmer in a way which shows she fully realizes what a valuable cat she is.

Wonderful Trees.

The bread-fruit tree of Ceylon is very remarkable. Its fruit is baked and eaten as we eat bread, and is equally good and nutritious. In Barbutu, South America, is a tree which, by piercing the trunk, produces milk, with which the inhabitants feed their children. In the interior of Africa is a tree which produces excellent butter. It resembles oak, but it bears fruit, from which the butter is prepared. Park, the great traveler, declared that the butter surpassed any made in England from cow's milk. At Table bay, near the Cape of Good Hope, is a small tree, the berries of which make excellent candles. It is also found in the Azores. The vegetable tallow tree also grows in Sumatra, in Algeria and in China. In the Island of Chusan large quantities of oil and tallow are extracted from its fruit, which is gathered in November or December, when the tree has lost all its leaves. The bark of a tree in China produces a beautiful soap. Trees of the sapigdus or soapberry order also grow in the north of Africa.

Wonderful Moving Mountain.

To those of us who have come to look upon mountains as solid and immovable, the idea of a moving mountain is decidedly novel. There is one on the Columbia river. It is nearly 2,000 feet in height and stretching along the stream for six or eight miles. When the white settlers first came into the country the Indians told them that this mountain was traveling; that some day it would move across the Columbia and form a lake which would reach from the Cascades to the Dalles. What the Indians said has been found to be true in some respects. The mountain is in motion. Its movement is forward and downward. The railroad builders who constructed their lines along the base found the track continually forced out of place. In some places the movement has amounted to eight and ten feet in a few years. Geologists say this is because the mountain rests on sandstone, which is steadily being washed away by the current of the big river.

A Child's Comment.

A little 4-year-old miss was overheard talking to her favorite doll that had accidentally lost an arm, thereby exposing the sawdust. "Oh, you dear, good, obedient dolly; I know I told you to chew your food fine, but I had no idea you would chew it as fine as that."

A Dreadful Thought.

One day 4-year-old Harry saw four funerals pass by the house, and in a little while he began to cry. "Oh, why don't I die?" he wailed. "Heaven will soon be full and there won't be any room for me."

Arithmetic Defined.

In a Boston school the pupils were asked to define arithmetic. One boy gave the following: "Arithmetic is the science of numbers and the art of complication."

WAS SWALLOWED BY A BOA.

A Soldier's Terrible Experience While in the Philippine Jungle.

This story is told by a mustered-out volunteer recently returned from the Philippines:

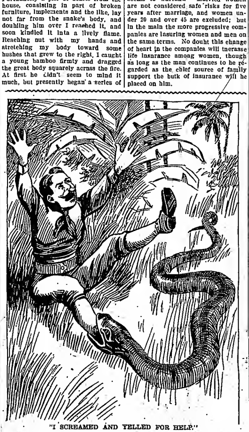
"Yes, I saw some hard fighting, but the only time I was really scared was by a snake. They say that those huge boas that the natives keep in their houses to catch rats are harmless. I know better. I had been with my company under fire all day, and as night came on I lost my way in the swamp and was separated from my command completely. Prostrated with the heat, often unconscious for a time, I had lost my gun and everything, and lay down to wait for morning near a deserted shack, where some native had once had a home, and was soon fast asleep. I had lost one shoe in the swamp, and my bare foot had been severely cut and scratched in my race for life, and as I went to sleep it pained me so as to affect my dreams. I dreamed that I was still in the swamp, and that my left foot and leg were so heavy that I was being slowly pulled down into the mud by them and that the swamp was boiling hot. I awakened to find the pain in my foot intolerable, though dulled by the feeling we experience when we say a limb is asleep. I felt that I could not move my leg. I sat up and looked at it, and put my hand under my knee and gave it a pull. In the dim light my leg seemed to extend off into the jungle indefinitely. Then I felt a twinge of pain and a sense of something gripping me about the shin.

"Wide awake and excited now, I saw that I was being swallowed by a huge boa. My swollen, bleeding foot had attracted him, and he had already swallowed it and was swallowing my leg inch by inch, by those slow automatic pulsations with which these horrible reptiles get themselves outside their prey.

"I ran my hand over the creature's head and eyes, I felt his great lower jaw beneath my calf, I struck the head with my fist, I screamed and yelled for help, I struggled to a vertical position, bending the snake's body upward, and even fell over him, but all had no effect. The swallowing went on. Every minute I would feel a prickling sensation an inch higher up on my leg, and a sense of suction, and was aware that I was an inch deeper down in the monster's anatomy.

"Then I lay quiet a moment, thinking for my life. Each gulp of the snake sent a sickening chill over my body, but my head was clear. I thought with some satisfaction that the boa couldn't swallow but one leg, since he had not started upon both. Yet I knew he would never willingly disgorge the part of me he already possessed, and unless I was found early in the morning, my chance of life was small. I had no knife or gun, but I was able to reach a good bamboo club and I began to beat the great serpent on the body and over the head, too, as hard as I could. But my blows hurt my leg inside the snake more than they seemed to hurt him.

"At any rate, the swallowing went on, and the snake's nose had reached my knee-cap. I had nothing in my pockets but my pipe and tobacco and match box. Should I smoke and wait the turn of events? No, I would make a fire and see if I could roast his snakeship while he was swallowing me. Fortunately a pile of debris from the house, consisting in part of broken furniture, implements and the like, lay not far from the snake's body, and doubling him over I reached it, and soon kindled it into a lively flame. Reaching out with my hands and stretching my body toward some bushes that grew to the right, I caught a young bamboo firmly and dragged the great body squarely across the fire. At first he didn't seem to mind it much, but presently began a series of most vigorous and powerful lashings with that lithe, tremendous body and tail, often nearly pulling me from my hold on the tree, and twisting my leg till it seemed he would slowly but surely wrench it from its socket.



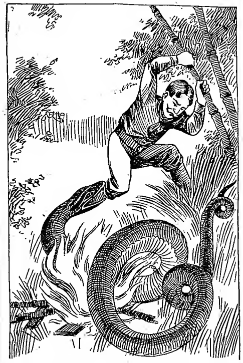
"I SCREAMED AND YELLED FOR HELP."

"And yet those automatic waves of swallowing were not checked. I felt the creature's head inclose my knee and, indeed, I am sure the gulps by which I was being taken in were quickened as the monster's blood was warmed up in the flame.

"I could not readily see what was going on in the fire, but I was sure it was burning hotly because I soon felt the heat on my toes inside the snake's skin. This sensation increased and I soon realized that if I was roasting the snake my foot was being boiled at the same time.

"It was a terrific and protracted struggle. Sometimes my feet and legs were dragged around sidewise till the snake's body was out of the fire; sometimes I was pulled backward till my free foot was kicking about in the firebrands. But the boa's evolutions were aimless, the mere result of pain, while my efforts were always intelligently directed toward the keeping of his body across the fire. Occasionally I could free one hand and find a piece of wood that I could throw on the fire, and after awhile, perhaps fifteen minutes, though it seemed as many hours, I was sure that the snake's lashings and coilings were weaker, though even yet the mouth was advancing up my leg. But I now let go my tree, rolled and crept about and secured more fuel, and soon had the satisfaction of seeing that my enemy was burned into a crisp in the middle, though the tail seemed still alive, as well as the head. My foot, I was sure, would soon drop off at the ankle if I could judge how well it was roasted by the pain I suffered.

"At last I sat up, and with a stick beat the snake apart just below my foot, and then stood up with my left leg inclosed in such a snakeskin legging as never a soldier wore before. But whether you will believe me or not, that piece of a serpent continued to climb my thigh for an hour after that. At daylight, as I struggled through the jungle with that dreadful, heavy legging still on me, I met a native woman, who, pulling a knife from her belt, ripped the thing from the mouth near my hip down to my heel, and so freed me. I was delirious for four weeks after I got into camp, and my raving about snakes was considered all a fever dream, as some still regard this whole true story."



ROASTING THE BOA IN HALVES.

MAY INSURE LIVES OF WOMEN.

Privilege Was Long Denied Them, but They Are Now Good Risks.

One of the newest privileges that has accrued to woman is the right to have her life insured on even terms with man. We all think we know, without asking for statistics, that woman's stay in this world is as enduring as man's. We know there are some risks—such as child-bearing—to which she is exposed and from which man is exempt, but we know her habits, on the average, are rather better than man's, and that her life is somewhat less exposed. Yet for some reason the life insurance companies have looked askance and preferred not to risk their money on her prospects of living, unless they got larger premiums than men pay. At last, it seems, they are coming to a better mind on the subject. Some of the strongest have lately determined to insure women at the same rates as men, though with certain limitations which the accident of sex seems to warrant. Married women are not considered safe risks for five years after marriage, and women under 20 and over 45 are excluded; but in the main the more progressive companies are insuring women and men on the same terms. No doubt this change of heart in the companies will increase life insurance among women, though as long as the man continues to be regarded as the chief source of family support the bulk of insurance will be placed on him.

Automobile Prices.

From Harper's Weekly: There was a time when bicycles cost $150 each. Then every manufacturer whose plant was divertible to the manufacture of bicycles made bicycles. Now, after six or seven years of very active bicycle-building, and one can buy a first-rate bicycle anywhere for $40, and superior buyers can probably supply themselves for about half that sum. What automobiles cost at present is best known to persons affluent enough to puchase and play with these machines, but, reasoning by analogy, they will soon cost very much less, for every factory that can seems to be making them. Carriage factories and bicycle factories especially, all over the country, are taking orders for them. This year they are the toys of the well-to-do. By another season they will be so spread abroad that their value as playthings may have lessened; but that is of small consequence compared with the immense field that seems to be opening for them as vehicles for cheap and rapid transportation. That they will ever be brought "within the means of all" is not to be expected, but there seems to be a good prospect that they will soon be brought within the means of most persons who can afford at present to keep horses.

DISHEARTENED CATTLE KINGS.

They Started Out to Make a Fortune, but Failed.

"I am reminded of the fortune I failed to make in the cattle business," said a man to a Pittsburg News reporter. "My brother and I left Pittsburg with $2,000 a good many years ago to buy a ranch and to become cattle kings. We had been told ranches were to be had for a song out there. When we got to Kansas they said the Cherokees were on the warpath, and that if we went to Texas they would take our scalps. So we took up school lands there with two brothers named Pratt from Boston. We believed we were getting along all right until the fever and ague got us. My brother and I got what they called congested chills. We had two each and we were informed that the third was always fatal. So we began to look east. The Pratts had escaped sickness and we proposed to sell out to them. We sold for as much money as they had—$200 or so. we saw a big light on the prairies, and the next day we learned that fire had cleaned the Pratts out of everything they had. We counted ourselves lucky to get out with $200 until we got to Chicago. There we met a bunko man who took all we had left, and we were the most disheartened cattle kings you ever saw when we reached Pittsburg."

Learning by Heart.

We rather believe in learning by heart, holding that we know nothing in after life so perfectly as we know the multiplication table; but we are certain that the power of learning by heart differs as greatly as the range of sight, and that to require the same amount of memory from each individual in a class of twenty is to harass ten of them uselessly, and expose five to a kind of torture. The slow ones can learn if they give more time and trouble to it. That is what is always said, and it is simply not true. Memory is perhaps the only power of the mind which is essentially physical, as physical as eyesight, and there are a great many boys, often boys with excellent powers, who simply cannot, so to speak, develop the photographic plate. They may acquire the power afterwards, as actors, for example, often do; but they cannot do it as boys, and they not only suffer miserably but they lost much of the total advantage of their education. They hate their work because one bit by bit harasses them so much. The memory can be cultivated, and ought to be. Certainly, and the way not to cultivate it is to over-tax it when it is obviously feeble. The writer is speaking in this instance of what he personally knows, for he has seen lads made seriously ill by the effort to learn Greek choruses which he himself could learn as quickly as English doggerel, and say off in an impressive manner without understanding half the words in them.—The Spectator.

INTENSITY OF TASTE.

It Is Something That Cooks Try to Stimulate.

That the intensity of one sense is increased by the action of other senses is a fact which is well illustrated by the sense of taste, says the New York Herald. A cold coin feels heavier than one that has been slightly warmed by being carried in the pocket, and what is true here of touch is just as true of taste. Warm vinegar, warm sugar, warm solutions of salt taste less sour, sweet or salty than when cold. If you put a slight solution of salt or quinine into a sugar solution of a certain sweetness the sweetness will seem much greater. Cooks and confectioners are well aware of this fact, for they always add to sweet confections some bitter substance, just as the perfumers put into perfumes of all kinds at least a little musk. The cook tries to "tift" or "fill" the taste, as they say, just as the perfumer tries to do with the sense of smell, and as in acoustics the bass drum or bass viol forms a kind of background for the tone of coloring. On the other hand, if a mixture is made too sweet, without any contrasting elements, the quality of sweetness is lost, something like Milton's "darkness from excess of light." More than one man has been struck blind by a flash of lightning, and in the same way the sense of taste may be obscured by excess of sweetness. The effect of cold in reducing the intensity of sweetness is well known to any one who has manufactured ice cream at home. If you don't make the cream a little too sweet before freezing it will not be sweet enough after the freezing process.

Interesting Arctic Relics.

An interesting relic of one of the Franklin search relief expeditions, which was sold in London recently, is a bootjack which was used by Rear Admiral Sir James Ross, who sailed in the Enterprise in 1848, but returned in the following year without success. There are many such relics of the Ross and other expeditions to be seen in the museum of the Royal United Service Institution in Whitehall, including fragmentary portions of a velvet-edged pocket and a leather towel—the first real traces of the missing expedition—a biscuit from Sir James Ross' expedition (exposed to the arctic regions for twelve years), pieces of a canvas bottle, bradawl, gimlet and other tools, the eye-rim of a telescope, a glass from a dressing case, a fusee box and other articles.

Big Indian Canoe.

The second largest Indian canoe in British Columbia, if not on the Pacific coast, is now hauled out on the tideflat fill at Seattle, Wash. It is a stunner, considering it is made entirely out of a big cedar tree. The big canoe, which holds 100 people, is but one out of a score of large canoes that belong to the Fort Rupert and West Coast Indians of Vancouver island. Fort Rupert is on the northern end of Vancouver island and the Indians now at Seattle were eighteen days on the voyage. With a good fair wind they can go 100 miles a day. The big canoe is a new one, made this summer. It is about fifty-five feet long and seven to eight feet across.

Von Moltke's Method.

Apropos of the current talk of the advisability of suppressing the special correspondent in wartime, a story may be quoted from the Spectator: During the Franco-Prussian war a well-known English correspondent was sent to the front by his paper, and on one occasion Von Moltke sent for him and said: "Mr. ——, on such and such a day the German army will perform such and such a movement. If that appears in the —— (naming the paper), you will be shot." Of course the news did not appear!

SAW POSTAGE STAMP WALK.

Saloon Customer Dropped It on Floor and It Began to Climb the Bar.

He had been out all night, and he looked it all over. Wandering into a saloon near the Brooklyn borough hall he leaned unsteadily against the bar and fumbled in one of his pockets. "Shay, barkeep," he said, thickly, "gimme zin fiz n' er postash stam'," fishing a badly crumpled letter from his pocket. The bartender mixed the drink, got a postage stamp from a drawer and placed both before the inebriated one. The latter, after several futile efforts, picked up the sticky stamp, moistened it with his tongue, and then awkwardly dropped it to the floor. Stooping to recover it, he suddenly straightened up, passed his hand quickly over his eyes and then stared at the floor with a look of mingled amazement and horror on his features. "Now I've got 'em, barkeep; got 'em again!" he yelled, moving toward the door. The postage stamp, to all appearances, was staggering about the floor. Finally it proceeded to climb up the side of the bar. The barkeeper took a look and he, too, was mystified. But a light suddenly dawned upon him and he brought the bar mallet down upon the apparently animated postage stamp with a laugh that jarred the overwrought nerves of the other man. The moistened postage stamp in falling, it seems, stuck on the back of a husky young cockroach foraging for free lunch on the barroom floor. The roach with the stamp sticking to his back, and with his body hidden from sight under it, had staggered about and attempted to climb up on the bar with his burden. When the barkeeper explained things, the other man hastily changed his order to seltzer and lemon. —New York Times

ORDERING A TROUSSEAU.

Beautifully Dressed Dolls Sent to the Prospective Bride.

A vast amount of very beautiful and exquisitely skilled work only plays a secondary and passing part in the economy of trade, says the New York Commercial Advertiser. The big dressmakers' models are so exclusive and precious that they are guarded from outsiders as one would guard jewels or gold from a thief. Pattern dresses cost enormous prices, and the gown builders use them bit by bit as ideas for "original" costumes. To their far-western or southern customers they will send exquisitely dressed dolls to demonstrate the specially designed costumes they think will suit them. Not long ago as many as two dozen dolls were sent to California to a young woman whose trousseau was to be made in New York. When the dolls were returned their frocks were removed and destroyed; yet the care taken to make these miniature frocks perfect in every detail of cut, fit and trimming was greater in a way than that the real costumes will require. Jewelers send out designs or make them up to exhibit to a customer, in wax, using sometimes paste stones and sometimes real ones. The wax is melted flat and smooth into a box, and then the jewels are stuck into it. Black wax throws up diamonds to perfection and the idea of the pattern, a tiara, ring or aigrette is to take is easily realized when seen in this form.

Pigg, Hogg, and Bacon Meet.

To the casual observer the other day the register of the Savoy hotel looked more like an inventory book of a packing house than a hotel register. Early in the morning a stranger entered the hotel and signed: "J. R. Pigg, Windsor, Mo." A few minutes later two men stepped up and signed just below Mr. Pigg's signature: "C. B. Hogg, Canton, Ohio," and "Brown Bacon, Chicago." The three gentlemen who attached such names in juxtaposition were not acquainted with each other, but when the hotel clerk saw the strange signatures, the three gentlemen whose names attracted so much attention were eagerly sought out by the curious, and it was but a short time before Messrs. Pigg, Hogg and Bacon were good friends. Mr. Pigg said that he had nothing to do with any packing house, as he was a government mail contractor of Windsor, Mo. Mr. Hogg said that he and Mr. Bacon were traveling men.—Kansas City Journal.

Bailey's Brother a Coal Miner.

Washington (Ind.) Cor. Chicago Inter Ocean: Robert H. Bailey, a coal miner of this county, is a brother of James A. Bailey, the noted circus man. Robert works under ground nine months in the year, draws a meager salary, and refuses to consider overtures from his Croesus brother. There was a time in the lives of the brothers when their positions might have been reversed. When they were young men their uncle, who was in the show business, offered to give one of them a chance to learn the trade. James took it, Robert declining, as he wished to take a trip to England, became an apt pupil, bought out his uncle, married in the show business, and is now the greatest circus manager in the world. His brother is picking out coal at about $2 a day. Robert traveled with the circus several years, but left it. A year ago Christmas James sent him a check for $1,000, which he returned.

Two Rags Better.

From the Washington Post: There's a small boy uptown who judges things as he sees them. The square adjoining that on which he lives was roped off a couple of weeks ago on account of the presence of diphtheria among some children in a house on that square. The boy regarded the ropes and the white rags fluttering therefrom with added interest, because one of the boys down with the disease was a schoolmate of his. One morning last week the youngster noticed that two of the white rags out of the half-dozen that had been hanging from the rope nearest his house the night before were missing. They had probably fallen off or been mischievously cut off by some lad with a pocketknife. The little chap hustled into the house. "Say, maw," he said, all out of breath, "Tommy Tadpole's two rags better!"

Couldn't Keep Him Out.

"The brightest reporter I ever knew," said a newspaper man, "was Billy Gaylor, who died at Hot Springs in 1895. He was a most persistent fellow after an item, and that reminds me of a little story, about the last incident of his career. He had been assigned by a certain Chicago daily to interview an eminent bishop about a schism in the church. The bishop didn't want to talk and wouldn't see him, but Gaylor bribed a servant to let him into the hall and waylaid the dignitary as he was coming through. He was ordered out for his pains, but next day he penetrated the house again on some pretext or other and was again fired.

"He repeated the exploit three or four times with similar results, and at last the bishop coming home late at night, found Billy sitting in his study reading the Bible. Nobody could explain how he got in, but the prelate wilted and told him what he wanted to know on condition that he would go away and stay away.

"Shortly after poor Gaylor got galloping consumption and died, and, happening to meet the bishop at a church conference, I told him that the young man who had once so molested him would never do it again.

"'Let us hope that he is in heaven,' said a clergyman standing by.

"The bishop's eyes twinkled. He loved a joke. 'No doubt he is,' he replied gently. 'I don't think they could keep him out.'"—Exchange.

Occupations Affect Faces.

"A man's occupation or condition has more to do with making his face than most people think," observed a gentleman who is somewhat a judge of character. "Intellectual pursuits, like the studies of the scholarly profession, when coupled with temperate and good moral habits of life brighten the face and give the person a refined and superior look. Magnanimity of nature or the love of study and art will make a bright, glad face, but contrary to this a man may have a face that does not please anybody because of a love of self to the exclusion of others, notwithstanding his learning and worldly shrewdness. Soldiers get a hard, severe look; reporters look inquisitive; mathematicians look studious; judges look grave, even when off the bench; the man who has had domestic trouble looks all broken up

"An example of the ludicrous side of this subject is to see a third class lawyer stalking around a police court looking as wise as an owl. The business makes the face, I say. There's the merchant's face, the ministerial face, the lawyer's face, the doctor's face, the hoodlum's face, all so distinct each from the other and singly that I seldom fail to recognize those callings shining through the faces. And what city bred boy cannot recognize a genuine farmer the moment he sees him on the street?"—Washington Star.

How to Kill Them.

Although every housekeeper may not be a member of a band of mercy or humane society, she can help on the good work if she will practice some of the society's rules. For example, let her bear in mind that crabs to be properly killed should before boiling be thrust through the mouth and body with a sharp steel at one blow.

When a lobster is required, insert a narrow bladed knife into the third joint of the tail, severing the spinal cord. This will cause instant death and is much less cruel than to put it into the water alive, especially if it is not boiling, as the lobster then suffers a slow, lingering death.

Terrapin also should be mercifully killed before being cooked.

The eel tribe is said to be a terrible sufferer from man's inhumanity to fish. So difficult is it apparently to kill eels that people have even ceased to try to kill them at all. If their heads were cut off before they were otherwise handled, they would at once be out of misery.—Buffalo Express.

Heat of the Earth.

It is well known that a great deal of effort has been put forth in all parts of the world where mining is carried on to a great depth, to determine as a satisfactory average the increase of the earth's temperature with depth. A few years ago it was commonly assumed to be 1 degree for each 90 feet in depth, but more recently deeper workings under other conditions have led to the belief that it is something over 200 feet for each degree of increased temperature. It is admitted, however, that the depth to which mining has thus far been carried is so shallow as compared with the great distance to the center of the earth that it is really not known what the average increase of temperature with depth is. Observations made at the various places have been where the surrounding conditions were so different that the tests were not satisfactory, as, for example, those made in the Lake Superior and Nevada regions.

An Unjust Discrimination.

"This idea of making you take out a license for a dog is all wrong," said the dog owner. "It is unjust discrimination."

"Oh, I don't know!" answered the man who had just come from the county clerk's office. "In most places you have to take out a license for a wife too."

"But you don't have to renew it every year," returned the dog owner in an aggrieved tone.—Chicago Post.

A FIENDISH WEAPON.

It Would Kill and Leave No Mark to Tell the Tale.

"I have handled a good many outlandish weapons," said a New Orleans curio dealer, "but here is a little instrument that for pure diabolism beats anything I ever saw in my life. I bought it the other day from a Norwegian sailor, who tells me it was given to him by a Jap at Yokohama—a story that you may take for what it is worth."

As he spoke he opened a show case and took out what seemed to be an ordinary Chinese marking brush of rather large size. The handle was some ten inches long and the diameter of a lead pencil. By giving it a sharp twist it separated about a hand's breadth from the end, after the manner of a sword cane, and attached to the smaller piece was a slender glass rod with a needle point. The rod was not much bigger than a knitting needle, and with the handle it had the effect of a very small and delicate stiletto.

"I should think that would break if it were used to stab with," remarked a visitor after examining the contrivance.

"Certainly it would," replied the dealer, "and that is where the fiendishness of the thing comes in. Look closely at the glass rod and you will see a tiny groove filed around it about two inches from the hilt. Suppose that it was driven into the body of a man, it would be certain to break at the groove and would leave at least three inches of glass buried in his vitals. The puncture would be so small that it would close when the stump was drawn out, and I doubt exceedingly whether a single drop of blood would follow. In other words, the victim could receive his deathblow without knowing exactly what had happened to him. He would feel a shock and a pang, but find no wound, and meanwhile the assassin would stick his brush together and go about his business.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

HOW TO STOP WORRYING.

There Is a Sure Way If You Will Only Make Yourself Think So.

"The usual way people set about stopping worry is a wrong one," writes Mary Boardman Page in The Ladies' Home Journal. "That is why it is so unsuccessful. If a doctor tells a patient he must stop worrying, the patient is likely to say impatiently: 'Oh, doctor, don't I wish that I could! But I can't. If I could have stopped worrying a year ago, I would not be ill now!' All of which is probably perfectly true. And the doctor does not always know how to help him, because both doctor and patient have an idea that it is possible to repress worry through an effort of the will. This is a mistake. It is not possible to repress worry. You have got to replace it with something else.

"Let me illustrate this by a figure. Suppose you were to go into a completely dark room, wishing it to be light. How would you set about the work? Would you try to scoop the darkness up in buckets and carry it out at the door? Not at all! You would just open the windows and shutters and let in the blessed sunlight. You would replace the darkness with light. So it is with worry. The only possible way to get rid of it is to replace the worry attitude of mind with the non-worry attitude. And this can always be done when the person is sincere and patient in his desire to bring it about. All he has to do is to be passive and let nature have her own perfect way with him."

Fatal Loquacity.

In a New England village rich in quaint and amusing characters John Bates was renowned for his ability to hold his tongue. The gift approached genius, but John was keenly alive to what he considered its incompleteness, although of course he said nothing about it.

He made mattresses for a living, and one day a native of the village came into his shop and said:

"John, what's the best kind of a mattress?"

"Husks," said John and said no more.

Twenty years later, so the tradition runs, the same man came again to the shop and asked what, in Bates' opinion, was the best kind of a mattress.

"Straw," said John.

"Straw? You told me husks was the best!"

John gave a despairing sigh. "I've always ruined myself by talkin," said he.—Youth's Companion.

May a Woman Tell Her Love?

It is true it is unconventional for a woman to tell a man that she loves him unless the man has persuaded her to make such confession. But is there any good reason why a woman should not take the initiative? Is she any less a woman for doing so? A shy and timid man may not know how to tell a woman that he loves her. Should the woman, who is of firmer faith and stronger mind, stand halting and waiting for a confession that may never come? Why should she suffer in silence? By so doing may she not lose the man who loves her and also the happiness of a lifetime as well?—New York World.

"If I were you, I wouldn't lean against that post. You might get hurt."

The speaker was a policeman, and the person to whom his words were addressed was a young fellow who stood under an iron awning with one hand resting on an iron post which helped to support the awning. The young man jerked his hand away quickly.

"What's the matter with the post?" he asked. "It looks all right."

"Yes, it does," responded the policeman, "and it may be all right. But it's iron, and its surface is wet from the rain that is falling. There are a whole lot of telephone and telegraph wires in the vicinity. One of them may be mixed up with an electric light wire somewhere and may also be rubbing up against some part of this awning. Understand? If it should be, the combination would be one that, with the water that is running down the post as a conductor, would be apt to put you out of existence. I've seen one man killed in just that way, and I really don't want to see another. That's all. Goodby."

Then the policeman walked off down the street, leaving the young fellow staring first at the post and then at the wires overhead. But as long as the saunterer remained under the awning he kept his hands away from the wet iron.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Not Wanting a Job.

When the late W. E. Gladstone was chancellor of the exchequer, one day he was in the shipping department of the government office getting some information and figures for the coming budget. While thus engaged a Sunderland shipowner called to see Mr. Lindsey, the then member for Sunderland.

While waiting for Mr. Lindsey to come in the shipowner got his eye on Mr. Gladstone and was watching him closely. After doing so a little while he thus addressed him:

"Thou seemst a good writer and clever at figures. I'll give thee £100 a year, and that's an offer thou'lt not get every day!"

Mr. Gladstone thanked him and said he would see Mr. Lindsey.

Just then Mr. Lindsey entered. Then Mr. Gladstone told Mr. Lindsey of the offer his friend had made him.

Mr. Lindsey said it was a very good offer, but he did not know if Mr. Gladstone could be spared. Anyway he had better introduce them. Turning to his friend, the shipowner, he said: "Allow me to introduce you to W. E. Gladstone, chancellor of the exchequer—Mr. So-and-so, Sunderland." The amazement of the shipowner cannot be described. The Grand Old Man laughed immoderately.—London Answers.

Willing to Compromise.

About the middle of the civil war a freshly appointed colonel, with a newly enlisted regiment, joined the Union forces in the far south. One bright October morning word was received that a small detachment of General Wheeler's cavalrymen was on the other side of the hill, and a force started out in pursuit. The next day the Confederates were reported miles distant in the opposite direction. The third day the new colonel and a veteran brigadier started out for a pleasure ride. A mile from camp they rode into the fugitive Confederates, who had been circling the camp for a week. It was a narrow escape, but they got away unharmed.

After it was over the general said to the colonel, "Well, what do you think of war now?"

"Is Wheeler in this neighborhood much of the time?" replied the colonel evasively.

"All the time. He is here, there and everywhere. What do you think of the prospect?"

"Well," answered the colonel reflectively, "I wonder whether there isn't some way this infernal thing can be compromised!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Yankee Joker Abroad.

A story on the fraudulent conferring of degrees is told in the London Post, which, while it may not be strictly accurate, is not without interest. It seems that a chimney sweep took proceedings against an Edinburgh man for debt, and in the course of his evidence the sweep mentioned that his name was "Jamie Gregory, LL. D." The following colloquy ensued between the witness and the sheriff:

"What, doctor of laws or letters? And where on earth did you get that distinction?"

"It was a fellow fro' an American university, an I sweepit his chimney three times. 'I canna pay ye cash, Jamie Gregory,' he says, 'but I'll make ye an LL. D., and we'll ca' it quets.' An he did."

Another Mystery.

"The study of the occult sciences interests me very much," remarked the new boarder. "I love to explore the dark depths of the mysterious, to delve into the regions of the unknown, to fathom the unfathomable, as it were, and to"—

"May I help you to some of the hash, professor?" interrupted the landlady.

And the good woman never knew why the other boarders smiled audibly.—Chicago News.

The Army and Navy.

Have covered themselves with glory during the war. The Army and Navy vest pocket memorandum book published by the Northern Pacific is a compact digest of information relative to the navies and armies of Spain and the United States at the beginning of the war. Where's Your Dead Spot?

Most people have doubted their eyes when at some conjuring performance they have seen a man run needles and pins through both cheeks, evincing no pain as he does so. In reality every person has hundreds of senseless specks of skin all over his body through which he could run pins, or even cut them out, without feeling any pain. If some one else were to do so when he was blindfolded, he would not be even aware of the fact. Physicians call them dead spots, and the reason that one man can sew his cheeks up while another could not is simply because the former happens to have many hundreds of these spots in one place.

These dead spots are caused by the minute nerves which convey every sensation to the brain being either absent in these particular places or dead and senseless. But should any one of our readers allow himself to be blindfolded, and then get one of his friends to prod him very gently with a clean needle, say all on one arm, out of every hundred pricks he will feel only about 60 or 70 at the most.

In the other cases the needle will have touched dead spots.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

General Grant's Suggestion.

An official who quite generally knows what he is talking about was dilating the other afternoon upon the funny hopelessness for all reasonable purposes of many of the little creeks and rivers for the "improvement" of which congress is asked to appropriate money under the river and harbor bill.

"When Grant was president," said this official, "he used to alternately chuckle and fulminate against the expenditure of good government coin for the 'improvement' of measly little streams that he himself knew could never be made fit for any human purpose. There was a Virginian who, failing to get congress to stick in an appropriation for the dredging of a little stream down in his section, finally importuned Grant in the matter.

"'Let's see,' said Grant musingly. 'I believe I crossed that stream in 1864, wasn't it?'

"The Virginian, who remembered Grant's crossing of the stream, replied affirmatively.

"'Look here,' said Grant after a pause, his face lighting up suddenly, 'why don't you macadamize it?'"—Washington Post.

Told of Daniel Boone.

"Whar yer goin?"

"Goin west, stranger."

"When yer goin?"

"Goin now, stranger."

"Ain't got no boat. How yer goin ter git ercross?"

"Boat! Thank er crick like this hero's goin ter stop me? Goin ter ride cross, stranger."

He meant what he said, for the speaker was Daniel Boone, and he sat his horse, gun in hand, on the bluffs where the custom house now stands and gazed across that "crick," the mighty Mississippi, toward the west "whar he waz goin."

This was further back than the memory of the oldest inhabitant of Memphis extends, but tradition says that it took ten men to hold Daniel to keep him from wading his horse across the Mississippi.—Memphis Scimitar.

A Bad Symptom.

"Has George ever hinted that he had thought of you as a possible wife?" asked the anxious mother.

"No," replied the girl, a faraway look in her eyes, "and I'm afraid he never will."

"Why," said the mother. "I thought"—

"It doesn't matter what you thought, mamma, dear," interrupted the daughter. "Only last night he complained of feeling drowsy, and it wasn't 9 o'clock."

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.
Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

Trapping Wolves.

As every farmer has more or less sheep and consequently the wolves being very thick in this county, the following from the Farm, Stock and Home will be valuable information.

An old hunter says that trapping is the most trustworthy way to kill wolves But the remarkable sagacity of the animal makes even trapping a tax on the shrewdness and ingenuity of the trapper. The first thing necessary is to kill the odor of the iron by smoking the traps with cedar, rubbing them with beeswax, or dipping them in blood.

First, tie to a wagon a large piece of fresh meat and drag it over the country where the traps are to be set. Wolves like to run in cow trails, so where a number of trails cross is a good place to set traps. Some hunters put traps where wolves can walk into them while others lure the wolves by baits. Traps should not be set in deeply worn parts of the path, as wolves trail on the higher parts. The necessary equipment for setting traps is, shovels, a couple of large blankets or sheets, a bucket of fresh blood, two or three rabbits, a beef liver, a pound of cotton wool and the paw of a wolf or coyote. As soon as the drag has passed over the chosen spot the trapper must dip his boots and implements in the blood, then spread the blankets on the ground and proceed to put on it the sod, which is to be carefully removed, and afterward the loose earth as it is being dug out of the holes that are to hide the logs to which the traps are fastened. When the holes are ready bury the logs and chains with great care, replacing the sod and leaving no loose soil visible and no trace whatever of any disturbance of the earth. Then in the trail dig the shallow holes that are to receive the traps, and be sure that they are just deep enough to be level with the trail, when there is a quarter of an inch of dirt put over the pan. As soon as each trap is set in place, lift the loose jaw until it is perpendicular, and insert under the pan a piece of cotton wool large enough to prevent any dust or sand falling beneath it, as this would entirely hinder the springing of the trap. In handling the trap and earth that covers it wear a pair of gloves dipped in blood. When all the traps are properly concealed and the surplus earth on the blanket has been carried 20 or 30 yards away, take one of the rabbits and use it as a brush to remove all traces of feet or tools. Then scatter pieces of meat or rabbit over the traps. It is a good plan also to use the foot of a wolf or coyote to make a series of tracks over the traps, and finally when all this is done, to dip the tail of a beef in the blood and sprinkle the place. A setting of traps every two miles is considered enough but thicker the better.

The dust over the pan should be a little more even than elsewhere, as wolves like to tread on a smooth place. A piece of white cotton or a tuft of white feathers properly placed often adds a good finish to the setting as a wolf, attracted by the general scent of the blood, will at once see and minutely examine the white object. Dark, stormy, cold nights are the best for the wolf trapper.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent

Because Admiral Dewey is shortly to marry a sister of Mr. John R. McLean, some men have taken to having some wonderful political visions. Men do not usually mix matrimony and politics and there isn't the slightest reason to suppose that Admiral Dewey will do so.

Another striking proof of the love of the republican party for the "dear working people" has just been given by the administration. The War Department has issued an order discontinuing the making of uniforms in this country, for the soldiers in the Phillipines, thus depriving many deserving persons of needed work. And before they were warned to keep mum officers of the Quartermaster Generals office have told why—simply because the uniforms can be made cheaper in Hong Kong, where Chinese cheap labor can be had, than in the United States. But republican stump speakers will go right along talking about saving their hearers from the competition of foreign "pauper labor."

The announcement that Mr. Hobart's death was only a question of time brought Boss Platt flying to Washington. He came ostensibly in connection with his fight against the architect chosen by Secretary George to draw the plans for the New York Custom House—Platt wants one of his strikers to have the job—but it is known that he laid a number of wires in connection with his scheme to get "Teddy" Roosevelt out of New York politics by making him the candidate for Vice President on the McKinley ticket. He had heard about the move of the anti-Platt republicans to put Fred Grant forward as New York's candidate for the Vice Presidency, and he desired to find out whether Mr. McKinley had any hand in that little game. He thinks he found out, and isn't afraid of the Grant movement. There may be considerable scrapping among the republicans over this matter, now that Mr. Hobart's name is out of it for good and all.

A set spring gun figured largely Hallowe'en night near Hutchinson. The gun went off and a boy killed. The Times says a man by the name of Jenson set the gun to frighten away intruders. The gun, he said, lay with muzzel pointing out of one of the front corners of the wagon, the gun laying diagonal in the box. From the trigger to the rear wheel ran a string, attached at both ends. The pole of the wagon pointed directly forward, as near as can be asertained, and Jenson spoke of that as showing that it eliminated the danger element. But when Rahn picked up the pole, he naturally cramped the wagon so that he stood directly in front of the gun, and the first forward move of the wagon pulled the string and the trigger, discharging the gun. Young Willie Rahn ran several rods and fell, his life blood pouring from the wound.

The Scientific American discurses upon the meteoric display for November—about the sixth and running to the sixteenth—when the phenomena will be at the maximum. It is said from midnight of Nov. 13 to 16—each morning—can be seen shooting stars—falling meteors—and all sorts of things—that in olden times—used to scare people.—Fargo Forum.

Another Mill For Tom.

T. H. Shevlin, president of the J. Neils Lumber company, was in the village Tuesday. He came up from Minneapolis for the purpose of being present at a sale of Cass Lake townsite which took place Wednesday at the St. Cloud land office. He was successful in buying a mill site upon which the local mill company will at once commence the erection of a saw mill to cost from $60,000 to $75,000. The mill will be supplied with a band saw and a band re saw, and will have a capacity of 50,000 feet in ten hours. The mill will be equipped throughout with modern machinery, and will be ready for operation early next spring.—Sauk Rapids Free Press.

TEST OF THE HEART.

Jones advised me not to marry her—he said that she was too young and pretty.

Farnum advised me to remain an old bachelor—told me a man past 40 simply made a fool of himself by matrimony.

Tewksbury—a man who is notorious for never minding his own business—told me she had had a love affair with Harry Birmingham before he went south.

Allen shook his head and said Clara Myers might be very pretty, but he liked somebody maturer and more settled. (N. B.—He married his housekeeper the next week, and she is mature enough for Methuselah himself!)

Everybody thought I was trying a dangerous experiment, but I didn't pretend to suit everybody, so I simply suited myself. I went quietly to church with Clara Myers and married her one glorious January morning, when the eaves of old St. Paul's were fringed with glittering icicles, and the brisk wind was freighted with particles of flying snow, like a battalion of diamonds on the double quick.

She was 19 and I was nine and thirty. She was as beautiful as a rosebud, with a shy, pretty way, like a timid child, and I am a rough old codger, sound enough at heart, but, like a winter apple, unpromising on the exterior.

In short, we were as unlike as May and November, and the good-natured world shook its head and said "no good could come of such an unequal match." But she said she loved me, and I believed her. Nobody could look into Clara's blue eyes and not believe her, you see!

And the next day I made a will and bequeathed all my property unconditionally to my wife.

"Are you sure you are doing a wise thing, Mr. Folliott?" said Mardyn, the lawyer, pushing his blue spectacles up on his forehead, until he looked like a bald old gnome with a double pair of eyes. "You see, she is very much younger than yourself, and——"

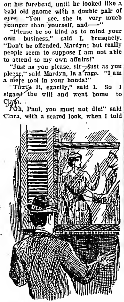
"Please be so kind as to mind your own business," said I, brusquely.

"Don't be offended, Mardyn; but really people seem to suppose I am not able to attend to my own affairs!"

"Just as you please, sir—just as you please," said Mardyn, in a rage. "I am a mere tool in your hands!"

"That's it, exactly," said I. So I signed the will and went home to Clara.

"Oh, Paul, you must not die!" said Clara, with a scared look, when I told her what I had done. "Nobody ever loved me as truly and generously as you have done, and I don't know what I should do if you were taken away!"



"MY ANSWER IS FINAL."

"There was young Birmingham, if all reports were true——" I mischievously remarked.

"A mere butterfly," she said, haughtily, "without either brains or principle! Paul, Paul, I have found a shelter in your true, loving heart, and I mean to nestle there always!"

And then she cried—this foolish, soft-hearted little wife of mine.

Jones and Tewksbury might have called this policy. Farnum would have said it was acting. But it was very pleasant, and I felt more than ever like a man who had found some precious jewel, and wears it, like an amulet, on his breast.

So things went on until the firm of which I was managing partner needed to send some one to Calcutta to see after a turbaned scoundrel of an agent, who had absconded with more money than we could well afford to lose. Morrison was old and feeble. Hewitt's wife lay very ill, so I was the one to go. I kissed Clara goodby as cheerfully as I could, fully expecting to be back in three months or so. But you know the old French adage: "L'homme propose et Dieu dispose!"

I had to follow the agent up into the mountains of India. I fell ill of one of those burning climatic fevers in the bungalow of an old native priest, and the months flew by until it was more than a year before I found myself on the deck of the Blue-Eyed Mary, steaming into New York harbor.

And all this time Clara had never heard a word from me.

I had written to her to prepare her for what seemed almost like my rising from the dead, but I had afterward found my letters in the pocket of the neglectful native servant who had undertaken to deliver the mails to the Calcutta office.

"But it doesn't matter so much now," I thought; "she will be more than delighted, poor little girl!"

And then a cold chill seemed to creep through my veins, like November's wind suddenly breathing across a bed of flowers!

Clara had heard nothing of me for nearly fifteen months—what might not have happened in that time? All that Tewksbury, and Jones, and Allen, and other prophetic ravens of my acquaintance had said recurred to my mind, like the burden of an uneasy dream. I had been counting the days, the hours, the very minutes, until we should touch port; but now that my feet rang once more upon the pavements of my native city, I actually dared not go home.

I turned into a down-town restaurant, where I had been wont to go in the days of my bachelorhood, and slunk into a dark corner; the twilight was just falling, and I was sheltered by the partition.

Hush! That was Tewksbury's voice, harsh and jarring as of old.

"Just what might have been expected," said Tewksbury. "Pretty young widows don't go begging in this market."

"Folliott might have known it," growled old Farnum. "Poor Folliott! There were some very good points about him, too. Sad thing, that—very sad thing."

"We must all die," said Tewksbury, gravely.

"Yes; but a fellow would naturally prefer dying in his bed to being carried off by an East Indian fever and buried in the jungles."

I shuddered. Had I then come home to my own funeral, as it were?

"And she's going to marry young Birmingham, after all!" added Farnum.

The paper dropped from my hand.

"I could have told Folliott so when I heard what a confounded idiotic will he had made!" said Tewksbury. "So gold has fallen again. Just my luck; I sold out tonight!"

I stayed to hear no more, but staggered out into the darkness with one idea whirling through my dizzy brain—my Clara was mine no longer!

It was quite true, what Tewksbury had said. I might have anticipated some such end. She was too young, too lovely for such a rough old fellow as I was. My widow—what a curious sensation the words gave me as I mentally pronounced them!

Under my own windows, with a ruby-red light shining through wine-colored damask curtains, I stood there feeling as Rip Van Winkle might have felt in the play—like a dead man walking the earth once more. Voices and lights were within. I opened the door softly and crept into the hall.

The drawing-room door was ajar. Clara herself stood before the fire, in deep black robes, with a frill of white crape on her auburn gold tresses—the awful sign and symbol of her widowhood. Directly opposite stood Harry Birmingham, looking diabolically young and handsome in the soft gaslight.

"Clara, Clara!" he cried. "You surely are not in earnest. You will reconsider."

"My answer is final," she responded. "The time might once have been when you fancied I had a childish liking for you, Harry Birmingham; but that time has long since passed away. I gave my heart to the best and noblest man that ever breathed—Paul Folliott—and in his grave it is forever buried. I loved him once; I shall love him into eternity! I never was half worthy of him——"

And Clara's voice was choked with sobs.

"My love—my darling—my own precious wife!"

How I ever got into the room—how I managed to make Clara comprehend that I was my own living self, and not a ghost arisen from the shadow of the sepulcher, I cannot tell to this day—neither can she. But I know that young Birmingham somehow disappeared, and I was standing with Clara clasped to my breast—the happiest man that ever breathed God's blessed air.—New York News.

Amphibious Automobiles.

A Swedish engineer, Mr. Magrelem, has lately built a tramway boat that is really an amphibious means of locomotion, for it moves along quite as easily on the water as on a railway track. The tramway boat was devised to ply across two lakes north of Copenhagen, divided by a neck of land about 300 meters wide. It had been nearly decided to dig a canal across the isthmus in order to connect the two sheets of water by a continuous channel, when Mr. Magrelam offered his plan. The amphibious steamboat, as described by the Automobile Magazine, is 15 meters long by four meters beam; she weighs 11 tons when empty and 15 tons with her maximum load. The engine is 25 horse power, and its action is transmitted by means of a triple gear, either to the propeller or to the rimmed wheels. She can carry 70 passengers. In passing from the liquid medium to the solid road the boat enters a small canal having a slightly inclined bottom and two grooves, where the front wheels are engaged and then meet the rails, with which they keep in contact by the action of some pins or spikes. As soon as contact is secured the whole power of the engine is brought to bear on the front wheels, which easily pull the tramway boat up the incline to the dry land and make her travel on the rails like an ordinary car. On reaching the other side of the isthmus she launches herself by the same process, inverted, but the brakes are then strongly applied to the wheels to prevent a too rapid descent. The trip is then continued on the water.

Told of the Sultan's Navy.

A good story is told of a Turkish man-of-war which was ordered to Malta. When the captain had got his ship clear of the Bosphorus, it struck him that it would be as well if he knew where Malta was, for he had not the slightest idea. So he inquired of a passing vessel, whose captain offered to point it out on the chart. But the Turkish captain preferred to follow a vessel which he knew was about to sail for that port. Unfortunately, a fog came on, and when it cleared off the vessel in front was no longer the same, though the captain knew it not. For days he followed the ship, and at last reached port, when, addressing the authorities that came on board, he said: "Malta, I presume?" "Oh, no," was the reply. "This is Liverpool."—Stray Stories.

How He Won Out.

The youth had become too chesty, as it were, and the engagement had just been broken. He stood on the corner, permitting the starlight to soak through his new $1.98 derby. "The question is," he muttered hoarsely, "shall I repair to a booze bazaar and become exceedingly lumpy or shall I go home and turn in?" He pulled a coin out of his pocket and flipped it. "Heads, jag," he said. "Tails, bed." He missed connection with the coin when it came down, and it rolled down the concrete into the open sewer. "Ha! 'tis an omen!" he exclaimed under his breath. "It means that it's up to me to go back and square myself." Which he did, thereby winning out. She was in tears, and, therefore, putty.

LIGHT FROM CAR AXLES.

New System of Train Illumination for Which Much Is Claimed

St. Louis Globe-Democrat: A new system of train lighting shows an enormous advance on all previous methods. It embodies the old idea of generating the electric current by the revolution of the car axle, but with an effectiveness never before attained. Where, as in early systems, the current for lighting has been generated by a dynamo in the baggage car, run by power from the locomotive, the car would lose its light as soon as it was detached from the train; but now every car carries its own light-creating plant, being fitted with a dynamo and a storage battery. When the train is standing still the car is lighted from a storage battery. As soon as the train attains a speed of twelve miles an hour the dynamo is automatically connected with the mechanism, which transmits the power of the revolving axle, and the lights are then fed directly from it. This does not in any way lessen the speed of the train or call for any additional power from the engine. A whole car full of lights can thus be kept burning all night, if need be, at a merely nominal cost, and the ordinary expenses of maintenance are saved, as no electrician is needed, the dynamo and storage battery both being regulated automatically. A five minutes' inspection of the battery every six weeks meets every requirement. This battery will keep seventeen lights burning for twelve hours if the car is at rest. The objection has been raised that if the train were snowed in the battery would quickly become exhausted, and the cars would be left in darkness. It is pointed out that this objection loses its force from the fact that the number of lights burning could be reduced and cars could be lighted from the battery alone for over a week much more brightly than they are now by lamps, or even gas. The brilliancy of the lighting by the new method is strikingly seen when a car equipped with it runs into a station alongside of the best-lighted Pullman fitted with gas. The light, in fact, fills the car, and as it is reflected and diffused by opal shades, it gives a soft and restful illumination which is absolutely perfect for reading. The new system immeasurably advances the luxury of railway traveling, and it is more than probable that it will hasten the day when railway passengers will no longer be parboiled in stifling and foul-smelling cars, but, free from the caprice of conductors, will enjoy the civilized blessings of automatic electric heating and electric ventilation.

MYSTIFIED THE INDIANS.

A Chicago Photographer Had Lots of Fun with the Navajos.

There is a photographer in Chicago who had lots of fun last month with the Arizona Indians. He has just got back home and is buttonholing every man he meets. But it's an interesting story. It seems that last year, when the Navajos were having their snake dance, he was sent out there by a moving-picture concern to get a series of negatives. He did not succeed, because the savages were too shy and suspicious, but he caught some of them at their sports at an agency store, some seventeen miles north of Canon Diablo. This year he went out to try the dance again, and took his exhibition outfit along with him. Reaching the store, he invited the Indians to see the show. About 600 of them came, and he put up a screen behind the store one night and shot off the pictures. The Indians gazed at the various scenes with open mouths, apparently not comprehending. When the moving railway train was shown, growing from a pin point on the horizon till it filled the whole frame, seemingly rushing down upon the crowd, they gasped in unison and would have fled had not the interpreter reassured them. The march of the soldiers was something that most of them had seen, but the exhibition drill of the Kansas fire department was an uncanny mystery. The climax came when the pictures taken on the same spot the preceding year were reproduced. Most of the Indians had been present when the pictures had been taken. Many of them almost shrieked when they saw themselves in action as they were in the chicken-pulling contest and in the races of last August. Last year a popular clerk, since gone away, had carelessly walked across the instrument's field. The Indians shouted as they saw him again on the canvas. Real enthusiasm was caused by the passage across the screen of the trader's well-known little dog. Among the friends recognized a number had died in the winter during the smallpox epidemic. When the entertainment was over the Indians crowded around the screen feeling the canvas and rubbing their cheeks upon it, chattering noisily in their amazement.

Smothered in Railway Tunnels.

A Rome correspondent of the London Post writes: During a recent journey in the north of Italy I had painful personal experience of the dangerous condition of the atmosphere in several of the more important tunnels on Italian railways. On account of the badness of the coal used and of the want of proper ventilation the foulness of the air is such as to expose persons whose respiratory organs are not in the most robust condition to the danger of temporary suffocation. It may be remembered that the terrible railway accident at the Giovi tunnel last year was due to the asphyxiation of the engine drivers and brakemen. Now I read that two plate layers have been found suffocated in the Ronco tunnel, and that they only escaped being crushed to death because on train happened to pass before their senseless bodies were discovered by comrades sent to relieve them. The question of asphyxiation is a serious danger to the traveling public, and one which the influence of foreign public opinion may considerably help to solve.

Nerves of Animals Used to Restore Man's

In a certain proportion of injuries to nerves the ends cannot be brought together, and this fact in the older days of surgery considerably perplexed surgeons, even those who had earned celebrity. Nowadays this complexity is removed. In modern surgical operations, when nerve ends cannot be brought together, it is the custom to obtain a portion of a nerve from one of the lower animals, or from an amputated human limb, and transplant it to the human body. "In one case," said a surgeon, "a man was severely injured in the wrist by a circular saw, and lost sensibility in the hand. A portion of the sciatic nerve of a young bloodhound was sewn between the ends of a local nerve with kangaroo tendon. A similar operation was performed on the ulnar nerve—that is, the nerve which works in conjunction with the ulna, the largest of the two bones of the forearm running from the wrist to the elbow. On the following day a distinct return of sensibility in the thumb was found, and three months after the operation sensibility was almost complete. I personally know of twenty similar cases. The time from the injury to the operation varied from forty-eight hours to fifteen months. Twelve out of the twenty were fairly successful cases, but it is our wish to have all thorough successes. No length of nerve transplanted, let it be long or short, seems to affect the continuous sensibility which is set up after the completion of the conjunctured nerves. What sort of animals' nerves are usually required in these operations? Well, in nine cases out of the twenty I have told you of parts were from the sciatic nerves of dogs, three from rabbits, one from a kitten, and one from the spinal cord of a rabbit, and in five from recently amputated limbs. In one case the whole of the sciatic nerve which had been excised was transplanted. In the suturing silk was used to unite the implanted segments of divided ends, and also kangaroo tendon. No case recovered entirely, but generally the cases were very much improved, and will be found lasting."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

An Automobile Truck Test.

A series of trials of automobile wagons for heavy merchandise has just been held near Liverpool. Nearly all the entries were British, but one firm from the United States being represented. All these autotrucks were propelled by steam, and although it is very unlikely that we on this side of the water shall adopt the use of steam to any extent for this kind of service, yet the trials are evidence of an earnest desire to find out the best kind of horseless truck. There were five entries in the competition, the lightest vehicle weighing three and three-quarters tons, and the heaviest six and one-half tons in working order. The trials consisted in a thirty-six mile continuous run over ordinary country roads, and a hill test. The incline was about 500 feet long, one part of it having a grade of one foot in nine. The wagons all succeeded in climbing the hill, their loads varying from three and three-quarters to six and one-quarter tons. They were obliged to stop when half-way up, at the foot of the steepest part of the incline, and start again and go to the top. Again, when descending the hill, they were obliged to come to a full stop, with their load, to demonstrate their controllability and the efficacy of their brakes. Some of the vehicles had water-tube boilers, and all were to carry pressures between 175 and 250 pounds per square inch. The boilers were all arranged with furnaces for liquid fuel.

Picture-Hanging Device.

A very convenient device for hanging or removing pictures from the wall has been patented by an inventor of Boston, Mass. In accordance with this invention two upright cord-engaging arms are erected upon a base, with a rearward incline, and said arms are so located a short distance apart, so as to straddle the hook when applying the cord thereto or when removing it therefrom. The base bearing said cord-engaging arms is secured to a pole. A hook-engaging arm is pivoted to the base between the aforesaid arms, which is made longer than the others or projecting beyond them and provided with a toothed jaw for engaging and holding the hook, so as to apply it to or remove it from a molding. Such an instrument will prove of great value around art galleries or picture stores.

Jupiter's Swift Moon.

A new computation of the period of the fifth satellite of Jupiter, discovered by Mr. Barnard in 1892, shows the extreme accuracy of astronomical calculations when they are based upon a long series of continuous observations. This computation deals very confidently with thousandths of a second, the period of the little moon being set down at 11 hours, 57 minutes, 22 second and 647-1,000 of a second. The satellite whose time of revolution is thus accurately determined moves with great speed. Its distance from Jupiter's center is about 112,500 miles, and its path is practically a circle, so that the distance which it travels during a revolution is, in round numbers, 353,250 miles. As it accomplishes this distance in less than twelve hours, its velocity is almost 500 miles in a minute, and this, singularly enough, is about the same as the average velocity of Jupiter in his revolution around the sun.

A Bed That Really Folds.

Here's a folding-bed that folds. The bed does not transform itself into a refrigerator or a coal-bin when not in use, but collapses so effectively that it can be pushed away in the tiniest closet. It is constructed so that when folded it occupies a minimum amount of space, and when extended presents a bedstead which is strong and durable, the parts being susceptible of ornamentation to form a neat and attractive piece of household furniture. To this end the head and foot sections as well as the bottom section of the bedstead are made up of end pieces connected to each other by diagonal crossbars connected by toggle-joints after the manner of lazy-tongs, the several sections being detachably connected in order that each independent section may be folded within the several sections, bundled together, or carried separately. There are auxiliary legs under the bottom of the bed to support the middle. This bed is the patent of an inventor of Boston, Mass.

Microscopical Examination of Steel.

At the autumn meeting of the Iron and Steel Institute the question of the utility of microscopical analysis in the steel industries was introduced by Mr. Ridsdale, who said he had rendered the microscope available for every-day use in a busy laboratory where the commercial objects predominate over the theoretical and scientific. Prof. Porter of Montreal stated that the importance of the subject under discussion was fully recognized in the United States and Canada, and he was engaged in equipping an expensive micro-laboratory in his college at Montreal. Mr. Ridsdale gave some of the results of his study of the soft steel and pointed out that composition only indicates such well-defined effects as are generally understood within certain narrow limits of treatment which are termed "normal." Outside these limits the effect of the treatment far outweighs that of the composition. M. Greiner said he highly appreciated the principle of microscopical analysis, and suggested that the Institute should formulate a systematic method of procedure, so that uniformity of results might always be obtained.

Sterilization of Water Supply.

The Rivista d'Igiene of Turin has just indicated a way of sterilizing drinking water by means of peroxide of chlorine. The method is thorough, speedy and economical, and is termed the Berge process. Peroxide of chlorine is so powerful a bactericide that three grammes will sterilize completely one cubic meter of water at a cost of less than half a centime. The method has already obtained a unanimous vote in its favor from the consultative committee of public hygiene in France, and it has yielded quite satisfactory results at Ostend and Middelkerke. One objection is that it is only efficacious in the case of drinking water not very impure; but if Chicago water comes under the category there is now a sterilizing agent which promises a pure and harmless drinking water.

Recent Inventions.

A combined mop head and wringer has been placed on the market, comprising a pair of fluted rollers held in proximity in the mop head, with a folding crank attached to one roller by which it is made to revolve and wring the cloth.

Leaks in metallic pipes can be easily stopped by a new patching device, a U-shaped yoke being passed around the pipe, with the ends of the yoke carrying a detachable head, with a screw in the center, which presses a cushioned patch over the leak.

A westerner has designed a fence post which can be fastened securely in the ground, the lower end of the post having wings pivoted to fold into slots as the post is driven into the earth, the wings opening out horizontally as the dirt is tamped around the post.

In an improved fifth wheel for wagons a double row of links is formed into circles, one outside the other, with a series of rollers carried by the circles and adapted to revolve on a circular track, supporting the weight of the front end of the wagon and allowing the truck to turn easily.

A Maryland woman has patented a cover for ironing boards which is always smooth and retains its place securely on the board, the fabric having a series of lacing holes around the edge, in which a lacing strip is inserted, with cords at each end to prevent the cover sliding in either direction.

Umbrellas can be secured to the person to be carried without the necessity of touching with the hands by a New York woman's device, a hook being provided for attachment to the belt, with a strip of fabric having a ring at the lower end to support the umbrella tip, a short chain being used to hold the handle close to the hook.

One might as well get left as to be gathered up as a fragment.

TRAGEDIES OF HUNTING.

Don't Shoot Until You Know What You Are Shooting At.

The deer hunting season in the Adirondacks opened Aug. 1. Four days later followed a tragedy. Two brothers were camping on the eighth lake of the Fulton chain. For the younger, a youth of 17 years, it was the first season of camp life, and, like all youngsters in the woods in their initial experience, he was aglow with ardor to get his first deer. About sundown this younger brother left camp alone and shortly after was followed by the other. When the elder of the two came to the Durant road he saw a movement of the brush, such as is caused by a deer. On the instant he raised his rifle, took quick aim at the moving brush, fired, then rushed in to see what he had shot, and found his brother, who had been killed instantaneously by a shot through the breast. A human life cut short in the flower of youth. Another life clouded by the anguish of the hour and by life-long regret and self-reproach. A home desolated. And all as the fruit of one foolish movement with a deadly weapon in the woods. If we did not read the stories of such accidents year after year, and from time to time meet the bereaved fathers and mothers, and wives and children of the victims, it would be impossible to conceive that grown men could be found to bring this woe upon themselves and upon their fellows. And yet season after season the record grows. Now it is a farmer who shoots a neighbor by mistake for a ground hog; now a Maine moose hunter who kills his guide for big game, and now the Adirondack camper who does to death his brother for a deer. Before the season shall be over and the rifles put away we shall hear probably of a score of such tragedies. And it is all so cruelly heart-rending because so unnecessary. The observance of the simple rule would have saved the scores of lives sacrificed in the past—Don't shoot until you know what you are shooting at.—Forest and Stream.

SHE WAS A BRAVE GIRL.

Kept Her Presence of Mind When Attacked by an Alligator.

Some days ago a little girl, a daughter of Mrs. Fields, living on Lake Gibson, near Lakeland, Fla., jumped off the wharf on the lake to take a swim. She is an expert swimmer, but had hardly touched the water before she was seized by the leg, between the knee and ankle, by an alligator. She was pulled under the water by the saurian, but managed to break away and started hastily toward the shore, only a few yards distant. The 'gator again came to the attack, this time seizing her in the fleshy part of the side, between the ribs and hip. The little one was plucky, however, and managed to again break away from the cruel jaws, this time reaching the shore, the 'gator following until she was on dry land; then he disappeared from view. The girl never lost her presence of mind, which probably was the reason of her escaping alive. She gives a very graphic description of the dangerous encounter, and has two very ugly wounds to vouch for her story. She says she could not see the entire length of the beast, but from what she could see would judge it to have been only about five feet long—a small 'gator to attack a person. The girl is 14 years of age.—Baltimore Sun.

Ruskin's Gift.

During the proceedings of the recent conference of the Library association in England a characteristic story of John Ruskin was told in connection with the subject of village libraries. A library for the laborers of a lake country village had been established, and just before the opening Mr. Ruskin was asked to inspect it. He cordially consented, and upon leaving expressed his admiration of the arrangements, and promised to send a present, which came in the form of a sumptuous set of Scott's novels. The wife of the founder thought the edition much too splendid for the purpose and at the earliest opportunity told the donor so. "Madam," said Ruskin, "if the money the books cost had been spent in floral decorations or wines for a dinner, nothing would have been said against it, but because it has been laid out for the enjoyment of the simple villagers it is thought extravagant."

The Youthful Essayist.

Among the gems of general knowledge which sometimes serve to illumine the dull routine of elementary education the following "Essay on St. Stephen," a copy of which reaches us from the vicinity of a Church of England school in Surrey, is worthy of a place. The author appears to have derived his misinformation from both lay and ecclesiastical sources, and he writes: "We have heard that St. Stephen was the first one to find out how to make the steam engin. He first made the puffin-Billy and many others, and he went on makin em, and some he made better than all the others, and these be the ones you see in the stashuns." This is pretty good, but our admiration is boundless when, with infinite gravity and brevity, our youthful essayist concludes: "'Lay not this thing to my charge,' said he, when he was a-dyin of bein stoned."—Literature.

In his entertaining biography of Lord Houghton, Sir T. Weymss Reid tells how when Carlyle paid his first visit to Fryston, Mr. Milnes (Lord Houghton's father), on hearing his guest express admiration of the prospect from the hall, pointed out the tall chimney of some manufactory on the far horizon and expressed his regret that it should recently have been erected and spoiled the rustic character of the view. "Spoiled the view!" said Carlyle, "why, sir, I think that is just the pleasantest feature in the whole bit of scenery. It shows us that somebody is doing something in this part of the world at any rate."

They Didn't Build the Fence.

It was a Maine graveyard, and the fence thereof was in a disreputable condition.

Some of the neighbors were trying to start a movement to refence the cemetery, and it was meeting with general approval until the caustic wit of Darius Howard was aroused.

"What for?" he inquired. "What's the use of fencing the graveyard? There ain't no one inside that wants to come out and I'm darn sure there ain't anyone outside that wants to get in. So, what's the use of the fence?"

And the fence was not built until folks had ceased to chuckle over the thrust of Darius.—Lewiston Journal.

BENEFITS MANKIND.

The Keeley Cure Has a Value for the Public at Large.

Statistics prove that the Keeley Cure has a direct value to the public. It makes good citizens of men who have not only been a burden to the community themselves, but their families have been a burden. Some of the brightest men have rendered themselves absolutely incapable of self-support through their drinking. They have been given the Keeley Cure and became producers. Many of the public officers in various states and cities are Keeley Graduates, and but for the Keeley Cure would now be occupying drunkard's graves. The earning capacity of any Keeley Graduate has been visibly increased by the cure.

Any community is benefited by sending a man addicted to the use of liquor to the Minneapolis Keeley Institute. It gains in good order. It gains in increased earning capacity of the restored man, and it gains in having performed a righteous and charitable action to an unfortunate.

In almost every community there is some influential man who, through ignorance or prejudice, raises his voice against the Keeley Cure, therefore prevented many men from deriving any benefit from it. In such cases it is the duty of the public to go right along in the path of right. It is cheaper to give a man the Keeley Cure than to continue to support himself and family.

Those men who have been cured are to be found in every community; their friends and acquaintances know of the blessings they received, and do not hesitate to indorse the Cure.

No vexatious restraints are placed on the patients in the Minneapolis Keeley Institute. The only requirement is gentlemanly conduct and the exercise of care in following out the regulations governing the administration of the remedy. Vicious or refractory patients are dismissed the moment it becomes evident that their presence is an improper infliction upon well intentional associates.

There is but one Keeley Cure, although there are hosts of imitators. These latter should be prevented from swindling the people, as they have no genuine cure. The management of the Minneapolis Institute makes it a point to promptly answer inquiries and to forward literature, in a plain envelope, to those who send name and address to the Keeley Institute, corner Tenth street south and Park avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

HAD SENSE OF HUMOR.

How a Scottish Girl Frightened a Too Ardent Swain.

The latest story is from a Scotch shooting box. A young lady much admired by a young man staying at the same house, was kissed by him one day, greatly to her indignation.

"If you dare to kiss me again," she said, "I must tell my father."

Kiss her again the ardent lover did. Upon this she fled to her father's room, where she happened to find him examining a gun.

"Oh, papa!" she exclaimed, "do run down stairs and show Mr. H—— your new gun. He is so interested in guns."

"Very well, dear," was the good-natured reply, and down went the unsuspecting father. At the sight of the girl's parent armed with a gun, the young man fled precipitately.

That girl must have had a sense of humor, there is no doubt.—New York Morning Telegraph.

Marital Compliments.

They had been married fully three months, and were having their thirteenth quarrel—thirteen being an unlucky number.

"You only married me for my money," he said.

"I didn't do anything of the kind," she retorted.

"Well, you didn't marry me because you loved me."

"I know I didn't."

"In heaven's name, then, what did you marry me for?"

"Just to make that hateful Kate Scott you were engaged to cry her eyes out because she had to give you up to another."

"Great Caesar, woman!" he spluttered, "what have you done? Why, I married you just because Kate Scott threw me over!"—Collier's Weekly.

WOMEN do suffer!
Even so-called healthy women suffer!
But they are not healthy!

The marks left by pain are on the young faces of many of our daughters. Pain that leaves its mark comes from a curable cause. If that cause is not removed its influence reaches out and overshadows a whole life. The reason Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been so uniformly successful for over a quarter of a century in overcoming the suffering of women, is that it is thorough and goes directly to the cause. It is a woman's remedy for woman's ills.

MUST WOMEN SUFFER?

MISS EMILY F. HAAS, of 148 Freeman St., Greenpoint, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I wish to state that I used your Vegetable Compound with the greatest success. I was very sick for nearly a year with hysteria, was down-hearted and nervous; also suffered with painful menstruation and pain in back and limbs. I often wished for death, thinking nothing would cure me. I had doctors, but their medicines did me no good. At last, by the advice of a friend, I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am happy to say it has entirely cured me.

JENNIE SHERMAN, of Fremont, Mich., Box 748, writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I feel that I must write you and tell you what your medicine has done for me. I had neuralgia of the stomach for two years, so bad that I could not do any work. I had two or three doctors, but did not seem to get any better. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and improved from the first, had better appetite, and after taking three bottles of Compound and one box of Liver Pills, I can say that I am cured. Your Vegetable Compound is a wonderful medicine."

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Horticultural Observations.

The California peach crop has been fairly good this year and it has brought a good deal of money. Some of our readers that have heard so much about the peach crop failure in this part of the country may have wondered at the fact that the market seemed to be fairly well supplied by fruit said to be raised near at home. The facts appear to be that much of the California product has been sold as fruit grown near at hand, the dealers catering to the prejudice in favor of home-grown fruit.

Herewith we illustrate the Maple Slug Worm. The length of this slug is shown in the straight line by the side of it. It is frequently found in the fall of the year on the maple leaves and even under the trees. The body of the slug is oval, with a wide dorsal square ridge, hollowed slightly along the middle, where situated on each suture is a yellowish round spot centered with a dark green dot. The edge of the ridge is stained with yellow. On the outer and lower side of the ridge is a lateral row of spots like those in the middle of the back. The body is pale green with yellow touches and spots besides those described. The head is green but the jaws and labrum are a dark amber. Along the edge of the body is a whitish line. The moth is about half an inch long, measuring with the closed wings, and is of a pale green color and variegated.

Every horticulturist should be, to a considerable extent, an entomologist. He should be able to recognize any common insect that invades his fruit plantation or his orchard. To accomplish this he should have a small collection of the insects that are most common. These collections are not readily obtainable at this time, but the demand for them will create a supply. In older countries this demand and supply already exist. In England one entomologist makes a business of breeding insects for the purpose of supplying collections. He has what is called a butterfly farm. He supplies collections of both the butterflies and the larvae. Some of his collections number up into the thousands. It is evident that the interest in entomology is on the increase. In the United States the state universities are in some instances authorized to make collections for the use of the high schools in the state. Such a law exists in Illinois, but the privilege is of no effect for the reason that the state entomologist never has the funds available for doing the work necessary to put the collections in a form where they can be of use to the schools. Of course these insects must be mounted in proper arrangement and correctly named. This work takes the time of a man for a number of days, in the case of each collection. We would suggest that high school boards take the matter up and make appropriations to defray the expense of this work. Certainly there should be in every high school in the state such a collection, for it would then be a center from which would go out a great deal of information on entomological subjects. Frequently it happens that a destructive insect appears in some neighborhood and is unrecognized for weeks, during which time it has obtained a foothold that will permit it to do untold damage to the fruits and fruit plants there.

Buckwheat as Manure for Turnips.

From Farmers' Review: It is a common opinion that turnips should never be preceded in a crop rotation by buckwheat. Some farmers go the length of saying that the latter has a poisonous effect upon the land as far as turnips are concerned, and also when some other crops are grown. This opinion was so general and seemed to have so little foundation that a series of tests were conducted to prove the case for or against. A piece of land that had yielded a crop of rutabagas was sown to buckwheat and another similar plot was allowed to lie fallow. When the buckwheat was slightly past the flowering stage it was cut, run through a fodder cutter and then turned under. Shortly after this a volunteer crop of buckwheat appeared and after growing a few inches was turned under, the fallow plot being prepared for seeding to turnips at the same time. The two plots were, except in these respects, treated exactly alike. The crop of salable turnips upon the buckwheat plot was more than four times as heavy as upon the fallow plot and they weighed more individually. The marketable roots from the fallow plot were more numerous but smaller and consequently lighter. This experiment seems to indicate that the idea that buckwheat is not a good green manure for turnips is not correct.

"Starters" in Cheesemaking.

Prof. Campbell, before the Highland (Scotland) Agricultural Society, said: 1. First-class Cheddar cheese can be made by using pure cultures of a lactic organism. 2. This organism abounds in all samples of sour milk and sour whey. 3. The system recommended for the preparation of a home-made starter is one which exerts a purifying influence upon the bacterial content of the starter, and results in the elimination of bacteria which are unnecessary if not harmful to the production of a first-class material. 4. The use of a whey starter is attended with results equal in every way to those obtained from a milk starter. Of these results by far the most important is that which shows that a home-made starter, if carefully prepared, comes after a few days to be practically a pure culture of the bacteria desired.

Preparation of a Home-Made Starter.—In order to prepare a home-made starter the dairyman has to secure two enameled pails provided with covers. In the one he pours fresh skimmed milk, and then sets it in a fairly warm place, so that in about twenty-four hours the milk will be both sour and thick. When this has occurred he skims off the surface, breaks up the center of the mass and takes out half a pint. This he adds to skimmilk which has previously been scalded from 155 to 160 deg. F. and subsequently cooled to about 65 or 70 degs. On the following morning this should also be sour and thick, or the temperature of setting has been too low. Again the surface is skimmed, half a pint extracted as before, which in turn is added to a third quantity of scalded milk. The temperature at which the second and all succeeding starters are made up must be determined by each worker for himself; it will depend upon the temperature of the room where the pail is kept during the night. On the third day the starter produced in this way, if of a creamy consistence, may be used for making the cheese—a portion, however, being retained to prepare a starter for the following day.

This process may be repeated day after day, and if performed in a careful and cleanly manner it will go on throughout the season yielding good results. As already explained, the operation is one which in a very few days eliminates undesirable bacteria.

Moving Wire Fence.

I will give you my way and hope others will do the same, since a continuation of ideas often makes a success, says G. W. Crossley in Wallace's Farmer. In the first place I have the spools that I took the wire off and keep them so when I want them I can get them at a minute's notice. I have a three-fourths-inch pipe four and one-half inches long, with holes one-fourth inch wide so as to let the spool turn free.

Put on your spool and put a large washer on each side of the spool. Then put in a spring key so that the spool can be quickly removed when filled. Take each end of the pipe, slip it through the ropes and walk along the line to be taken up. They have to use their hands freely. One catches hold of the spool and gives it a half-turn backward. Then the other man gives it a half-turn backward, and so on alternately. You can, with a little care, make it very even and easy to pay out when wanted for use; or, if you have a third man, let him walk behind the spool and turn it backward. It is much quicker than with two men. I never saw anything better than a good sharp spade. Take your spade to a blacksmith and have it drawn out thin. You will then find it will work much easier and you will be fully repaid for your extra trouble in having it properly prepared for the work.

Another contributor to Wallace's Farmer writes: In my last paper, June 16, P. F. Paterson, of Franklin county, asked how to take up posts and roll up wire. If he will put on a thick pair of mittens he can roll up wire very easily. All the trouble is in starting. Drive along the posts with a wagon, put a long chain around the hind axle, hitch the chain near the top of the posts. He will have no trouble in pulling his posts. Of course there are wire reels for rolling and unrolling wire. I have had lots of experience in moving wire fences and have found no better plan.

Source of Scions.

Scions should come from fruit bearing trees. We insist that the weakness or disposition to form only wood buds and runners is inherited, and therefore no tree or plant known to be unfruitful should ever be used for propagation. It is a well known law of nature that when any power or faculty is not used for a long period it will become dormant and finally disappear, and when a plant through bad propagation or otherwise becomes an habitual wood bud maker it is not easily persuaded by any system of tillage to return to fruitage. I have long felt that the practice of taking scions from nursery rows through many generations without allowing them to bear fruit is wrong. Such trees are not only late in coming into bearing, but they are easily exhausted and in this weakened condition readily fall a victim to insects or fungi, and I beg to express my conviction that this has contributed more to the present deplorable condition of our orchards than any other one thing.—R. M. Kellogg.

Migratory Weeds.

Injurious migratory weeds are usually first introduced into cities and spread from them to the farms, says a contributor to Rural World. There are a dozen chances for the original introduction of a weed in cities to one upon the farm. Fine-leaved sneezeweed first appeared about cities in the south, and is now spreading to the grazing lands and cotton fields. The Canada thistle in its progress across the continent has been distributed by railways, first to the cities. Prickly lettuce has usually been first observed in cities and towns in its remarkably rapid spread over the country. The Russian thistle was first introduced into the United States on a farm, but being taken to the cities, it now most frequently spreads from them to the farms. In many instances these introduced species could have been easily destroyed upon their first appearance in the cities and towns, and millions of dollars' damage to the farmers thus averted.

Angoras in Demand.—The Shepherd's Bulletin says demand for Angora goats is increasing rapidly. Inquiries are mostly from the southern and western parts of the United States. The demand in the Pacific Northwest is brisk, especially on the western slope. Angoras are best adapted to rough land. Their favorite food is leaves and bark, and they will leave the best grass for browse. Angoras are therefore more valuable than sheep in very rough sections, and will grow fat where sheep will hardly exist.

Tours to California in Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars

Via the Chicago Great Western to Kansas City and the Santa Fe Route to Los Angeles and Southern California. The true winter route, avoiding cold weather and snow blockades.

Commencing Monday, Oct. 23rd, and on every Monday following, one of these new Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars will leave St. Paul at 8:10 a. m., via the Chicago Great Western for Los Angeles and Southern California via Kansas City, and reaching Los Angeles the following Friday morning, thus avoiding all Sunday travel. These tours are personally conducted by an experienced railway official, who accompanies the train to its destination. The cars are well equipped for a long journey, and are as comfortable as the Pullman Sleepers, while the price is only $6.00 for a double berth, less than half the price in the Standard Sleepers. Not in Holiday Array.

"I suppose you don't think we make much of a showing," said Oom Paul to the stranger.

"I must say there are not many evidences of glory and authority."

"Well, you'll have to come around when we're not so busy, if you want to see our pomp and pageantry. The poet laureate is at work cleaning blunderbusses, the members of the brass band are practicing at the rifle range, and the military tailors are all working overtime re-enforcing the pantaloons of the cavalry. You'll have to make a few allowances.—Washington Star.

The Reason Why.

"I can never share your lot, sir."

The beautiful girl arose from the sofa upon which she had been sitting and waved away the man who had been pressing his suit.

There were tears of disappointment in the young man's eyes.

"I know," he sobbed; "I know, heartless girl, why you will not share my lot."

"And why?" she asked, coldly.

"Because there are no improvements on it," he groaned.—Baltimore News.

A Prosperous Manufacturing City.

Brockton's prosperity is so closely allied to the prosperity of the shoe industry that it will, no doubt, prove a matter of interest to a large number of people to learn the actual average earning capacity of each individual employed in the making of the world-famed Brockton shoe. For illustration: At the factory of the W. L. Douglas Shoe company the pay roll for the week ending Sept. 30, excluding superintendent, foremen, salesmen, and all clerical help, shows the average earnings of the employes, large and small, to be $15.54 per week. This was not an extraordinary week. It was the customary pay roll.

The amount earned per week, however, does not always tell the story of prosperity. The number of weeks employed each year is the determining factor in the wage earners' prosperity. The Douglas factory has been closed but one week this year, and that for the usual summer stock taking, and it will be closed but three days the latter part of December. This would make but nine days out of the year that the factory is closed, which is surely as steady work as the most industrious shoemaker could desire.

It is believed that the average pay and the number of days worked is larger at the factory of the W. L. Douglas Shoe company than at any manufacturing institution in Massachusetts.

Owing to increased business, another addition is to be made to the Douglas factory. It will be 100 feet long, 40 feet wide, and five stories high. It will be ready for occupancy early in December. This addition increases the capacity 25 per cent. The W. L. Douglas Shoe company has the largest factory in the world, producing an advertised line $3.50 and $3.00 shoes.

Mr. Douglas says that the prospect for successful business for Brockton manufacturers was never so good as now, and that collections are better than for years. —The Brockton (Mass.) Times, Oct. 10, 1899.

Pianos as War Souvenirs.

It is not often that pianos are obtained as souvenirs of war, but such is the case with officers of the Olympia. Two pianos on board that boat have been brought to this country as souvenirs. Fr. Reaney, the ever-popular chaplain, has one, and the other is in possession of the surgeon. The latter piano was taken from the beach at Manila. When taken it was being used by soldiers, who were pounding on it as if it were a base drum. The pianos are of English make.—Boston Traveler.

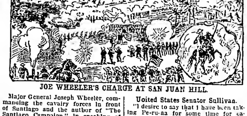
The Great Catarrh Cure.



JOE WHEELER'S CHARGE AT SAN JUAN HILL.

Major General Joseph Wheeler, commanding the cavalry forces in front of Santiago and the author of "The Santiago Campaign," in speaking of the great catarrh remedy, Pe-ru-na, says: "I join with Senators Sullivan, Roach and McEnery in their good opinion of Pe-ru-na. It is recommended to me by those who have used it as an excellent tonic and particularly effective as a cure for catarrh."

United States Senator McEnery.

Hon. S. D. McEnery, United States Senator from Louisiana, says the following in regard to Pe-ru-na:

"Pe-ru-na is an excellent tonic. I have used it sufficiently to say that I believe it to be all that you claim for it.—S. D. McEnery, New Orleans, Louisiana."

Faith in a Superstition.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

READ WHAT A PROMINENT PHYSICIAN
Has to say who has had 35 YEARS of active Practice of Medicine:

I have never before in my 35 years of practice of medicine given my testimonial or recommendation to any patent medicine, but there is a remedy, the result of which has come under my own observation; for there is no Disease which has so baffled the medical skill of all ages as Rheumatism and to find a Reliable remedy for the same. At last we have found it in "5 Drops," manufactured by the Swanson Rheumatic Cure Company, Chicago, Ill. The "5 DROPS," has proven itself wonderful for its curative power in Rheumatism, not as a Temporary Reliever only, but to give a Permanent Cure even in chronic cases. Sometime ago, I had among others several Rheumatic cases under my treatment and prescribed for these patients the very best Remedies which I skillfully selected, but without desirable results. I then heard of "5 DROPS" and of its Wonderful Cures, and prescribed it to a few patients who found relief from its use within a few days. After that I prescribed it to a great number and to my surprise, I will say that in the course of Two or Three Weeks after they had used "5 DROPS" and "5 Drop" Plasters they were Cured. Among these were a few who had, for a number of years, been suffering with Chronic Rheumatism, who had piloted themselves around on Crutches. They came to my office without Crutches and told me they were perfectly Well. They give all the credit to "5 DROPS" and to "5 Drop" Plasters and this is their testimony to the Swanson Rheumatic Cure Company for their kindness and for the conscientious way in which they are placing these Wonderful Remedies among suffering humanity, which they told me to write to the Company as an acknowledgement. As I have seen the Curative Power of "5 DROPS" and "5 Drop" Plasters, in a great many Instances, I can Truly recommend them and also that the firm is perfectly honest and reliable to deal with.

JEFFRIES WINS IT

GETS THE DECISION AT THE END OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH ROUND.

One of the Most Marvelous Fights That Has Ever Taken Place—Desperate Struggle for Pugilistic Supremacy—Jeffries Has the Better of the Fight in the First Two and the Last Three Rounds, During the Other Twenty Sharkey Forced the Issue—Jeffries Loses His Glove in the Last Round.

New York, Nov. 5.—James J. Jeffries retains the championship of the world, Referee George Siler giving him the decision at the end of the twenty-fifth round over Sailor Tom Sharkey at the Coney Island Sporting club last night. It was one of the most marvelous battles that has taken place and the greatest crowd that ever gathered in the Coney Island club house witnessed the desperate struggle for supremacy. In five rounds Jeffries had the better of the fight, in the first two and in the last three. During the other twenty Sharkey forced the issue, and like a bull terrier, was at his man with both hands unceasingly. In those twenty rounds Jeffries' great weight and brawn helped him to hold off the sailor, and in the twenty-second round he swung a couple of vicious upper-cuts that made Sharkey groggy. Tom came back again in the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth, but he was weakened greatly by Jeffries' vicious blows. One minute before the gong sounded to end the fight Jeffries' left glove came off and practically the contest was over. The referee motioned Jeffries to his corner, an American flag was swung around the champions shoulders and the crowd on that side and end of the arena cheered wildly. The crowd on the opposite side and in Sharkey's corner yelled for Sharkey as the men were led back to their dressing rooms.

The thousands of spectators were banked fifty feet high in the building, the place being packed from ringside to rafters, and the aisles around the ring were lined. The tremendous crowd sweated under the glare of 400 arc lights. The heat was intense. The fighters but the spectators shrieked themselves hoarse. It seemed at first as though it would be a short fight, for in the second round Jeffries put the sailor to the ropes with a left to the jaw, and the referee began to call off the seconds as Sharkey knelt on the floor. But in the third round Sharyek, with his vicious swings on the ribs and jaw, kept the crowd on its feet waiting for a knock-out. Jeffries stood the terrible punishment, and, with his eye, ears and nose cut, came back just as vicious in the last three rounds and almost retrieved himself. Then the unsatisfactory end of Jeffries' glove flying off, bringing the fight to an end, although the crowd urged Sharkey to rush in and end it. This he tried to do but Jeffries fought him back and Referee Siler rushed between. It was noticeable that Jeffries used his weight to its best advantage, throwing himself on the sailor, but the latter did his share of the hugging, too, and both were warned repeatedly.

The majority of those at the ringside thought Sharkey would get no worse than a draw, for the sailor fought viciously, always after his man, with good judgment, and outpointed the champion. On the other hand, Jeffries, while he had the better by long odds of the last three rounds, did very little leading in the other twenty-two, and when he led he was either too high or too low, getting in but few good punches.

The decision was not announced from the ring, or, if it was, few heard it, and a great mob surged around for several minutes, yelling and shouting for victor and vanquished.

KEEP THE ISLANDS.

Recommendation of the Philippine Commission.

Washington, Nov. 4.—In accordance with the understanding reached at the conference at the White House Tuesday the Philippine commission yesterday submitted to the president the preliminary report which it had promised to prepare. The report appears to be a compact summary of conditions on the islands as the commission left them; of the historical events which preceded the Spanish war and the internal Filipino insurrection; of the exchange between Admiral Dewey and other American commanders and the insurgents; the breaking out of the present insurrection, and, finally, a statement of the capability of the Filipino for self-government. The feature of the report is a memorandum by Admiral Dewey explaining his relations with Aguinaldo.

The commission is of the opinion that American sovereignty over the archipelago will prove a great political boon to the people, and says:

"Should our power by any fatality be withdrawn the commission believe that the government of the Philippines would speedily lapse into anarchy, which would excuse, if it did not necessitate, the intervention of other powers and the eventual division of the islands among them. Only through American occupation, therefore, is the idea of a free, self-governing and united Philippine commonwealth at all conceivable. And the indispensable need from the Filipino point of view of maintaining American sovereignty over the archipelago is fully recognized by all intelligent Filipinos, and even by those insurgents who desire an American protectorate. The latter, it is true, would take the revenues and leave us the responsibilities. Nevertheless we recognized the indubitable fact that the Philippines cannot stand alone. Thus the welfare of the Filipinos is considered with the dictates of national honor in forbidding our abandonment of the archipelago. We cannot, from any point of view, escape the responsibilities of government which our sovereignty entails. The commission is fully persuaded that the performance of our national duty will prove the greatest blessing to the people of the Philippine islands."

They deny the reports of desecration of churches, the murdering of prisoners and the committing of unmentionable crimes, and say they are glad to declare that the war is the most humane in history.

The commission gives a general view of the value of the islands, their richness in agricultural and forest products, their mineral wealth, and commanding geographical position. It says that the Philippine group should become one of the great trade resorts of the East.

In concluding the report the commission has this to say regarding retention of our control in the islands:

"Our control means giving the inhabitants of the Philippines internal peace and a guarantee against foreign aggression and against the dismemberment of their country, commercial and industrial prosperity and a large share of the reins of government as they shall become fit to take them. When peace and prosperity shall have been established through the archipelago, when education shall have become general, then, in the language of a leading Filipino, his people will, under our guidance, 'become more American than the Americans themselves.'"

The report is signed by J. G. Schurman, George Dewey, Charles Denby, Dean C. Worcester.

AGUINALDO'S PLEA.

Asks His People to be on Their Good Behavior.

Manila, Nov. 4. — Aguinaldo has issued a proclamation announcing that the American congress will meet in December to decide whether the "imperialistic policy" and "this bloody work" are to be continued. He exhorts his followers to conduct themselves so that congress will consider them worthy of independence, and requests the priests to abstain from politics and to redeem the church from the bad name the misdeeds of the friars have given it.

A crisis in the Filipino cabinet is predicted as the result of the resignations of Paterno and Buencamino, two Filipino leaders who have lost the confidence of the rabid revolutionists.

Lieut. Slavens, of Gen. MacArthur's staff, reconnoitering with eighteen men in front of Angeles, discovered a Filipino outpost in a trench. The Filipinos numbered about forty men. As the Filipinos had sighted the Americans, Lieut. Slavens' only course was to charge, and his party rushed to the trench, shooting and yelling. They killed three of the insurgents and wounded several, who, however, succeeded in escaping. Not one of the Americans was hit. The lieutenant secured valuable information about the enemy's position.

The feeling of disquiet aroused at Iloilo by the arrest of Santiago, the wealthy Filipino, who is charged with forming a revolutionary junta, has subsided. The natives in their quarter of the town were restless and were heard chanting the death song at night, with the refrain "The Americans Sleep." A provost marshal's force surrounded the quarters and drove the suspicious looking natives outside the lines. The Americans occupy Iloilo and the adjoining town of Jaro and Molo, with 4,000 men, consisting of the Eighteenth and Twenty-sixth regiments, two battalions of the Nineteenth regiment, a detachment of the Sixth regiment and a battery of the Sixth artillery. The insurgent force is now supposed to be between 500 and 5,000 armed men and many more unarmed. Their lines are about 900 yards from Jaro, which is occupied by the Twenty-sixth regiment. The insurgents are supposed to have five smooth-bore cannon. For a long time past they have been building trenches between Jaro and their stronghold, Santa Barbara, eight miles north.

News of the Northwest

MURDEROUS ASSAULT.

Attempt to Kill a Young Woman on a Crowded Thoroughfare.

St. Paul, Nov. 4.—Miss Julia Wittgraf was the victim of a murderous assault by Moritz Butler shortly before 7 o'clock yesterday morning. Meeting the girl at Wabasha and Seventh streets, Butler fired four shots from a 32-caliber revolver at so short range that it seems little short of marvelous that only two of them took effect in the body of the helpless young woman. Miss Wittgraf fell unconscious in the street and Butler was about to fire upon her a fifth time when he was seized by Patrolman James White. Miss Wittgraf was taken to the city hospital, where it is said that she will recover. The cause of the murderous attempt is not altogether clear either from the story of the victim or the statements of her assailant. Miss Wittgraf says that the fellow persistently annoyed her with his attentions without any encouragement from her. Butler, on the other hand, said that the girl had obtained from him nearly all his wages by her pretences of love for him.

WORSE AND WORSE.

Grow the Consequences of the Wisconsin Student Riot.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 4.—Public indignation over the scandalous night-shirt escapade of the university students Monday evening grows as additional circumstances come to light. Not only is but little of the stolen linen of the girls being returned, and that little usually ruined and accompanied by the cards of innocent parties, but it develops that a great many of the private rooms of the girls were broke into and stripped of jewelry, crockery, books and cushions. Indignant parents are threatening criminal prosecution if the guilty parties can be located. The faculty is moving very secretly in the matter, but an earthquake is momentarily expected.

Duluth, Minn., Nov. 4.—The Clark & Jackson sawmill at New Duluth was burned. The loss to the mill was total, but all the lumber stocks were saved except 200,000 lath. The mill was valued at $50,000 and insured for $41,000. The lumber carried an insurance of $100,000. The mill will doubtless be rebuilt, but on a larger scale and nearer the center of the city. The company controls very large lumber tracts.

He said that he had found the Western posts he had visited satisfactory.

Kenosha, Wis., Nov. 4. — The heavy storm on Lake Michigan for the last thirty-six hours has done an immense amount of damage at this point. The North pier light and the elevated walk to the light are washed away and the harbor is in darkness.

Vancouver, B. C., Nov. 4.—A special from Sandon, B. C., says: The strike in the Slocan country has reached a crisis and the silver lead mine owners' association has commenced importing Italian laborers from Pacific coast states. TOOK THIRTY-SEVEN LIVES.

A Garrotte From Manila Prison Presented to Minnesota Historical Society.

St. Paul, Nov. 5.—To the generosity of Maj. Ed S. Bean the Minnesota Historical society is indebted for some unique, valuable and interesting additions to its collection. Surely a garrotte which is officially guilty of taking the lives of thirty-seven victims of Spanish misrule in the Philippines, and a pair of fourteen-pound leg irons which had been worn for twenty years by a prisoner in Bilibid, are worthy of a place in the collection. The garotte and the irons and a nipa house now occupy a prominent place in the rooms of the society. The house is a very clever piece of workmanship, and Maj. Bean says is a fair specimen of Luzon architecture. There are also some papers containing prison records indicating the astonishing degree of lightness with which the Spanish authorities dealt with human life.

REDUCED RATES.

Compliance With Orders of the Wisconsin Railroad Commissioner.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 5. — Railroad Commissioner Rice this morning received a letter from the Chicago & Northwestern railroad saying that they would comply with the order to reduce rates from various points in the state to Milwaukee. The new rates as ordered by the railroad commissioner will go into effect Nov. 15. It is expected that the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road will also comply with the order about the same time.

Yes, He's Smooth.

Yankton, S. D., Nov. 5.—A handkerchief fakir has been imposing on the good will of the Yankton people the last day or so and has carried away with him a good sum of money which he easily obtained from the unsuspecting. After gaining admittance to a house or store he would display his wares with a flourish and in a smooth manner tell of the superiority of his stock while he made a heap of them on the table, winding up by saying that they could have the pile for a dollar. If the prospective purchaser hesitated he would throw more handkerchiefs on the pile, and still more, when they would usually come to the conclusion that they were getting a bargain and pay the dollar, only to find on the peddler's departure that the large pile contained from fifteen to eighteen handkerchiefs of questionable quality.

Mystery in Anoka County.

Anoka, Minn., Nov. 5. —The authorities of Anoka county are somewhat mystified over the finding of the dead body of a man alongside the main wagon road near Coon creek. There have been several important burglaries in that section lately, and some advance the theory that deceased was one of the gang of robbers who was killed in the course of a fight over a divy of the spoils. This is a mere surmise, however. The sheriff is investigating the case. There were no marks of violence on the body.

Death of Russell McCord.

Minneapolis, Nov. 5.—Russell B. McCord, one of the best known traveling salesmen in the state, died yesterday of heart failure, superinduced by an abcess at the base of the brain. Last spring he went to Baltimore in the effort to regain his health, but suffered a relapse recently.

His Story-Writing Retreat Gone.

Minneapolis, Nov. 5. — Capt. Frank Hatch, the well known short story writer of Chicago, is at the Nicollet. Capt. Hatch owned the famous "Saint's Rest" at Lake Pulaski, Minn. This camp burned Thursday night. The loss on personal effects and articles of little intrinsic worth, but which the captain valued very highly, was considerable. The camp will be rebuilt.

Beets in Jeopardy.

Winona, Minn., Nov. 5. — The beet growers in this vicinity fear that they will lose much of their product by frost, owing to the fact that there is a great scarcity of cars, and the factory has issued orders so that only one car of beets is shipped each day. Nearly all of the beets here are now out of the ground, and the crop has been a very good one.

Boy Killed by Cars.

Winona, Minn., Nov. 5. — Vincent Gliszczmowyski, a five-year-old boy, had both legs cut off by a Milwaukee train at this place yesterday. DAY DEFENDS HIS CHARGE.

Ticket Seller at a Duluth Football Game Found Beaten and Unconscious at His Post.

Duluth, Minn., Nov. 7.—During the progress of the football game between the elevens from Ironwood and Duluth high school at the fair grounds, unknown men attacked Rene Hugo, a high school boy in charge of the ticket office. The boy was found unconscious by Ald. Barnes. One hand was thrust in his coat pocket, the other in his trousers pocket. In each was money, and he had clung to it with a desperation that may yet cost him his life. He was partially aroused, and kept crying, "Where's Claypool?" Claypool is manager of the local eleven. Claypool finally appeared, whereupon the sufferer gave up the proceeds of the day's sale and immediately lost consciousness. He had been beaten on the head.

OFFICER FATALLY HURT.

Affair at Albert Lea That Will Result in Murder.

Albert Lea, Minn., Nov. 7. — Special policeman J. J. Randall is lying at the point of Death, the result of a blow on the head administered by C. B. Wing. Wing's son, about twenty-five years of age, was ordered to be taken to the hospital, as he had smallpox, and Officer Randall went to execute the order of the board of health to remove him, but the parents of the young man resisted. The mother is said to have struck him with a club and the father seized an iron poker and struck the officer on the head, inflicting a wound in the scalp that had to be sewed up, but the injury was not deemed dangerous. Later Randall became unconscious and has not yet recovered, the result of a blood clot on the brain, and physicians say he cannot live. Wing has been arrested and his wife will also be arrested.

He was thrown several rods, struck by flying pieces of iron and cut to pieces. Engineer Charles Ahlstrom was thrown ten rods from the engine and was picked up unconscious. He lived only two hours. LABOR IS SCARCE.

Lumbermen Cannot Find Enough Men for Logging.

The lumbermen around Bemidji are having some difficulty in procuring laborers for the woods. Not enough men have returned from the Dakota threshing fields and the Montana railway work to make a surplus for the woods, and every train is diligently canvassed by the competing loggers to catch the chopper and driver as he comes into the country. S. C. Bagley, the oldest active logger in Northern Minnesota, keeps an employment agency at work here constantly, and is diligently striving to get his camps under way. He will cut 20,000,000 feet for T. B. Walker. Lammers Bros. & O'Brien, who are logging on the Clearwater, keep agents on the trains between here and Grand Forks, and are succeeding fairly well in getting men. None of the loggers are offering extravagant wages, as their contracts were taken on a hard-times basis, and prosperity prices rather surprise them. However, every Great Northern train from the West brings in from fifty to one hundred men, and it is fair to anticipate a fair supply by the time chopping actually begins.

Notwithstanding the fact that there is comparatively little government or homestead land in the section of country around Bemidji, settlers continue to pour in from all parts of Minnesota and Iowa, and are now taking up the cut-over white pine lands of Northern Hubbard and Southern Beltrami counties, for which local men are agents. These lands are, many of them, of first-class quality, and are sold at low prices and on long time. Those of inferior quality will probably be donated by their owners to the state for park purposes, under the forestry act of 1899, as the poorer lands are covered with a growth of young Norway pine.

Secretary J. K. Bennett has announced the programme for the Minnesota Buttermakers' association meeting, to be held in Owatonna Nov. 8 and 9. The address of welcome will be made by Mayor L. Virtue of Owatonna and the response by Secretary Bennett of Clinton Falls. A novel feature of the programme is a paper by Expert Frank B. Blair of Chicago, Ill., on "The Care and Use of Separators." Among other speakers of the convention will be Prof. T. L. Haecker, of the University of Minnesota. Charles I. Knight, secretary of the National Dairy Union of Chicago; B. D. The sessions of the conventions will be held in the court house. On Wednesday evening the city of Owatonna will banquet the buttermakers. The election of officers will take place on Thursday evening.

COURT AT MORRIS.

Dragged Along for Two Weeks—Few Cases of Importance.

After a two weeks' session the district court closed at Morris, several cases being carried over till the spring term. A year ago the session was so short that one of the local papers congratulated the community upon the progress that such a condition indicated, but now we are back in the ordinary routine. All last week was engaged in small criminal cases, all of which might as well have been settled in a day or two. Ernest and Charles Miller, accused of stealing wheat, were acquitted; Ed O'Donnell, charged with having taken money from Galvin, was declared not guilty; J. W. Pusher and August Renke, assault cases, were dismissed; Joe and Paul Arnold, indicted for having ducked and taken $47 from a Jew peddler named Arier, were acquitted; Rawson, who stole Anderson's bicycle, was declared guilty of petit larceny. In civil cases, Asa McDonald was given a verdict of $150 damages for a road run through his place before he had purchased it; Robert Dekkhunt won against the Minneapolis Threshing company and W. P. Fowler gained his contention for a credit on his account with the Otto Gas Engine company.

PIPESTONE'S NEW EDIFICE.

The contract for erecting the new Presbyterian church building at Pipestone was let to Pass & Schippel of Mankato. The structure will be entirely of stone and the inside furnishing will be the handsomest in this section. The total cost will be upward of $10,000. It is probable that the work will progress no farther this fall than getting stone on the grounds. The contract calls for the completion of the work by July 1, 1900.

Jay Needham of Pipestone, who has several times before been confined for short terms in the insane asylum at St. Peter, was taken there again. He was adjudged insane by the examining board and his case is now considered incurable. At the depot he offered desperate resistance and was with difficulty placed aboard the train.

THE ELECTIONS

AND THEIR BEARING ON THE ISSUES OF 1900.

Unbiased Review—Ohio's Significant Minority Contrasted With the Magnificent Nebraska Victory—Imperialism the Great, Burning Issue—Mr. Bryan's Over-Towering Personal Strength. Hon. C. A. Towne's Conspicuous Part. State Political Points—Anti-Imperialism Organized in Minnesota on Strictly Non-Partisan Lines—More Trouble About That Republican "Orgm"—Note and Comment of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau.
St. Paul, Nov. 13, 1899.

An important review of election results is in every way encouraging to the reform forces. Such unbiased review is necessary in order to counteract the usual misrepresentation of the facts, which in this case has been done with unusual ingenuity. This will appear in the following reviews of the four principal states.

Beginning with Ohio, our friends, the enemy, made the comparisons with certain former years when the state had gone Democratic, or cast the smallest Republican majorities, such years as those preceding presidential years, or otherwise known as "off years." Does anybody believe this was an "off year," when vital questions were up, and especially that of endorsement of the Ohio president. Therefore the comparison must be with later or Republican years. Nash has something like 50,000 plurality, whereas Bushnell, the present Republican governor received 67,000 when elected two years ago. Then the vote was some 200,000 less than has now been cast. The change against the Republicans has therefore been enormous. But farther. Two years ago there was but about 23,000 minority or third party vote, whereas now Jones has received fully 100,000. This is estimated to be at least three-fourths from the Democrats, in the large cities. All of the Jones vote is to be added to the McLean vote on the protest against Hannaism and Imperialism. Jones' campaign was distinctly anti-McKinley, and in his address since election, he hopes that what he has done will contribute to forcing a halt in the wicked and un-American Philippine policy. The result, therefore, is that instead of winning a victory in Ohio, the McKinley administration is snowed under by more than the Nash plurality over McLean—or at least 60,000 to 70,000 votes!

Take Nebraska: All reports agree that in the closing and effective parts of the campaign, the chief figures of which were Mr. Bryan and Mr. Towne, the issue turned almost entirely upon the administration's policy. Of course endorsement of Mr. Bryan and his position upon all issues was co-incident to it, but Mr. Towne himself states that the question of imperialism was the burning one to which the public never tired of listening. The magnificent majority there, mounting up to almost 20,000, is the increase over the meagre fusion majority for governor last year of 2,721, and over the 13,000 given Mr. Bryan in '96.

Entirely misleading is the statement that the Republicans made little effort in that state. The testimony is that they made the fight of their lives there. There was a schoolhouse campaign made all over the state. Unprecedented amounts of money were sent there and everything done, in the Republican power, to weaken Mr. Bryan's hold upon his home state. The victory is greater and more magnificent on that account, which is beyond question.

As to Kentucky: Misleading comparisons have been made when Kentucky was Democratic, going back to 1875. It is deemed a Republican victory, that in an unprecedented factional fight, the Republicans may have elected a governor, though that is not yet certain, but if so, they have merely succeeded through Democratic division in maintaining what McKinley secured in '96. But the fact is, there is nothing discouraging in Kentucky situation from the fact that both of the warring Democratic factions are pledged to Mr. Bryan and the regular organization next year. It is quite sufficient if, as is believed to be the case, the legislature is all right for Senator Blackburn.

New Jersey, if 20,000 Republican, but reaffirms her position as a Republican state, since she went 16,750 Republican in '98, and gave McKinley only 87,000 in '96. Let her go and stay in welcome, with her whole trust brood.

With regard to Maryland. Here again misleading comparisons are made. The comparison must be with the recent gubernatorial election, when the Republicans carried the state. The fact that the Democrats have this year exceeded 15,000 shows that Maryland has returned to the fold to stay.

The same comments would apply to all the other principal states. But it is unnecessary to itemize. New York has done no more than to return the small Republican plurality given Roosevelt in '98. National issues were not fought there to any extent, yet the 17,000 or 18,000 plurality this year must be compared with the McKinley 200,000 in '96. Massachusetts gives 65,000 this year, against the 83,000 given the present governor in '98, while in Boston, where the imperialist question was made a distinct issue, the Republicans were routed horse, foot and dragoons.

It was gratifying to the friends of Hon. C. A. Towne that he was in the tremendous campaign made in Nebraska. They well know that he did his full part. Mr. Towne himself says that the meetings there were such as he never before saw in a campaign. The people came many miles through the country, and imperialism was the theme that most deeply interested them. He pays a great tribute to the intelligence of the people of Mr. Bryan's state and their loyalty to their beloved statesman is almost one of reverence. As above stated, the Republicans made their utmost efforts to save Nebraska, hoping thereby to save themselves from the campaign they dreaded so much next year, with Mr. Bryan at the head of the united reform forces.

It is learned from Mr. Towne that Mr. Bryan has stood the ordeal of this tremendous campaign and his labors of the past year, very well, but that upon the earnest solicitation of friends, Mr. Bryan will take a surcease for a time, and will probably spend the winter quietly in some portion of the south, probably Texas.

The Democratic national committee is called to meet November 20, at Chicago. It is hoped that active work for next year's campaign will then be inaugurated.

The organization of the Anti-Imperialist League in Minnesota has been an event of the week, Hon. Edwin Burritt Smith, chairman of the executive committee of the National League, Chicago, having been here for that purpose. Mr. Smith gave very encouraging report of progress of the anti-imperialists, stating that within the past 40 or 50 days, upwards of 100 branches of the league have been organized. The national name is American Anti-Imperialist League. The Boston, or parent league, has become the New England branch of the American. It is probable that the Northwestern states will be organized into the Northwestern League, the headquarters of which would be at Minneapolis or St. Paul.

The Minneapolis anti-imperialists will soon hold a public mass meeting which will probably be addressed by Prof. Freeman of Wisconsin university, with other speakers of note. This meeting, however, will in no way conflict with the coming Jackson Day banquet and mass meeting under the auspices of the Young Men's League of Democratic clubs which Mr. Bryan will attend. In fact the anti-imperialists are to act entirely independent of partisan politics.

Some of our Republican friends are troubled about the bureau suggestion of election "earthquakes." Well, Ohio thrown into a 60,000 to 70,000 minority is one, Maryland reclaimed, another, while if Nebraska is not an earthquake, what is it? But after all the real, sure-thing earthquake will be next year, when Bryan goes in.

And, regarding funerals. There's Hanna's. Good bye old dollar mark. You will be missed, but not mourned.

To be or not to be Eustaced, is the question Rob Evans is considering.

A glance at eastern newspaper news suggests that there is not so very great difference between gold newspaper prosperity and that of 55-cent wheat and 5-cent cotton. In Philadelphia the old Philadelphia Record is about to go for $1,500,000 under the hammer, when its value was never placed lower than $5,000,000—part of the Singerly estate. There is a receiver for the Utica, N. Y., Herald, also suspension of publication of Harpers' Round Table. A distressingly dull market is reported for jokes for the funny papers—significantly appropriate. There is an oppressive boycott of the New York Sun by the trades labor unions, and application of The Sun to the courts for relief by the injunction route. This, with 20 per cent money on Wall street, makes a "public" situation quite up to the gold standard notch.

The recent national bank statement throws light on 20 to 40 per cent money in the channels where money should be plenty. For while loans and discounts increased $210,000,000 in the year ending September, '99, individual deposits increased $120,000,000. That is, money went into hiding in the banks, rather than into business.

John Sherman was the author of the anti-trust law, and what did the Hanna party do to John Sherman?

The number of those who dispute Governor Lind's proposition that the volunteer soldier carries a conscience as well as a gun, are growing beautifully less.

After two short years of the gold standard, Chile cries "Hold, enough." Curtis, in the Chicago Record, says that wages have decreased from 20 to 35 per cent, with a corresponding reduction in the purchasing power of incomes of the entire population of Chile. Valparaiso is on the front edge of a panic, the same as almost constantly confronts Wall street.

President McKinley in 1899:—"I confidently believe congress will provide for these people (Philippines) a government that will bring them blessings and advance their material interests."

King George III. in 1776:—"One parliament will provide for these colonists (American) a government that will fully protect all their interests."

And what did George Washington say?

Grover Cleveland, on McKinley Imperialism:

"The use of power in the extension of American institutions presents an inconsistency whose evils and dangerous tendency ought to be apparent to all who love these institutions and understand their motives and purposes."

AT IT IN EARNEST

HEAVY BOMBARDMENT OF LADYSMITH NOW PROCEEDING.

Locality of the Town Nothing but a Huge Cauldron of Smoke—British Heavy Naval Guns Are Believed to Be Active in the Defense—Signs of Greatly Increased Boer Activity in Natal and Along the Western Frontier—Shortage of Food Around Ladysmith May Compel the Boers to Abandon the Siege.

Estcourt, Natal, Nov. 14. — Heavy firing is now proceeding in the direction of Ladysmith. It began at daybreak. Some reports are so much heavier than any previously heard as to lend to a general belief that the British heavy naval guns are again active. The safe arrival at Ladysmith of Lieut. Smith, of the Fifth Lancers, shows that communication with the garrison is possible. He was anxious to join his regiment and started hence, accompanied by a Natal policeman. They succeeded in traversing the Boer lines.

A party which rode out several miles about noon to observe the bombardment of Ladysmith, could see "Long Tom," a forty-pounder posted on the railway side of Bulawar, firing at intervals of six to eight minutes. Another gun was observed in operation a little distance away. Puffs of smoke were discernible on the opposite side, showing that Ladysmith was withstanding a big bombardment. The locality of the town was nothing but a huge cauldron of smoke.

Increased Boer Activity.

London, Nov. 14.—There are signs of increased Boer activity in Natal and along the western frontier. All the dispatches tend to show that the British are holding out ably. Col. Baden-Powell reports that all was well at Mafeking on Nov. 6. Ladysmith's latest date is Nov. 9. While nothing adverse is heard from the latter point and confidence is felt in Gen. White's ability—previous experience having shown that the Boer artillery is not very effective—it is borne in mind to be proved that acquisition of artillery, which has destroyed the former mobility of the British forces, has also failed to give them any compensating advantage. On the contrary the reverse is the case. It is held here that if the Boers had not been hampered by the transport of heavy guns and their rescue from tight places Gen. Joubert might ere this have been in Pietermaritzburg. Unless the Boer heavy artillery justifies itself by reducing Ladysmith, it will again hamper him in the eventual retreat from Natal when Gen. Buller sends the relieving force. It is believed that the Boer retreat will be made over the Drakensburg range into the Zoutspansburg district, where every preparation for provisioning and maintaining the Boers is said to have been made for the last stand and where it will be difficult to dislodge them. Already it is rumored that they are in straits for food around Ladysmith, and may, therefore, be obliged to abandon the siege.

Boers Were Driven Off.

London, Nov. 14.—The following has been received by the war office from the general commanding at Cape Town, dated Sunday afternoon: "Col. Plumer is reported to have had a successful engagement near Tull on Oct. 20. The enemy renewed the attack, but with ammunition much damaged by rain and finally drew off, not pressing the attack. Maj. Hollawell wires by way of Kuraman that on Oct. 27. Mafeking was safe. The Boers have a ninety-four-pounder but the gun is doing little damage."

Boers Repulsed at Mafeking.

London, Nov. 14.—The following dispatch from Col. Baden-Powell, commander at Mafeking, dated Oct. 25, and forwarded by Gen. Buller, was posted by the war office: "All is well here. After two days shelling and a heavy bombardment, a body of the enemy made a general attack on three sides of the town, which was repulsed by our Maxim fire. The enemy is now drawing off. Our casualties were slight. Lieut. Llewellyn, with several armored trains, drove off the enemy at Crocodile Pool on Wednesday, killing eight."

HOBART STEADILY IMPROVES.

His Wife Very Much Encouraged at His Condition.

Paterson, N. J., Nov. 14.—Vice President Hobart passed a favorable night and the improvement that has been observed for several days continued yesterday. He ate solid food with relish and it promptly assimilated. With his meals he took milk and between meals was given milk punches. This is a marked change from his condition ten days ago. At that time he was rapidly sinking and his stomach had refused food of all kinds. For several days he lived on grapes and the juice of grape fruit, but it soon appeared that his stomach was so congested that he could not even take these. Mr. Hobart now spends most of his time in a reclining position, and he sleeps without the aid of opiates. The most painful and alarming feature of his illness has been his attacks of nervousness as night approaches. These attacks have decreased. Mrs. Hobart, who has spent nearly every minute of her time during the past two weeks at the bedside of her husband, is feeling very much encouraged and secures more rest than formerly.

KENTUCKY UNCERTAIN.

Official Count Is Still on and Both Sides Are Confident.

Louisville, Nov. 14. — The second week of uncertainty regarding the result of the balloting for governor of Kentucky begins with little prospect of immediate relief. The official count has been in progress for two days and official returns from a large majority of the 119 counties have narrowed the contest down to a nose finish. Each side claims the election of its ticket, but the estimated plurality of either side does not exceed 3,000. While the returns so far received favor Taylor the result of the count may hinge on the decision given by the county election commissioners in several places where contests have been begun on the ground of alleged irregularities.

He is now lying in the Norwegian hospital at Brooklyn, unconscious, and it is said that the chances of his recovery are doubtful. Several arrests were made yesterday, and others will be made to-day. Fox has not yet been arrested.

TARLAC CAPTURED.

Filipino Stronghold Occupied Without Opposition.

Manila, Nov. 14.—Col. Bell's regiment and a small force of cavalry entered Tarlac last night without opposition. Where Aguinaldo, with his army and the so-called government have fled, is a mystery.

Communication with distant points is impossible except by means of the government wire, which is crowded with official business. Gen. MacArthur took Bamban Saturday. This is supposed to be the strongest position held by the Filipinos, except Tarlac. The brief account of the engagement received indicate that the rebels fought according to their recent tactics, retreating after firing a few volleys. One officer of the Thirty-sixth regiment is the only American reported killed.

Gen. MacArthur began his advance at daylight. Col. Smith, with the Seventeenth regiment on the right; Maj. Bell's command and the Thirty-sixth on the left and the Ninth in the center. Col. Smith encountered a small force at 6 o'clock, easily dispersing the rebels. Maj. Bell secured a position on the mountain, from which he poured an enfilading fire from rifles and Hotchkiss guns upon the first line of the enemy's trenches. The Filipinos stood the fire for twenty minutes and then retreated to the mountains. Gen. MacArthur entered Bamban at 10 o'clock and Col. Smith occupied Capas, the first town beyond.

Gen. Lawton's headquarters are still at Cabanatuan. Gen. Young, with his cavalry and infantry, is still pushing ahead through the fearful mud, but his exact whereabouts is not known.

A TERRIBLE BATTLE.

Puerto Cabello Surrendered by Gen. Parades.

Puerto Cabello, Venez., Nov. 14. — Gen. Parades, former commander in the army of ex-President Andrade, who had refused the demand made upon him by Gen. Castro and the de facto authorities to surrender the town, even when this was reinforced by the request of the British, American, French, German and Dutch commanders, surrendered yesterday morning after a terrible battle. The aspect of the city is one of ruin and devastation, and it is estimated that upward of 650 persons were killed or wounded during the fighting.

Dr. Braisted, of the United States cruiser Detroit, and the other surgeons of the various warships in the harbor, are ministering to the wants of the wounded. Gen. Ramon Guerrera began a land attack upon the town and the position of Gen. Parades on Friday night. Desultory fighting continued until Saturday morning about 4 o'clock, and then a fierce struggle ensued. Gen. Parades made a stubborn defense, but Gen. Guerrera forced an entrance into the town at 5 o'clock Saturday. As early as 8 o'clock Sunday morning the fleet arrived and began a bombardment, but the range was too great and the firing proved ineffective. Gen. Parades held the fort on the hill and Fort Liberador until yesterday morning.

Of the many attempts to establish cheap and attractive homes for self-supporting women, some have failed because the cost of living was too high for the class most in need of such advantages, others because the rules were too strict and the "institutional" character too pronounced. The Brooklyn Home for Business Women seems to have avoided both difficulties. It furnishes food, lodging, laundry and medical attendance for $3.50 a week, and is a "home" in fact as well as in name. There is a matron, but her attitude toward the lodgers is that of a hostess and house-mother rather than that of a guardian. There are no rules about rising or retiring. The lodgers preserve their individuality, and enjoy all the rights and privileges they would have in a private lodging-house. That they appreciate these advantages is shown by the fact that the home is self-supporting. There ought to be such institutions in every large city, and there is no reason why there should not be.

Consul Atwell at Roubaix, France, reports a decrease in French wheat crop over last year. The provisional figures from France show a crop of 346,600,554 bushels this year, against a crop of 372,049,474 bushels in 1898. This is a falling off of 25,098,963 bushels from last year, but an increase of 34,741,590 bushels over the mean production of the last ten years, which is figured at 379,321,975 bushels. Taking the general needs of consumption in France at 380,158,000 bushels, the crop will meet the demand, if accounts be taken of the exceptionally abundant crop of last year, which has left a large unconsumed stock of old wheat available at present. The probable importation is figured at 4,255,500 bushels. This will probably be confined to hard wheat, which is not grown in France in sufficient quantity to meet the needs of manufacturers of alimentary pastes. The production of the world at large for 1899 is estimated by French statisticians at 2,526,000,500 bushels, against 2,807,076,700 bushels for last year, a decrease of 291,076,200 bushels.

The number of persons employed by the railways of the United States, as reported on June 30, 1898, was 874,558, which is equivalent to 474 employes per 100 miles of line. As compared with the number of employes for the previous year, there was an increase of 51,082. The number of employes on June 30, 1898, was 956 in excess of the number on June 30, 1893, and 89,524 in excess of the number on June 30, 1895. The employes of railways, as reported to the commission, are divided into 18 classes. It thus appears that on June 30, 1898, there were in the employ of the railways 37,939 enginemen, 38,925 firemen, 26,876 conductors, and 66,968 other trainmen. There were 47,124 switchmen, flagmen and watchmen. A distribution of employes conforming to the four general subdivisions of operating expenses shows that the services of 32,431 employes were required for general administration, or 18 per 100 miles of line; 261,866 for maintenance of way and structures, or 142 per 100 miles of line; 171,600 for maintenance of equipment, or 93 per 100 miles of line.

The death-rate in Cuba has this year been far lower than the average, and the death-rate from the island's greatest scourge, yellow fever, has been only about half as high as the lowest ever before recorded. Such facts are not one whit less creditable to our army and administration than the most gallant conduct on the battlefield.

Were it not for his ability to make black appear white his satanical majesty would soon have to retire from business.

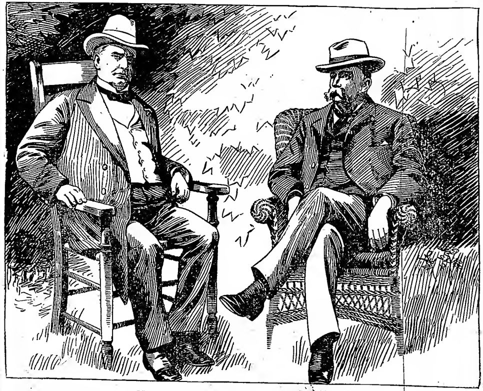
McKINLEY AND HOBART ARE CLOSE FRIENDS.

President and Vice-President Recently Sat For This Picture.

Almost without exception, from the days of Washington and Adams to the present time, there has been friction between our presidents and vice-presidents, sometimes to the extent of severing social relations. It would be necessary to go back a good many years to find a president and vice-president who for any considerable period of time were upon such pleasant terms as McKinley and Hobart have been and are still. Their nomination in 1896 was the first occasion upon which they had been brought into close relationship with each other, and from that day to this they have been warm friends. Of course they have differed in opinion as to matters of party or administration policy, or at least as to the details of such policies, but there is good authority for the statement that there has never been a falling out in consequence thereof.



PRESIDENT M'KINLEY AND VICE-PRESIDENT HOBART.

Socially a charming intimacy exists between these two men. Politically each has full faith in the other. During Mr. McKinley's visit at Mr. Hobart's summer home in the latter part of August, the former's unaffected showing of warm personal regard for the latter left a delightful impression upon the minds of all who observed it. A gentleman who was the guest of the vice-president during the time of the president's visit says: "I believe I saw McKinley and Hobart at their best. There was no lack of dignity on the part of either, yet to me there was little suggestion of the politician or statesman. For the time being they were free of all official restraint and might have passed for college chums renewing the attachments of long ago."

On several occasions President McKinley and Vice-President Hobart have sat together for their portraits, which is something unusual if you stop to think of it. It has long been a custom for presidents and their cabinets to be photographed in groups, but as a rule the president has seemed to fight shy of sitting before the camera with the vice-president.

The picture shown herewith was taken at Mr. Hobart's summer villa in August. The portraits of the president and vice-president are their latest.

A Museum of Time Pieces.

In the town of Schramberg, in the Black Forest district of Wurtemberg, Germany, where one of the chief industries is that of clock making, there has recently been established a remarkable museum of timepieces. Among the curiosities are many of great historical value. There is an alarm clock constructed in 1680 for the use of travelers. In form it resembles a lantern and the interior is designed to hold a lighted candle. The candle is slowly pushed upward by a spring, which also controls the mechanism of the clock. A little pair of shears clips the wick automatically every minute to regulate its light. The lantern is enclosed with movable slides, so that the sleeper is not at first disturbed by the presence of light. The alarm is set by inserting a peg in the second dial-plate. When the required hour arrives the alarm is sounded and at the same moment the moveable sides fall, flooding the room with light.

Married After Many Years.

A romance, which began some fifty years ago came to a climax recently when Miss Ella Cable became the wife of James Ketchum, at Matteawan, N. Y. The couple were schoolmates, and as they developed into manhood and womanhood they became almost inseparable. Some petty quarrel arose, and the friendship was broken. Ketchum left Dutchess county, and word came that he had chosen a wife in a far off state. Ella Cable developed into a handsome woman, still she never married. She lived at Glenham with her mother. She is now well toward 60 years of age. During her spare moments she has paid visits to the General hospital, where she has read to and otherwise comforted the patients. Last winter a man was brought to the hospital suffering with frozen feet. Gangrene developed, and for weeks it was thought the patient would die. The patient was James Ketchum, who had returned to his native county. Miss Cable nursed him, but neither recognized the other. When the patient was convalescent they became confidential, and the facts came out. Ketchum was free to marry as was the woman. He was discharged from the hospital, but walks on crutches, as he always will, the physicians say. Preparations for a wedding were at once begun, and in their own cottage at Matteawan they were married.

PRETTY CUSTOMS.

Indulged In After a Wedding to Entertain Guests.

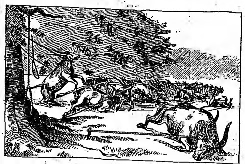
Chicago Record: Lately at a prominent wedding at Stamford, Conn., the breakfast was served on the lawn, under the trees and by the lake. The bride, just before leaving the guests and still in her shimmering white gown, was surrounded by her bridesmaids. By one of them she was blindfolded, and they then danced around in a ring as she threw her bouquet. Within its center was hidden a ring, and the girl that caught the flowers was said to be predestined by fate to be the next bride. The custom is a German one, but loses nothing by crossing the great sea, and is unusually pretty when practiced amid such gay surroundings. Many brides now choose to drive off with the groom for their honeymoon in a small, open trap, drawn by some pet horse of their own, instead of shutting themselves up in the formidable coach of not so very long ago. Surely this is starting life's journey more pleasantly. One gay young bride was recently heard to say that nothing would induce her not to go with her pony to the station on her wedding day. That she should at least have the consciousness of holding the reins at the beginning. In this instance there was also a tinge of the pathetic about this little journey, as the man she had chosen was not a Croesus, and afterward the pony was to be sold. It was therefore her last drive with him. A number of little novelties have lately appeared at the breakfasts, and they greatly help out the fun. On the sideboard or in the hall there are piled up innumerable little white satin bags. They are shaped like meal bags and contain a handful of rice. Each guest takes one with the wedding cake, and he is therefore prepared to contribute his share to the veritable shower of rice that falls upon the departing pair. Some special good fortune is said to hang over the thrower if the rice from his hand actually alights on the bride. Dainty white satin slippers filled with rice and queer little shoes are among the table decorations and favors. At Tuxedo not long ago a beautiful girl was married on the veranda. It had truly been transformed into a bower by the use of smilax and palms, and the entire festivity was out of doors. When she and the groom drove off the band played "Just One Girl," and the chorus was heartily joined in by almost every voice present.

WHEN FASTING IS FATAL.

Loss of Weight Below a Certain Point Brings Death.

During a long fast the daily loss of weight becomes gradually less and less. Death comes when the fatal loss has reached a certain percentage, which percentage varies with the original weight. Fat animals may lose half their weight; thinner ones perhaps two-fifths. A man or woman of rather spare build, weighing 143 pounds, could, therefore, lose about fifty-five pounds before succumbing. Heart action, respiration and blood pressure remain unaltered during starvation, but the temperature of the body falls nearly a degree in most cases. The secretion of gastric juice ceases, but saliva and bile are still formed. The duration of life depends upon the extent and activity of the physiological processes. Children die after a fast of from three to five days, during which they have lost a quarter of their weight. Healthy adults, however, have fasted sixty days when water has been taken. Dr. Schaeffer, a German physician, notes the case of a woman, aged 47, who, died after a fast of forty-three days, during which she drank water freely. Her weight, which was 143 pounds a year before her death, was reduced to ninety-nine pounds. It was a case of suicidal melancholia, and the woman patiently carried out her horrible undertaking so quietly as to scarcely attract the notice of her family, and died at fast calmly and peacefully, without complaint or apparent evidence of suffering.—San Francisco Examiner.

NOOSING WILD BUFFALOES IN CEYLON.



The Ceylon buffalo, unless caught very young, and trained very carefully, is difficult to tame. The haunts of the buffalo in the wild state are in the eastern part of the island, where there are extensive grassy plains. When wild animals are needed to replenish the stock of tame beasts a curious device is made use of to catch them. Large nooses made of stout jungle rope are suspended from the creepers on the outskirts of a patch of forest, and the beaters drive the herd from the shade of the forest into the open ground. In rushing out the buffaloes get their necks entangled in the nooses, and are thus easily captured.

A LEPER COLONY.

How Robber Louis Stevenson Wrote of One.

I have seen sights that cannot be told, and heard stories that cannot be repeated; yet I never admired my poor race so much nor (strange as it may seem) loved life more than in the settlement. A horror of moral beauty broods over the place; that's like bad Victor Hugo, but it is the only way I can express the sense that lived with me all these days. And this even though it was in great part Catholic, and my sympathies flew never with so much difficulty as toward Catholic virtues. The pass-book kept with heaven stirs me to anger and laughter. One of the sisters calls the place "the ticket-office to heaven." Well, what is the odds? They do their part, and do it with kindness and efficiency incredible; and we must take folk's virtues as we find them, and love the better part. Of old Damien, whose weaknesses and worse perhaps I heard fully, I think only the more. It was a European peasant; dirty, bigoted, untruthful, unwise, tricky, but superb with generosity, residual candor, and fundamental good humor; convince him he had done wrong (it might take hours of insult) and he would undo what he had done and like his corrector better. A man with all the grime and paltriness of mankind, but a saint and hero all the more for that. The place as regards scenery is grand, gloomy and bleak. Mighty mountain walls descending sheer along the whole face of the island into a sea unusually deep; the front of the mountain ivied and furred with clinging forest, one iridescent cliff; about half-way from east to west, the low, bare stony promontory edged in between the cliff and the ocean; the two little towns (Kalawao and Kalaupapa) seated on either side of it, as bare almost as bathing machines upon a beach; and the population—gorgons and chimeras dire. All this tear of the nerves I bore admirably; and the day after I got away, rode twenty miles along the opposite coast and up into the mountains; they call it twenty. I am doubtful of the figures.—From "The Letters of Robert Louis Stevenson," in Scribner's.

Historic Walls in Paris Fall.

From a Paris Letter: Placards are about to be posted up announcing the destruction of all that remains of the Palais de l'Industrie, in the Champs Elysees. When these few yards of buildings have been swept away the last vestige of the first great international exhibition will have disappeared. The work is expected to be begun in October. As it will take about three months, the new Avenue Alexandre III will not be clear before the early part of next year. Still the road-makers are already active carrying on the construction of this avenue, so that it will be finished when the last facade of the Palais de l'Industrie falls, and spectators in the Champs Elysees will have an uninterrupted view across the Cours de Reine and the new bridge, Alexandre III, right up to the Invalides.

Of Course Not.

"Funny how mothers will believe that their children are so much better than anybody else's children," said one lady to another. "I know it," replied the latter. "Now, if all children were like my little Georgie it would not be so strange."

Jack's Letter.

"Dear Gran'ma an' Gran'pa:
I don't like this place,
'Cause no one ain't wearin'
No smile on their face
Like you always do, an'
They spanked me instead
O' kissin' me, after I
Fell from the shed.
This mornin' they say I'm Not goin' to be
No angel hereafter
Fer takin' jest three Small pieces o' sugar—
An' chasin' the cat,
An' goin' in swimmin'
An' losin' my hat;
An' scarin' the peacock,
An' climbin' th' trees,
An' gettin' all bit up
By humble-ee bees,
An' racin' the turkey,
An' bangin' the door,
An' muddyin' over
Th' clean kitchen floor.
They ain't got no smile or
No kisses for me.
They think I'm just wicked
As wicked can be—
An' call me a worrit
An' tormentin' pest,
An' say I deprive 'em
O' quiet an' rest.
Dear gran'pa, tomorrow
I want to go back—
Please get here as early
As anything. Jack.

The Mouse That Played Football.

Norton Browne was a lover of football from the time his merry little eyes first fastened on the wonderful get-up of his older brother Ralph, the hero of the village eleven. In Norton's baby fashion he made good-natured Ralph understand that he, too, wished to wear the football uniform. My, how proud he was to show his "dress-up" to the amused family! And how indignant he was, too, when they all laughed at his funny appearance—something between a padded Brownie, a circus clown and a comic valentine of Ralph, somebody said. This comparison pleased Ralph so much that he smuggled his little brother down to the photographer's, fixed him up in the beloved toggery (about eight sizes too large), tousled up his baby-locks like those of the most approved football hero, placed in his tiny hands a ball three times the size of his head, and presto! there was the picture of the tiniest football-baller in the country. Norton enjoyed the fun as much as his big brother did, and kept the secret stored so snugly away in his little baby brain that Ralph rewarded him by giving him his old football pincushion, when he went away to college. Norton was overjoyed, and when no one was looking, often gave an admiring hug to the sawdust cushion, with its melon-shaped pieces of red and blue silk and its cute little lacing. Every night, after mother put him into his little brass crib, he lay staring at the shining silk stripes till he wandered off to a dream-land people with long-haired halfbacks, tacklers, guards and all the other queer things to be seen on a football field. One night, just as the long lashes were settling down over his little peepers, the pincushion began to move. Yes, it did! There, it moved again! Norton sat right up to see what caused it all, but the queer little cushion never budged a bit; just settled down on its side for a good, long sleep. The next night, however, the cushion began wiggling again. Sometimes, indeed, it almost turned a somersault, and then settled back again. Slowly, very slowly, Norton drew himself up into a sitting position. Quietly, very quietly, hardly daring to breath, he leaned over the crib rail, and watched—what do you think? The very cutest little mouse that ever ran across a chiffonier and nibbled at the pincushion. Perhaps the little animal guessed that the football was stuffed with bran; bran is a dainty tidbit for a hungry little mouse. Anyway he pulled and tugged away at the shoestring lacing, climbed on top of the cushion and blinked saucily at Norton, and then scampered friskily away to tell the home folks about the prize he had found, the happiest little mouse in mouseland. The next night Frisky came again, and began to nibble a hole in the cushion, and Norton was so excited while watching that he forgot all about the harm mousy might do. When Norton told his mother about it the next morning, she was a little troubled, for she feared that her baby boy thought, talked and dreamed so much about his cherished football that perhaps he might have imagined things which did not happen, and could not tell the real from his dreams. So the next night mother lay down beside Norton, and together they quietly watched for the coming of the mouse. They had almost grown tired of waiting when—there was Frisky sitting jauntily atop the cushion, twinkling his little beady eyes as though he would say, "Hello, there! Watch me go to the bottom of this cushion, will you? Good-by!" and down into the bran went his little head. Then such a scratching! Down went the rest of his body, all but the tips of his hind feet and his stiff little tail. The old ball wobbled crazily to and fro, and my, how the bran did fly! Frisky seemed to be pawing away with his front feet like a playful puppy, sending the dust in all directions. A few sprinkles even reached Norton away over in his crib, and made him chuckle so loud that the frightened mousie went scampering back to his hole. Norton never knew that after he was asleep Frisky brought all his sisters and his cousins and his aunts to a midnight party on the chiffonier, where they had the nicest kind of a time dancing and eating up the bran which Frisky had pawed out for them. The next night Frisky came alone and went to work again just as though Norton with his father, mother and sister Lucy were not all watching and smiling at him. He worked so hard that by morning all the bran was gone, leaving the poor, flattened pincushion a little heap of red and blue rags. "Never mind!" laughed father. "The old cushion was almost worn out, anyhow! I am glad the mice had such a good time."

"So am I," assented Norton. "Ralph said he'd bring me a really one for Christmas, anyway, and it was such fun to see a mouse captain a football game!"

Where Biddy Found the Clothes.

It was the funniest thing! They took a ride right over the church steeple—but that's beginning at the wrong end! Bensie says I always tell my stories back end to. This is how Bensie tells 'em: Once upon a time (Bensie always begins "once upon a time") papa was out on the side lawn a-mowin' with that com'cal little carpet-sweeper. Biddy had just got the clothes all spread out nice, 'side of the kitchen door. Then's when it happened—just after Biddy went in. It came up just as quick—a little big whirlwind and took Biddy's clothes up in its arms an' carried 'em off! Yes, it did. Papa looked right up in the air an' saw 'em a-flyin'! They went up twice as high as the meetin'-house, right over the steeple! You can 'magine how they must've looked to papa, an' don't you guess he laughed? Well, you've guessed right, 'cause he did! An' the funniest of all the things those clothes did was just too perfectly com'cal for anythin'. Our nightgowns did it—Bensie's an' mine. They're real long nightgowns, you know, an' they filled all full of the whirlwind till the sleeves bulged out round, an' the rest of 'em, too, just as if Bensie and I were in 'em! And they acted as if they were real frightened, sailin' up there so high, an' put their arms round each other and held on to each other! That's the way Bensie and I do when we're frightened. Papa laughed and laughed, and then he came in to tell us 'bout it. The clothes sailed 'way over into the minister's orchard, an' sat down there to rest—an' that's where Biddy found 'em. And that's the right end of the story to stop at, only Bensie always says "the end."—Constance Hamilton.

The Months.

All of our months were named by the Romans a great many years ago. One of the months looks back on the old year and it looks ahead to the young or new year, so it was named for a god whom the Romans worshiped. He was represented as having two faces, looking in opposite directions. One of his faces was old and the other one was young. His name was Janus. Can you guess which month was named for him? Another month was named for the god of war. What was his name and which month was named for him? May was named for Maia, a goddess who was the mother of the god Mercury, and June was named for Jupiter's wife, June. Have you ever noticed that while most months alternate with 30 and 31 days, July and August come together with 31 days? That is because these months were named for the two emperors, Julius and Augustus Caesar. It would not have done to give one a longer month than the other received, so both were given 31 days. In early times the Romans had only ten months, with names that meant first month, second month and so on. Four of these names are used now, for instance: December really means "tenth month," although it is now the twelfth month. Can you find the other three? A man named Numa added the two months of January and February, shortening the others in order to do so. It is said that February is a name taken from a Latin word that means to purify, because during that month they held what they called the feast of purification, and that April is from a word that means to open, because at that season the buds begin to open.

Schools of Old.

Once upon a time school children had not as easy a time as some of the American young folk whom you and I know. Back in the early part of the sixteenth century, for instance, the famous English school of St. Paul's, then under the general direction of Dean Golet, used to open at 7 o'clock both in winter and summer, and the rules were so strict that the school boy of today would think them barbarous. Following are selections from the code of rules put into operation when the school was founded: "The children shall come unto school at 7 o'clock, both winter and summer, and tarry there until 11; and return against 1 of the clock, and depart at 5. In the school, no time in the year, they shall use tallow candle in nowise at the cost of their friends. Also I will they bring no meat nor drink, nor bottle, or use in the school no breakfasts, nor drinkings, in the time of learning in nowise. I will they use no cockfighting nor riding about of a victory, nor disputing at St. Bartholomew, which is but foolish babbling and loss of time." There were to be no holidays granted at desire, unless for the king or a bishop.

Children from the North.

The little Esquimau babies in this country are not making very good progress. The climate, their parents say, does not agree with them. It is too warm altogether. An Esquimau baby at home is washed daily in water which is as cold as ice. The air which it breathes is so icy that the little one's warm breath quickly turns into frost on the isinglass windows, which the Esquimaux use. An Esquimau baby playthings are snowballs, and the daily airing is a ride on a sledge drawn by polar dogs. And so, you see, the little mites of Esquimau humanity here are having a hard time to live in what is to them such a hot climate. It is as if you, who live in New York, were to spend the summer in Florida. And as if the Florida people were to go and live on steamboats at the equator.

Harmless Joke.

Place a spool of cotton in the inside pocket of your coat, and having threaded a needle with the beginning of the cotton, pass the needle through the front of the coat, unthread the needle and leave about two inches of the cotton hanging as if it were only a stray piece. The first person you meet will be sure to pick it off for you, and his astonishment, when he finds there is no end to it, will give plenty of innocent fun.

TO REDEEM HIMSELF.

A SOLDIER WHO ONCE DISGRACED HIS UNIFORM.

Extraordinary Career of James R. Wasson—Private Soldier, Now Bound for Philippines—Yet a West Pointer Once Signally Honored.

As a member of the Forty-sixth United States volunteers, which started on its long journey to the Philippines recently was Sergeant James R. Wassop of Company M. Wasson's career in the army of his country probably hasn't a parallel in history. The enlistment of James Robert Wasson as a private soldier at the age of 51 was permitted by the special order of the secretary of war. Thirty years ago Wasson was appointed as a cadet in West Point. Three years before that he had seen actual war service, having enlisted, despite his youth, in an Iowa regiment, and taken part in the Red River campaign. While a cadet in West Point Fred D. Grant, now a brigadier-general in the Philippines, became his warm personal friend. Wasson was a willing and brilliant pupil and did much to aid Grant in his studies. When they were graduated Wasson stood at the head of his class and was recognized by army officers as having extraordinary engineering ability. After graduation Wasson was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Fourth cavalry on June 15, 1871, and sent to Fort Leavenworth. In 1872 President Grant received an official request from the Khedive of Egypt for a bright American officer to aid in reorganizing the military force of the country. Wasson's brilliant record had been brought to the attention of the president, and he selected Wasson to fill the mission. As a result Wasson obtained leave for two years and went to Egypt. He introduced into the Egyptian army the system of military drill used in West Point, and, in addition to increasing its efficiency, became a great favorite with the Egyptian officials. Soon after Wasson's return from Egypt President Grant was asked to send an American officer to Japan. Again Wasson was sent out of the country. The president gave a flattering personal letter to the young officer to deliver to the emperor of Japan and on the day of his arrival in Tokio Wasson was appointed chief of staff to the commanding general of the Japanese army. At first the efforts of the American caused dissension among the Japanese officers, but this soon gave way to admiration when his ability was recognized. Wasson made himself indispensable, and the emperor offered the highest rank possible to be given to a foreigner to the young man, but he declined it. He received several decorations from the emperor, one of which never before had been bestowed on any person other than a citizen of Japan. Wasson finally accepted the place of professor of mathematics in the University of Hokkaido, and not long after was appointed surveyor in chief for the entire division of Hokkaido. While in Tokio Wasson had married the daughter of the American minister, John A. Bingham of Ohio. Her health broke down, owing to an exposure to fever, and Wasson decided to give up his Japanese connections and return to this country. A banquet was given for him on the eve of his departure, which was attended by many notables of Japan.

When Wasson returned to Washington President Grant appointed him paymaster in the army, assigning him to the Department of Texas, and this finally led to his downfall. Wasson held the rank of major, and his appointment was not passed over without severe comment by officers who had been overlooked in the decision. Wasson, while making a trip through Texas, took to drinking and gambling heavily, traits which had not made themselves apparent in his character heretofore. He lost all his own money, then began using Uncle Sam's, until his shortage amounted to about $40,000. Friends came to his aid and made up the deficiency, but this could not condone his crime. Wasson was tried by a court martial, dismissed from the army and sentenced to serve eighteen months' imprisonment in Fort Leavenworth. He was pardoned after serving part of the sentence. Several attempts have been made by Wasson's friends to obtain his reinstatement in the army, but without avail. Since leaving the prison Wasson has practiced civil engineering in Sedalia, Mo. At the time of the China-Japan war he was unable to overcome his fighting spirit and returned to Japan and followed the Japanese troops through the campaign. He also saw some service in Formosa. Permission for his present enlistment was obtained by his friends, who have faith in his ability and intention to redeem himself.

From Waste Stones.

It may not be generally known that the by-products of fruit stones are of considerable value. The pits of peaches, apricots, nectarines, plums, and prunes, which have heretofore been thrown away or used for fuel, have a market value. This is specially true of the peach and apricot pits. There is now a strong demand for them at $8 to $10 a ton, delivered in San Francisco. The kernel is of course what is sought. From the kernel of the apricot Turkish "nut candy" is made which has almost displaced the almond. The same substance is used for the adulteration of cinnamon, allspice and nutmeg. Prussic acid and essences and oil of almonds are made from the peach and prune pits and these flavors are used in many ways. The pits are cracked in San Francisco and the kernels are then sent east.

Must Be Barbers and Musicians.

There is a barber shop in an uptown avenue in New York where music goes with every shave. Never a barber is hired there who cannot twinkle the sweet mandolin or plunk the dreamy guitar. The gentleman who can play on an instrument but the razor and the shears has no welcome in this tonsorial parlor, for the boss barber is musical and loves to mingle celestial strains with the torture of the barber chair. Whenever a chair is vacant the attending genius sits him down and performs on his favorite instrument.

ABOUT THE EXPERT WITNESS.

Tendency to Befog a Question in Technical Terms.

One of the besetting sins of the expert witness is the habit or tendency to use a lot of Latin words in describing an injury to the jury. In some exceptional cases, doubtless, this is done without affectation or for a purpose, but we have no hesitation in saying that in the majority of instances it is a very good index of the learning and capacity of the expert, on the assumption that the more words of this sort used the more probability of knowledge and thorough grounding on the part of the user. A really able man in his profession will always accommodate himself to circumstances, and, realizing the capacity of the juror, use very different forms and methods of expression in testifying before court and jury than if he were making an address or delivering a paper on some scientific subject before an audience of his professional brethren, says the Albany Law Journal. A physician, for example, who, when upon the stand, is asked to describe something to the jury, uses all the high-sounding terms and expressions he can muster, deserves to have very little attention paid to his testimony—and usually gets his deserts. An amusing example of this truth is given in the following account of an actual happening in an English court. It is from a little book entitled "Hints on Advocacy," published first in England. "I discovered considerable ecchymosis under the left orbit, caused by extravasation of blood beneath the cuticle," said a young house surgeon in a case of assault at the assizes. Baron Bramwell—"I suppose you mean the man had a black eye?" Scientific witness—"Precisely, my lord." Baron Bramwell—"Perhaps if you had said so in plain English these gentlemen would better understand you." "Precisely, my lord," answered the learned surgeon, evidently delighted that the judge understood his meaning. This incident, which might be paralleled many times in court in this country, carries its own comment. What the jury wants is to be enlightened on disputed points, and the way to do this is not to use purely technical expressions, but to explain in plain, homely language. There is no danger that in doing this the expert will be liable to detract from the general estimate of his own abilities, but rather the reverse will be the case.—Minneapolis Tribune.

A Faithful Horse.

Instances of the self-devotion of animals in the service of their masters are not uncommon, but they generally have to do with some sudden instinctive deed of courage. Passive faithfulness unto death, among beasts as among men, is the rarest form of self-sacrifice. The story of the horse of a certain police sergeant in the northwest illustrates the courage of animals in its noblest form. Sergt. Parker, a member of the Canadian mounted police, waited a day or two after the departure of his men, in order to receive some government dispatches, of which he was to be the bearer. It was winter on the prairie, and every trail was hidden beneath the snow, but as soon as he secured the papers, he pushed on alone, hoping to rejoin his company by a forced march. By nightfall he had lost all sense of direction, and when he resumed his journey next day he felt that his search was hopeless. Still the dispatches were important, and he had been trusted with them. For six days he wandered about, starving and frost bitten. Then snow-blindness came upon him, and he lay down to die. His faithful horse did not desert him, but stood like a sentinel at its master's feet. For a day and a night it stood there, and on the morning of the second day of its watch a mail-carrier saw the motionless figure. He approached and discovered Sergt. Parker. It was nearly a fortnight before the rescued sergeant regained consciousness. His first question was after his horse. The emaciated beast was brought into the tent where its master lay, and at once it began to lick his face. Two days later the horse was dead.

Poison Typewriter Ribbon.

Last week Miss Mary Laughlin, a pretty eighteen-year-old typewriter girl, of Cincinnati, died of poisoning from a most unusual cause. Her death was due to the blue ink that is used on typewriter ribbons. A small and almost imperceptible fever blister on her lip was the means by which the death dealing substance was conveyed into her blood. The young woman, who was employed in one of Cincinnati's large business houses, a little over a week ago noticed that a small fever blister had appeared on her lower lip. She had been at work at her typewriter and her fingers were stained with the blue ink used on the ribbon. She had also been using a blue indelible pencil, and the stain from this was also on her fingers. In trying to break the blister Miss Laughlin placed the stained finger on it, became poisoned and died.

Another Old Maxim Gone Wrong.

The British Medical Journal takes the opportunity of again attacking the old theory that "early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy," whatever it may do for his wealth or his wisdom. Medical science today declares that if the man is healthy he does not for choice get up early, the desire to rise with the lark being the result of "the hardening of the arteries and the less ready action of the vasomotor system." It is a disease of old men, and apparently also of worn-out nations, for China is quoted as a shocking example of a people who show their hardened arteries and sluggish vasomotor systems by a vicious habit of early rising.

SHE CATCHES BUTTERFLIES

Mary Yeomans Is Turning Pleasure Into Profit.

Nothing succeeds like success, and success has dropped her blossoms into the lap of Mary Yeomans, so that every one calls her a clever woman. When she first began to catch butterflies, her neighbors who chanced to know of it called her a "bug chaser," and many a tale they told at her expense to shorten the long trails over the mountain.

But when they found there was money to be had for the butterflies, and saw her increasing her stock and buying more land, the farmer folk wished they knew which of the butterflies were the rare ones.

Mary Yeomans knew, and because she knew she owns today a ranch worth $40,000. An English girl, she had collected butterflies for pleasure at home, and knew how rare and how valuable some of the species were.

She knew that in Europe rich men and women collected butterflies, and would journey half around the world to find a missing species. She knew, too, that they were glad to pay well for what they wanted. Besides the private people are museums, the academies of science and colleges all wanting collections.

She had visited great establishments in London and Paris, where the sole stock in trade was thousands and thousands of butterflies and beetles and insects.

With her two brothers she came to live in the wilds of northern California twenty years ago, three gentlepeople who must for the first time take thought of what they should eat and wherewithal they should be clothed.

Like most English colonists, they came out to farm, and how well they have succeeded their well-fenced miles of sheep lands show. Their sheep and their wool always have a market, because they use their brains in their farming.

They took up a great tract of land, and when they went out to open up woods and build fences over it, Mary was afraid to stay at home alone, and went with her brothers, camping sometimes for days. In her new home she had forgotten butterflies till one hot afternoon, as she lay on the mountain side under a great mossy tanbark oak listening to the distant strokes of an ax, a flock of great yellow pansy-like wings hovered a moment over her and then flew up the mountain side to a patch of yellow honeysuckle.

All alert in a moment, she followed the butterflies up the steep mountain side. She thought she recognized them as a species known only in the higher Alps, and very rare and valuable.

"When at last I did get one in my hands I was sure it was the very kind. I was too excited to wait till morning, which is the best time to catch butterflies, because they are sluggish then in the cold, damp foliage. I caught six before night, and the rest of the flock in the morning. I pinned one out carefully and sketched it in water color. I had to be saving of my postage, so I sent the sketch instead of a box of butterflies home to England.

"Such a long wait as it was, and fancy my delight when I had word at last to send all the butterflies to London. You would never guess what they offered me for them, $25 each, and as there were twenty-three of them, I had the tidy little sum of $575 all my own, and the first money I ever earned in my life.

"That was my beginning, and I was always on the lookout for butterflies. With my money I bought ten funny sheep."

Miss Yeomans' cellar is not for eatables, but is her nursery for beetles.

What appears to be unsplit stove wood lies in rows on the floor. Each piece has been split, but tied together again, and in each piece are different species of beetles. They eat the wood, making their way out, and lay their eggs in the wood.

"I keep watch, and when a beetle gets to the surface I put it back. The most valuable one? It all depends upon the demand. A beetle is worth just what I can get for it. Dr. Le Fontain, who came out from France to study the insects of California, came to our house by chance. He did not tell us who he was, merely that he was a stranger passing through the country, but when I chanced to see him before dawn creeping with a candle in his hand under the pine trees, I knew he must be after insects. He was in raptures over a beauty he had found, and when I told him about my butterflies and showed what I had, he forgot all his English and rhapsodized in French. He taught me a great deal about beetles and told me of a certain one he was most eager to find in California. He believed it was here, though he could not find it. It had been found only in Italy, and had almost disappeared. Ah! You had better not look at it; you will be disappointed." She poked about in a box of twigs and laid in my hand what was to me a most ordinary little black bug with long, slender legs, and then she placed beside it a little round red one, no larger than the head of a pin.

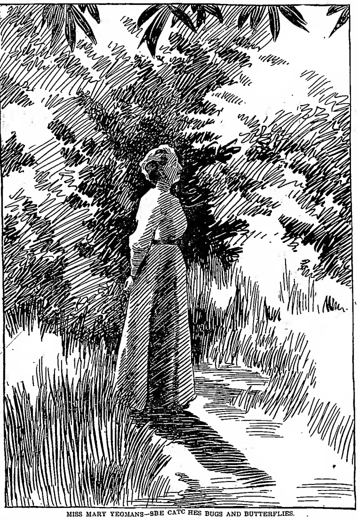
"The tiny one is the one which Dr. Le Fontain traveled miles and miles to find and could not—I found it. The other is the 'beauty' he caught under the pine trees.

"You understand a collection of beetles is not complete without all the different species. Some are very common, but others are most difficult to find. Dr. Le Fontain made me a sketch of the beetle he was looking for, and then we went out to find a mate for the 'beauty' he had caught in the morning, for where one is, more are sure to be. We found four, and they were the ancestors of the ones I have here. He showed me how to make what we call a 'series.' That is, a butterfly or a beetle in all its stages from the egg to the perfect creature—each stage shown by a specimen and tacked in order on a card. I always make notes as to time each stage requires and food and where the life was lived. He was so kind and interested I was delighted when at last I found the beetle he wanted. It was three summers later, and I made a long journey for it.

"I had wanted for so long to go back to the Redwoods we passed coming up. You stopped in the woods, and know how that silence of the great trees haunts one who has once known it. Brother Tom and I made the journey on horseback and camped a week right in the heart of the belt. It was there I found my beetle. I carried a white sheet along and spread it on the ground. Taking up an armful of dried pine needles, I shook it over the sheet. If any of the fallen particles scuttled off I knew it was an insect, and one of the scuttling specks was my long-wished for, much-desired beetle.

"The Indians know about butterflies, and know where to find them, and they are the only ones who have ever helped me to any extent except a Chinaman. I have a great respect for Chinamen and Indians; they see things which few of our white civilized men can comprehend, even though it means dollars."

We went back to Miss Yeoman's sitting room—a room speaking of more culture, more real living than almost any room I ever entered; maybe because strong personalities only lived there, and their strength had not been diluted by complex living. On the floor were skins—bear, panther, coyote, and many I did not know. There were beautiful Indian baskets with bird plumages and many books and engravings and water color sketches, and a piano. All one end of the room, the only one not having great windows looking into the oak grove or the mountains, was covered with mounted butterflies, blue and brown and red and pink, yellow, white and colors for which I have no name. Each had its story and a tale of mates which had journeyed across the sea to tell those who cared to know that the butterflies of California are the most gorgeous of all the world.



MISS MARY YEOMANS—SHE CATCHES BUGS AND BUTTERFLIES.

Fortune in Swamp Land.

B. F. Gifford of Jasper county, Ind., has given a remarkable example of what may be done in the reclaiming of swamp lands. Some years ago Gifford obtained from the state of Indiana deeds to 33,000 acres of swamp land at a very small price. For five years he kept a steam dredge working day and night, with the result that more than seventy-five miles of main ditches were dug. Several hundred miles of tile drains cross and recross these ditches, and today the profits on the land are enormous. Last year Gifford raised more than 1,000,000 bushels of corn, 400,000 bushels of unusually fine onions, great quantities of other vegetables and a very large hay crop. So remarkable has been the development of the land that Gifford has thought it necessary to build a railroad to the center of his farm. This road connects with the Indiana, Illinois & Iowa line, which takes the produce into Chicago. There are 250 tenants on the farm, each of whom has a comfortable five-room house. The reclaiming of such a valuable tract furnishes an impressive lesson on the resources of land generally regarded as unavailable. Of course, it requires a large amount of money successfully to carry out a work of this kind, but, in the end, the profits are sure.

Unappreciated.

BAKED AND FROZEN RAISINS.

Process by Which They Are Seasoned Against Climatic Changes.

Unlike the eastern imitation, the California seeded raisin is subjected to a dry temperature of 140 degrees Fahrenheit from three to five hours, immediately after which the fruit is submitted to a chilling process, and while in this reduced condition of temperature is passed through cleaning or "brushing" machines, which remove every particle of dust and the capstems, thus making it a pure and wholesome article, says the Philadelphia Times. It is then taken automatically, by elevators, to a room where, spread upon wire trays, it is exposed to a temperature of 130 degrees Fahrenheit, which brings the fruit back to its normal condition, and in this "processing" the berry is converted into pectin, that delicious jelly which gives the fruits their best flavor. The raisins having been prepared through this alternate heating and chilling to keep indefinitely and to resist climatic influences, are passed through seeding machines, each of which has a capacity of from ten to twelve tons daily. The raisins are pressed between rubber or similar surface rollers, which at first flatten the berry and press the seeds to the surface, when an impaling roller catches the seeds between its needles or teeth affixed to its periphery, deftly removing them from the fruit, while the latter passes on, minus its seeds, but possessing every particle of its flesh. The seeds are removed from the roller by a "flicking," or whisping device, and are send along to the seed receptacle, finally ending their journey in the engine room, where they are burned as fuel. Four hundred and fifty car loads of ten tons each, or 9,000,000 pounds of seeded raisins, were shipped from the Fresno district last year, and a very much larger tonnage will be turned out this year. Some estimate can be formed of the possibilities of the Fresno seeded raisin plants when it is stated that their aggregate capacity for this season will approximate from 1,700 to 2,000 car loads, while it is probable that 1,400 cars will be the output. Each seeding plant has from five to twelve machines of ten tons daily capacity per machine. Some of the packing houses cover a ground space 150 to 225 feet and are three stories high.

1804 DOLLARS.

It Is Now Claimed That No Such Coins Were Struck.

Is there an American dollar of the date of 1804? If there is, it is worth a fortune, in the opinion of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, for it is one of the jack o' lanterns of numismatics. In a recent issue the American Journal of Numismatics goes into an interesting account of what it terms the "myth of 1804 dollars," and denies that any such coin, struck in that year, is in existence. Like comets, these alleged coins have been turning up in most unexpected places for nearly a century. Recently coin dealers were excited by a story from Racine, Wis., which told how a woman went into a dry goods store to buy a spool of thread and tendered in payment a worn silver dollar, saying that she did not know whether it was good or not. The clerk saw the date "1804" on the coin, put it into his pocket, and threw a new silver dollar into the cash drawer. He was offered $1,500 for the old coin by a dealer, but refused to sell. In this way the story got out, and the clerk's employer put in a claim to the 1804 dollar. Both men have employed men to defend their titles, and now the woman shopper is preparing to bring suit for the possession of it. For years Mr. Nexsen, an expert of Brooklyn, N. Y., has made a study of the subject. He has convinced himself and other competent judges that no genuine 1804 dollar was ever coined. He has become convinced that the alleged dollars of that date are alterations of Spanish, Mexican, Bank of England 5-shilling pieces or some such fraud. It is believed that an experimental die with milled edges was made but not used in 1804. In 1842 some one, perhaps surreptitiously, struck a few dollars on this old, unused die, and it is these that are occasionally found.

First Game of Dominoes.

It is not everybody who plays who knows the origin of the game of dominoes, and Scottish Night furnishes this explanation: Two monks who had been committed to a lengthy seclusion contrived to beguile the dreary hours of their confinement without breaking the rule of silence, by showing each other small flat stones marked with black dots. By a preconcerted arrangement, the winner would inform the other player of his victory by repeating in an undertone the first line of the vesper prayer. In process of time the two monks managed to complete the set of stones and to perfect the rules of the game, so that when their term of imprisonment had expired the game was so interesting that it was generally adopted by all the inmates of the monastery as a lawful pastime. It soon became popular throughout Italy, and the first line of the vespers was reduced to the single word "domino," by which name the game has been known ever since.

Christening Florida.

As to why Ponce de Leon gave the name Florida to the territory now known by that name, the Florida Farmer and Fruit Grower quotes from an old book published in 1763: "Gave it the name of Florida because it was first seen in Easter, called Pasqua di florea in the language of his country or, as Herrera alleges, because it was covered with flowers and the most beautiful blossoms." And the Farmer adds: "Those who have seen the Easter season in Florida and the wealth of flowers which still commemorate and adorn its return can well believe that both these reasons influenced the giving of its name."

Reflected Greatness.

When, as a boy, the duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha visited the island of Barbadoes, his washing was done for him by a negress named Jane Ann Smith, who was over six feet in height. She was so puffed up at being patronised by royalty that she claimed precedence at once over all the other washerwomen, and retained it for many years.

STRIKE!

Hundred of Thousands Are Involved.

Trouble in an Important Part of the Organization Affects All the Rest—A Perfectly Harmonious System Easily Thrown Out of Gear.

Organized labor has reached such a stage that anything affecting a particular branch of it draws all the rest into the difficulty.

It is exactly the same way with different organs of the human body. Work too hard, eat too much, drink too much, exercise but little, be a little irregular in any way, and the liver quits work.

Then the bowels become constipated and the stomach goes on strike. The heart is affected, the brain follows suit, and every part in the body is dragged into the trouble.

The only way out of it is to go at the source of all this—the liver. Square yourself with the liver and all will get back to regular natural work.

Cascarets Candy Cathartic make things right with the liver. They perfume the breath, prevent food from souring on the stomach, give tone to the bowels strengthen the intestinal muscles, while they are cleaning and stirring up the liver to renewed activity.

No matter how long a case has been incurable, Cascarets are guaranteed to put things right as they should be, and set the whole machinery a-going. And you can get them at any drug store or by mail for price—10c, 25c, or 50c. Address Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago or New York.

WHY STRAIGHT MILE IS FASTEST.

Solution of the Problem Which Has Puzzled Bicyclists.

Bicycle experts have been trying to find out why a man can ride a mile on the straight faster than on the curved track. In riding on a straight, level path the bicyclist moves his own weight and that of the wheel in opposition to certain resistance, say resistance of the air, friction of driving mechanism and resistance due to the tire and friction of bearings. The amount of air resistance depends mostly upon the size of the rider and the speed of the riding. The friction of the driving mechanism depends principally, if not directly, upon the speed. The amount of the third item depends upon the weight of the rider plus the weight of the bicycle.

On a curved track another factor is introduced—namely, centrifugal force. This force tends to throw the rider outward, a tendency which he meets by leaning inward. Whether the curves of the track are banked or not—they usually are—the centrifugal force increases the pressure of the wheel upon the track. In effect, the weight of the rider and bicycle is increased, and, therefore, the friction on the bearings and the tire resistance are also increased. It is calculated that the extra effort involved in riding a curve whose radius is 120 feet at a two-minute gait is the same as carrying 204 pounds extra weight over the same distance. It is also probable that there are other considerations to be taken into account in these calculations, not the least important of which may be nervousness about taking curves at high speed.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE LATEST PRUSSIAN TRIAL.

Officers of the German Army Establish a Regular Gambling Hell.

Berlin is greatly excited over a trial for gambling. It appears that three young men of good family, who had been officers, attracted attention by an expenditure out of all proportion to their means. It was found, upon inquiry, that they had set up a baccarat club, which was a regular "hell," frequented by more than 200 persons of their own class. As they made money by their club, and had none to start with, they were suspected of cheating, but this part of the charge has not been proved. What has been proved is that a large number of members of the highest society are accustomed to gamble for large sums—one man lost $10,000 in one night—in company with adventurers and ladies of the demimonde, to borrow money of the bank, and even of waiters, and to drink to excess. All this is wholly opposed to the tone of the Prussian army, which is severe, and of Prussian society, which abhors wastefulness more than many other vices. It is believed that the Socialistic party, which is always denouncing the dissoluteness of the rich, will make great capital out of the trial, and that the emperor will issue an order even sterner than the celebrated one of 1893. He should follow it up with an increase of allowances. A Prussian officer may once have been able to live on £1 2s 6d a week, but he certainly cannot now, and the poor noblesse, to which most of them belong, can spare no allowances.—London Spectator.

FLYING A KITE.

Predicament of Some Boys Happily Solved by a Bicycle Rider.

Bicycles have been put to use for more than the one purpose of pleasure and riding over country roads. Policemen, firemen and ambulances have been summoned by men on wheels, and occasionally a thief is overtaken by the bicycle police. The small boy has used his wheel like an experienced horseman on a pony, while playing polo. The latest use, however, to which a wheel has been put is in flying a kite.

A number of boys on the Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, the other afternoon, were engaged in trying to fly a kite, but the wind was not strong enough to raise the kite, nor were any of the boys fleet-footed enough to get the kite high in the air. Suddenly a man came down the boulevard riding a wheel. "Hey, boss!" shouted one of the boys, "raise this kite, will yer?"

The wheelman, interested, stopped, and the boys explained that if he would take hold of the string fastened to the kite, get on the wheel and start off, at the same time allowing the cord to run free through his fingers, the kite would rise. This the wheelman did, and after riding his bicycle at full speed for about three blocks, he reduced his speed, and, much to his surprise, found that the kite was high in the air. The boys who gave him their kite were far behind. Another boy, one of the gang, was in waiting, and came running up to the side of the bicycle.

"Much obliged, boss. I'll take her now. Thanks."

The kite was up, the wheelman rode away and the small boys all looked happy.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Hearn's Vivid Imagination.

Many years ago Lafcadio Hearn was a reporter on the staff of a Cincinnati newspaper. One day a famous steeple climber was going to scale the spire of the cathedral to repair the cross that topped the spire 200 feet above the sidewalk. The afternoon he first scaled the spire thousands of people watched him breathlessly as he slowly made his way up the outside of the steeple. Of course he was interviewed, and he said boastingly that the task was so easy that he could just as well carry a man up on his back.

That noon Hearn said timidly to his city editor that he had read of the steeple climber's offer and would be glad to ascend the spire on his back. The editor tried to point out to Hearn the peril of the thing, but he would not listen. Finally the steeple climber and Hearn arranged their end of the feat.

At the appointed time Hearn mounted the steeple climber's shoulders, and the dizzy journey began. Tens of thousands of people watched the foolhardy pair. At last the cross was reached, and Hearn left his perch on the climber's shoulders. The mob in the streets below cheered, and then the two men returned to the ground safely.

Hearn went back to the office and sat down and wrote two columns of a story describing his sensations, and the glories of the view he had obtained from the steeple top. Such a glowing description of a city seen from a great height has never been read before or since. The most interesting thing about it was the fact that Hearn was so near sighted he could not see five feet beyond the tip of his nose.—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Sorrowful Tree.

There is a tree in Persia to which the name "the sorrowful tree" is given. Perhaps because it blossoms only in the evening.

When the first star appears in the heavens the first bud of the sorrowful tree opens, and as the shades of night advance and the stars thickly stud the sky the buds continue gradually opening until the whole tree looks like one immense white flower. On the approach of dawn, when the brilliancy of the stars gradually fades in the light of day, the sorrowful tree closes its flowers, and ere the sun is fully risen not a single blossom is visible. A sheet of flower dust as white as snow covers the ground around the foot of the tree, which seems blighted and withered during the day, while, however, it is actively preparing for the next nocturnal festival. The fragrance of the blossoms is like that of the evening primrose.

If the tree is cut down close to the roots, a new plant shoots up and attains maturity in an incredibly short time.

In the vicinity of this singular tree there usually grows another, which is almost an exact counterpart of the sorrowful tree, but less beautiful, and, strange to say, it blooms only in the daytime.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Bride With Some Good Points.

Some years ago in an agricultural district there lived a farmer who wanted to sell one of his cows. There was not at that time a weekly paper in which he could advertise, so he resolved to follow a local custom and ask the vicar of the parish when giving out his notices at church to advertise the cow.

"Yes, farmer," said the vicar, "I should be willing to oblige you, but you don't attend my church."

Presently, however, they struck a bargain that the vicar should advertise the cow, and the man in return promised to go to church.

Now, unfortunately the man was deaf, and on the Sunday following when the vicar gave out the banns of marriage between Joseph So-and-so, bachelor, and Sarah So-and-so, spinster, the farmer took it for granted that the vicar was giving out particulars of his cow and shouted out:

"You might as well say while you are about it that she is a most gentle creature and entirely free from vice."—Stray Stories.

Wanted a Haunted House.

The following curious letter was recently received by a house renting agency in London:

"Have you a reputed haunted house on your books? I am not afraid of ghosts. I do not as a matter of course believe in their existence, and I am willing to live in a house for a long or short term by arrangement. Of course, rent free. Should there be no ghost, then, if you wish it, I shall be willing to testify on oath to the fact. But should I see an apparition I will keep the matter secret and only acquaint you with the circumstances. I will pledge myself not to pander to local gossip. I have a small income on which I can subsist. My sole object in thus applying to you is to be allowed to live in a place in which I do not need to pay any rent."

The inquirer was informed that the firm had no haunted houses on its list, but would inform him when it had.

Jack Redeemed Himself.

A mother, indignant to find her little son very low in his class at school, exclaimed wrathfully:

"I am out of all patience with you, Jack! I should just like to know why George Jones is always at the head of his class, while you are always at the foot!"

Jack hesitated for a moment, and then, looking his mother squarely in the face, he said innocently:

"You forget that Jones has very clever parents!"—Tit-Bits.

HOW A BULLET TRAVELS.

Lessons the Soldier Is Taught In Learning How to Shoot.

The soldier is taught that the bullet travels through the air in a curved line called the trajectory, and that three forces act upon it—first, the exploded charge, tending to drive it forward in a straight line along the line of fire; second, the force of gravity, and, third, the air resistance. At 200 yards, owing to these forces, the bullet, traveling at the rate of 2,000 feet a second, will have fallen about two feet. In the excitement of firing at close quarters the aim will invariably be too high.

It has been calculated that when the enemy approaches within 350 yards the soldiers will instinctively fire as much as two feet or three feet above their heads. Now, it has been found by experiment that the fact of fixing bayonets will cause the bullet to drop a distance of about 2½ feet in 350 yards, and therefore when about this distance from the enemy soldiers are instructed to fix bayonets, in order to counteract the excessive elevation of their aim.

The recruit learns that the mean extreme range of the bullet is 3,500 yards, and that the longest shot ever observed was 3,760 yards. He is taught the penetrating power of his weapon, a subject full of interest. To take one or two examples, rammed earth gives less protection than loose; bullets easily find their way through joints of walls, while a concentrated fire of about 150 rounds at 200 yards will breach a nine inch brick wall.

Only experience can teach a soldier how much he must aim to the right or left of his mark to counteract the force of the wind. A side wind has more effect on the flight of the bullet than a wind blowing directly toward the firer. The soldier must learn the habits of his rifle, since some shoot higher or lower than others. Every rifle, like every marksman, has its own individuality.—Pearson's Weekly.

AN INCIDENT IN HAITI.

Illustrating the Peculiar Treating Custom In Vogue There.

Of course there is in Haiti a small circle of native born creoles, who are naturally born ladies and gentlemen, exquisite in their courtly manners and most desirable as friends. Then the white men who are living there, as I have already mentioned, are characters. If they take a liking to you, all they have or can capture is yours. The following will illustrate this characteristic:

Mine host and a friend were walking through the leading thoroughfare of one of the towns when the friend suddenly came to a standstill and, placing his long nervous index finger on mine host's breast, remarked:

"My dear boy, in here they make the best cocktails in Haiti. I have spent three fortunes in assuring myself of the truth of this. Let's go in and try one."

There was a prompt adjournment from the pathwalk to the interior of the building, a few minutes of delightful, expectant silence as the ingredients were shaken together, a mutual bow, followed by disappearance of the liquids.

Friend—How do you like that?

Mine Host—Delicious!

Friend—Let us have another.

Mine Host—Certainly, only this second one is on me.

Friend—Make no mistake, my boy, they are both on you. I've no money.

It is the unexpected that happens, especially in Haiti the unknown.—Henry Sandham in Harper's Magazine.

Chickens In Haiti.

The natives call the island "Eye-te." Nearly every one I have met who can speak English at all drops the "h" and picks it up after the manner of the London costermonger and his cousins, the cockneys and 'Arry boys. Apples in Eye-te are happles. It is a great chicken country, the variety of poultry depending entirely on the color of the complexion of the incoming president. If he be yellow, the "yaller, legged" Dominique is permitted to thrive alone in his glory. Every black legged chicken is killed, and any person caught harboring one is bound to suffer. On the other hand, if the president be black only black legged poultry is in the fashion. The "yaller legs" are destroyed. Similar conditions prevail in Santo Domingo.—Victor Smith in New York Press.

Smelling a Railway.

Do you know that a railway track has an odor? The fact was learned from a blind man who was walking with a friend amid strange surroundings in Westchester county last week.

"Is a train coming?" he asked.

"Why do you ask?" his friend inquired, for, though there was a railway track a few hundred feet ahead of them there was not the slightest sound to indicate its presence.

"I smell the rails," he answered.

He did smell them, and though his friend's nose was not nearly so sensitive, he could with his head within an inch of the rails detect an odor like that from slightly heated iron filings.—New York Herald.

Blew Him Good.

To Stop Nosebleed.

To stop nosebleed cut some blotting paper about an inch square, roll it about the size of a lead pencil and put it up the nostril that is bleeding. The hollow in it will fill the space between the tube and the nose and will very soon coagulate and thereby stop the flow of blood.—New York Times.

LIFE AND LOVE.

True love is of a birth sublime;
It knows not space, it knows not time;
It has a guerdon from above,
For love is life, and life is love.

You, with your dangered gift of scorn,
Would seek to make true love forlorn;
Yet know where'er your wish may roam
That love is life, and life is love.

You flaunt new loves before my eyes,
I note them with a scant surprise;
You cannot spoil the treasure trove
That love is life, and life is love.

We mortals are compact of change,
We have a thought of wondrous range—
For boy and girl, for man and wife,
Yet life is love, and love is life.

Is't well to judge by human skill
What warrant serves true love to kill?
It stands, through all your nescient strife,
That life is love, and love is life.

I match remembrance with your word,
The truth may pierce you like a sword,
The truth may be a keen edged knife,
Yet life is love, and love is life.

False love is like the winding sheet
Figured in snow and binding sleet;
The shelter whence you dare not move
Is—love is life, and life is love.

A WORLD OF TROUBLE.

Why the Apartment House Manager Had a Case of the Blues.

The manager of the apartment house, a well fed, well featured, well dressed man, was standing in the main doorway of his establishment, which, by the way, is owned by an out of town capitalist, who is not the most generous provider in the world and insists upon the flat being conducted upon the most economical lines. The manager was not happy, however fair he may have appeared to the eye, and he heaved a long drawn sigh as a friend approached and greeted him.

"What's wrong?" inquired the newcomer.

"Oh, we've all got our troubles!" was the vague and lugubrious reply.

"You oughtn't to have any."

"But I have, just the same."

"What, for instance?"

"Well, I'm worried sick because I haven't got an elevator boy."

"There shouldn't be any difficulty in removing that trouble, I should say."

"There is. I've tried 40 and can't get one to suit."

"You must be very hard to please."

"It isn't that," sighed the manager. "I'm all right, but it's this way: The old man insists on having the elevator boy wear a uniform, and he furnishes it. Uniforms cost money, and when the last boy retired he left a brand new uniform, and the old man won't get another. That's the rub. I can find plenty of boys of sufficient intelligence, ample experience, industrious habits, good moral character and fine address, but I'll be darned if I can get one that the uniform will fit, and there you have it. Now what the dickens am I to do? Ain't that enough trouble for any one man?"—Washington Star.

A Painful Discovery.

"It was about the witching hour," said the suburbanite. "I had left the station some distance behind me and was on my way up the road toward home. I had got comfortably cool by that time, and the charming influence of the starlit night possessed me and made me feel at peace with all the world. Nor did the fact that I and my new suit had made a hit with the friends I had been visiting detract from the fullness of my self satisfaction.

"All went well until I came to a street crossing my road. At the corner was a street lamp, which from some cause was not lit, and from this lamp fluttered what seemed to be a handkerchief. You know I am a little bit near sighted.

"I reached over to take it, but it was touched by the wind and waved just beyond my grasp. I reached over farther, leaning full against the lamp post. This time I was successful, and I found that the supposed handkerchief was a piece of paper on which was written in bold and dashing letters the legend 'Fresh Paint.'"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Real Reason.

Long ago he had taken the resolution always to be perfectly honest with his children.

"My son," he accordingly observed, "I am beating you with this trunk strap not for your own good, but because I am hot under the collar! No, it does not by any means hurt me more than it hurts you!"

In the face of such a luminous example it would be strange if a boy did not grow up to be an honest man.

It was perhaps possible to overdo this thing and render a boy so honest that he would be unable to earn his living in any of the learned professions, but that difficulty, if it existed at all, was theoretical rather than practical.—Detroit Journal.

The Army and Navy.

Have covered themselves with glory during the war. The Army and Navy vest pocket memorandum book published by the Northern Pacific is a compact digest of information relative to the navies and armies of Spain and the United States at the beginning of the war. It has a map of Cuba, illustrations of naval ships, glossary of navy and army terms, translation of Spanish words, etc. Send ten cents to Chas. S. Fee, general passenger agent, N. P. R., St. Paul, Minn., for a copy.

Found Its Soul.

After the Lucky Baldwin theater and hotel fire in San Francisco there were nine feet of water in the basement, where the instruments of the orchestra were stored. When a little of it had been pumped out, August Hinrichs, leader of the orchestra, hired a man to swim in and get out his famous Amati violin.

It was wrecked—water soaked, warped, twisted and broken up into 68 pieces. The hot water had soaked out all the old glue, and every piece had fallen away from its neighbor, besides a good many patches of wood, put in when repairs had been done. To all appearance the thing was smashed beyond recall.

Nevertheless Herman Muller, a local violin repairer, who knew and loved the old fiddle, took it in hand. Twice he carefully joined the time darkened pieces of wood. Twice he decided that the Amati would not do.

So once more he soaked the 79 bits of wood apart. Then he carefully modeled out of clay an arch such as he remembered that of the old Amati to have had and for nine weeks kept the bits of wood bound to it until they had gained the proper shape.

Once more he put the bits of wood together. Then for five weeks more he patiently varnished and polished the more than 200-year-old fiddle until it shone. Then Hinrichs once more drew his bow across the vibrating strings and the violin spoke. It sang, wept, bubbled with life and joy.

The Amati had found its soul.—San Francisco Examiner.

The Macaw and the Portrait.

While Northcote was studying painting with Sir Joshua Reynolds he painted the portrait of one of the housemaids and placed the picture on the parlor floor, resting against a chair for the family to see it. Sir Joshua had a large macaw, which he often introduced into his pictures. Between the bird and the housemaid there was no little hostility, as she had to clean up after him and resented his roaming habits.

When the picture was placed against the chair, the macaw, being in a distant part of the room, did not see it, but on retracing its steps the bird saw the portrait of its enemy and, with outstretched wings, furiously rushed at the hated face and even tried to bite it.

Discovering that the face did not move, the macaw attacked the hand in the picture. As it moved not, the bird marched round the picture, as if examining what the thing was, and then walked away. Again and again the macaw repeated the advance, the attack and the retreat.

The singular story was noised abroad, and Edmund Burke, Dr. Johnson and Goldsmith visited Sir Joshua's parlor to see the exhibition. What made it the more remarkable was that when the macaw was tried with any other portrait it took no notice of the picture.—Youth's Companion.

Relic Pilfering Ministers.

The superintendent of public buildings and grounds, who has charge of the Washington monument, says one of the greatest troubles the watchmen at the monument have to contend with is the chipping of these memorial stones by relic hunters.

"One of the strangest things in regard to these relic hunters," said the superintendent, "is the fact that more than one-half of the men arrested for chipping off relics are clergymen. When the police arrest these despoilers and start with them to the station house, the man will begin to ask what is the penalty and try to beg off. He is told that the fine is a heavy one, but that $15 security can be put up for appearance in the police court. Then the prisoner explains that he is a minister of the gospel and meant no harm, and that he could not stand the disgrace of appearing in a police court. He ends up by giving up the collateral after generally trying to cut it down to $10, saying he has only that amount with him."—New York Mail and Express.

Washington's Sea Voyage.

As the companion of his invalid elder brother, Lawrence, then in a rapid consumption, George Washington sailed from Virginia on the 28th of September, 1751, arrived at Barbados on or about the 3d of November and sailed thence on his return to Virginia on board the Industry on the 22d of December. His passage each way was a rough one and prolonged to five weeks. The methodical young Virginian kept a diary during his trip, extracts from which were published by Jared Sparks in his "Writings of George Washington." This was the only time George Washington ever went outside the territory that became the United States. Note the fact that five weeks were occupied in making this little trip to Barbados.—Buffalo Commercial.

C. church, Crookston, Rev. Father Lauret officiating. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Halverson of this village and is most highly esteemed and popular where she is known. The groom is an energetic and well-liked young man. The SPECTATOR joins with their many friends here in wishing them much joy throughout married life.

Ed. Bridge, one of St. Hilaire's popular young men donned his best suit of clothes yesterday afternoon and drove up to the Ostrom farm residence in the town of North and will to day take unto himself a wife in the person Miss Dora Ostrom. On returning they will at once go to housekeeping in their beautiful cottage on Water street. Mr. and Mrs. Bert Mitchell left Monday for Minneapolss where they will visit a week and from there to Milaca where Mrs. Mitchell will remain until next spring with her parents. Bert will return in about ten days and go to the woods to scale logs for the St. Hilaire Lumber Company.

As Herman Nelson was driving into town Monday noon one of his horses was suddenly taken sick and dropped down apparently dead. The horse doctor was called and after two hours of hard work the animal was relieved of its suffering and supposed to be over the danger point, but along about nine o'clock a relapse set in and the more died shortly after in great pain. Mr. Nelson's finally matched team of chestnuts is now broken and we dare say it will take months before he can find another one equal in every way.

DIED.

This forenoon at 11 o'clock, after an illness of one week, the spirit of Hosea Tway returned to his Maker. His death will be a great shock to his many friends, as the fact that his condition had been critical for several days was known or realized by but few. Deceased was a member of No. 147, I. O. O. F. and arrangements for the funeral are being made as we go to press.

The St. Hilaire Lumber Company shut down their mill last Friday for this season. They have been playing in the best of luck as they have ran the entire season without an accident or breakdown. The night crew laid off early in the season for want of logs but regardless of that the little mill sawed a little over thirty one million feet. Next years cut promises to be a large one as the Company have now on hand ten million feet of logs that are ready for the saw and work will begin as soon as the river opens next spring.

DIRECT CAUSE OF BOER WAR.

What Lead to the Present Crisis Between the English and Boers.

The southeran part of Africa, what is now called Cape Colony, was originally settled by the Dutch East India Company about the year 1652. They first sent farmers and gardeners to cultivate the land in the vicinity of Capetown. The Dutch word for farmer is "Boer" hence the settlers in South Africa were called boers. The Dutch planted several settlements, which grew and became a flourishing colony. In 1793 war was declared between Great Britian and Holland. The British government sent an expedition to South Africa, which took possession of the country with every little trouble. When a treaty of peace was made with Holland in 1802, however, the colony was ceded back to Holland. But in 1805 war broke out again between Great Britain and Holland and again a British expedition came and took possession of the country. Soon after an English government was appointed for the colony and he was so severe and unjust in his treatment of the Dutch boers they began to feel very bitter toward the English. This treatment of the Dutch farmers continued for many years. An English historian, in speaking of the Dutch in South Africa in the early part of this country says: "It is not a pleasant admission for an Englishman to make, but it is the truth that it would be difficult to find in any part of the world a people with so much to be discontented as the old inhabitants of Cape Colony for many years after the fall of the ministry of Earl of Liverpool. Thre was no sympathy whatever shown towards them by the authorities in England, in fact there was a decided antipathy, which was fostered by the so-call philanthropic societies, then at the height of their power. The most outrageous stories concerning the colonists were circulated by men who bore the title of christian teachers, and nothing was too gross to be believed in England until the word "Boer," came to be regarded as a synonym for an ignorant and heartless oppressor of the colored people."

The English government became so oppressive in 1836 several thousand Boers abandoned their farms, placed their household goods in wagons and emigrated across the river Vaal, the northern limit of Cape Colony. Their hardships and trials in this emigration were fully as great as those of the Pilgrim Fathers in New England. Soon after the emigration they organized a republican government, called Transvaal. The little republic was soon involved in a series of wars with the savages in which they showed great hardihood and bravery. In 1852 Great Briton acknowledged the independence of the Transvaal Republic. In 1877, under a pretense of defending the country from the savages, the British governor of Cape Colony issued a proclamation declaring the Transvoll Republic a dependency of England. This resulted in a war between the British government and the Dutch republic in 1880. It was in this war, on Feb. 26th 1881, at the battle of Majub Hill, that a considerable force of English troops was almost entirely wiped out by the Dutch riflemen. The result of the war was the restoration of independence to the republic. Even since, the Dutch boers have celebrated the battle of Majuba Hill annually. In 1869 diamonds were discovered along the river Vaal and several years later gold was discovered in the limits of the Transvaal Republic. This brought in a great influx of English and American prospectors. The Duth were afraid the English immigrants would attempt an annexation movement to England. They passed stringent naturalization laws and imposed heavy taxes on miners and on exports of gold. The English miners and prospectors objected to the heavy taxes reposed by the republic and asked the British Government to force the Transvaal Republic to grant them relief. This is the cause of the present difficulty. The Dutch claim that Great Britian has long wanted to annex their republic and is making the complaints of the Uitlonders (Dutch for foreigners) a pretext for an invasion and annexation. They are a brave people and will fight bravely for their independence.

It is stated by some of our daily papers that the mining taxes imposed by the Dutch in Africa are not heavier than those imposed by Canada in the Klondike.

FIRST COUNTY DITCH

Will be seven miles long and drain a Total of 25.000 acres—Land now Worthless will be Redeemed and Made Valuable.

Geo. A. Ralph came up from Crookston yesterday and is preparing the report, estimates and drawings, which will be submitted by the board of viewers Saturday for the approval of the county commissioners. Mr. Ralph gave the Gazette a forecast of the facts to be presented in the report.

The ditch is to be seven miles in length and will drain approximately 25,000 acres in River Falls, Sauders and adjadent towns, emptying into the Red Lake river near St. Hilaire. It will have a slope of four feet to the mile, having the best fall of any ditch in the valley, and this excellent slope will reduce the cost of the ditch, as a shallow channel can be made and the natural wash of the water will soon double the depth as has been demonstrated in a number of cases in neighboring counties.

The excavating is estimated at 73,000 yards and the cost at about 10c a yard, and will average about $1,000 a mile—remarkably cheap—the average cost per mile of the ditches constructed by the state being $1,500, while in Polk county it runs up to $2,000 a mile—just double what ours is to cost.

The average depth is to be 4 feet base 10 feet to 12 feet, top 16 to 32—the fall of four feet to the mile being so great as to obviate the necessity of a deeper and more expensive ditch.

Work will be commenced as early next spring as possible. The contract for excavating are according to law, let in 100 feet sections to the lowest bidder at public auction, thus enabling the farmers along the route to take a hand and bid on just the amount of work they are prepared to do.

Mr. Ralph says the value of this county of a series of drainage ditches is inestimable. The movement to put one in Garnes is already on foot. The expense is paid entirely by the owners of land abutting the canals, being assessed against the land, and thus a year's benefit is derived before the first payment of taxes falls due, and no portion of this is paid by any except those along the canal.

The board of viewers comes in for great praise at the hands of Mr. Ralph. He says Messrs. E. A. Moran, Ole Johnson and Alex Sweans, the members, constitute one of the very best boards it has been his pleasure to deal with, and the cost to the tax payers of their work in about one third what is usually made by the average board in a ditch of this size.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Money in Sheep.

It is a question if the value and possibilities of sheep farming in Minnesota is appreciated as it should be. Writing of the sheep industry the St. Paul Trade Journal cites the following interesting facts touching the possibilities thereof:

Six years ago R. B. Hinkly, banker and farmer of Rock county, invested $14 in sheep, paying $1 a head. He has kept an account of his actual profits for the time and has got back his original capital of $24, paid all expenses, and shows his net gain to be $2,400. His profits multiplied his capital more than one hundred and seventy-one times.

Mr. Hinkly makes the proposition that if a farmer in his county will now invest $20 in sheep, care for the flock and increase for ten years and give him (Hinkly) the profit, he will make the farmer a present of the best quarter section farm in Rock county.

A few days ago, M. F. Greeley, of the State Farmers institute, offered a South Dakota farmer $500 in cash for one hundred grade ewes, and his offer was refused.

There is no dangar at all of overdoing the sheep industry and there are really no Minnesota farmers, or in the Dakotas, who cannot engage in it. If they do, it seems certain they will find a greater return than in grain production, with always more or less crop uncertainty and prices hammered at by speculators. There is money to be made in sheep and wool that is well worth looking after.

"NURSE TOMKINS."

Nurse Tomkins didn't profess to be "none of your 'ighly trained nurses"—she didn't 'old with "them newfangled notions"—she didn't see "where the thermometer and the 'ygienic measures came in; people didn't live no longer than before all this washing and rinsing was started."

Thus soliloquized Nurse Tomkins in my presence, after I had engaged her services to attend my wife for a passing and slight indisposition—"after" I had engaged her, please observe—for though no doctor myself, I would never have entered into an agreement for the services of an exponent of the above theories. In fact, I never knew a moment's peace after nurse had expressed herself in these and various other matters connected with the sickroom. Nurse Tomkins came on the Saturday and found me reading Friday's Hospital to my wife; it was the sight of this journal, probably, which started Tomkins off on a monologue lasting the best part of an hour. "She knew the paper well—and she wasn't behind the time, not she, in this—she read her Hospital every blessed week, and though she didn't 'old with teaching nursing and doctoring by print, yet them advertisements 'ad often come in useful like."

We listened in silence to what she said, and my wife smiled faintly. Mildred did not improve rapidly, not so quickly as her anxious husband would have liked, and at last—that was on the Sunday, with a deeply-rooted sense of distrust toward her nurse, I decided on taking up my station in the invalid's room. I entered—the fire burned low, the window was open, and the cold, bleak wind of an early spring day blew in. "Your fire is low, Mildred," I said. "The room feels cold." Nurse Tomkins adjusted her cap, settled her apron, and commenced a series of attacks on the fire—bang, bang, bang went the poker. I looked at the woman with a look which has caused a brave man to flinch. "These beastly lodging-house grates—small and pokey," said nurse, "and I never saw a prettier deathbed," responded Tomkins. "She was a real lady—the flowers in her room were something lovely—and 'er husband, he sobbed 'is eyes out, and no wonder—she that was worth a dozen of 'im, and when I left that 'ouse, after all my devoted duty, 'e never so much as give me a sixpence more than my pay. But she! She was a rare beauty, and would have starved to death but for me. I meant to tell the captain this, but he had that cold and 'aughty manner, I just 'eld my council. Yes," continued the woman, the corner of an apron fixed in her left eye, "I've buried dozens of them; but I sticks to it, I never saw a prettier sight than 'er a-lying dead with her 'ands folded patientlike on her breast."

Mildred's head tossed restlessly on the pillow. "Nurse," I said—and I held the door open as I spoke—"will you come and speak to me a minute downstairs." I left the room. Tomkins followed me into the dining-room.

"Tell me," I asked her, "what training have you had in nursing?"

"Twelve years," she answered, her head held high.

"Twelve years—at a hospital?"

"Lor bless you, no, sir; I never required no teaching, I was a born nurse; and I pick it up as I go."

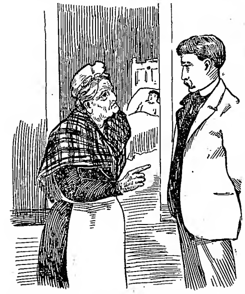
"As you go?" I asked. "Your institution accepts untrained nurses, then?"

"That it doesn't, sir," she returned with spirit, "I had five years' experience when I joined. I was a nurse ever since I was eight years old; my poor father he suffered——"

"But," I put in, interrupting what I guessed might develop into a lengthy anecdote, "you have had no training then, no training as a nurse?"

"Nature taught me," said Tomkins. "Nature and bobservation—if I saw anything made a patient worse I altered my treatment next time. I've 'ad great experience with the sick, as I am seldom called in unless it's an incurable case."

I had been pacing the narrow limits of the room whilst Tomkins spoke, and when she ceased I was conscious of a tremor in my speech—I didn't say much, as little as I could—but I



I WAS A BORN NURSE.

under her breath. The fire sent up a fitful blaze, more coals were shoveled on, a rattle of fire irons, and nurse's work was done. Tomkins walked to the bed, collecting bottles in her progress; one was eau de cologne, another a salts bottle. "Smell these!" she exclaimed, presenting the apex of each bottle to the patient's nose. Mildred was taken by surprise, and the strong salts made her gasp. I commanded my language and sat still, considering the situation with a calmness which afterward astonished me. So long as I was by it was all right, I said to comfort myself, and I would always be by so long as Mildred was being "nursed."

I ensconced myself in an easy chair which was drawn up to the fireside; on the dressing table near by a little cloud of blue smoke ascended to the ceiling—a sickly eastern smell emanating from the burning paper. I leaned over and blew it out. I did not approve of my wife's room smelling of these scents. Nurse saw the action. She stopped shaking the pillows into a hard mass and looked at me questioningly. "Them papers purify the atmosphere of a sickroom," she said, in explanation. "At my last case I burnt them day and night. Capt. Eames' wife—she was a real lady, and she liked fine smells." Mildred told me afterward Mrs. Eames' name had been a familiar one to her, and that she appeared to have been a most remarkable woman. She evidently was a good patient in so far as endurance went. "Mrs. Eames and me," continued nurse, resuming her "explanation" of the burning papers, "we 'ad the same views on your modern nursing, and them 'igh and mighty young modern nurses who are 'aving their 'eads turned by all them new-fangled notions, and them funds and associations—and Mrs. Eames and me often said as 'ow it was all fudge! Now, in 'er case," Nurse Tomkins went on, "them doctors ordered her to eat nothing all day long. Well, that wasn't the first case of typhoid fever I had nursed—and I knew well the pretty young creature's strength couldn't 'old out against starvation for weeks—she, as was accustomed to ride in her carriage, and 'ave the best victuals in the land—so I just judges for myself, and I takes 'er up a cut of meat on the sly—she that sad and beseeching-like, for a bit of something to eat—and didn't she just perk up at it! And looked so pretty with all her laces and frills round her bonny face—twasn't the first case of typhoid I 'ad by no means."

"And Mrs. Eames recovered?" I asked.

"The pretty creature, she died in my arms as gentle and mild as a lamb, paid Tomkins for her "services" and I satisfactorily conveyed to her mind that I could dispense with them in the future. For the sake of peace I gave the woman a few shillings beyond what she expected, but her absence, I considered, would be cheaply bought at thrice that sum, and I never felt more relieved than when I heard the rumble of the cab down the quiet seaside road. Tomkins took the landlady into her confidence before her departure, and I heard her say in the loud voice she assumed in the sick room, "'E'll kill that dear little wife of 'is—just as likely as not—'e's had no experience with the sick, and them young husbands ain't fit to 'ave the care of a young wife; now, if I had staid——"

But I wanted to hear no more, and when I stood next by Mildred's side I took her hand in mine as if I could never let it go, and a feeling of heroism seized me that Mildred was saved from the jaws of death and that I was her savior.—Westminster Budget.

Remarkable Drinks.

Of the many extraordinary drinks regularly consumed, the blood of live horses may perhaps be considered the most so. Marco Polo and Carpini were the first to tell the world of the Tartar practice of opening the veins in horses' necks, taking a drink, and closing the wound again. As far as can be seen, this has been the practice from time immemorial. There is a wine habitually consumed in China which is made from the flesh of lambs reduced to paste with milk, or bruised into pulp with rice, and then fermented. It is extremely stimulating to the physical organism. The Laplanders drink a great deal of smoked snow-water, and one of the national drinks of the Tonquinese is arrack flavored with chicken's blood. The list would scarcely be complete without mention of absinthe, which may be called the national spirituous drink of France. It is a horrible compound of alcohol, anise, coriander, fennel, wormwood, indigo, and sulphate of copper. It is strong, nasty and a moral and physical poison.—New York Home Journal.

APPENDICITIS AFFLICTS CATS.

San Francisco Animal Submits to the Knife Without Resistance.

From the San Francisco Chronicle: Maltese cats are in large demand among business houses not only because of their beauty, but because they have proved themselves to be fine hunters. One of the handsomest of these is Tom, a magnificent fellow belonging to a wholesale grocer in lower California street, or perhaps it would be more correct to say that the cat owns the establishment. He spends his nights in useful labor and is sometimes for a considerable period found regularly each morning with a big dead rat by his side, for, like most of the genuinely capable of his kind, he disdains to eat his game. During the day he has appropriated to his own use a nicely finished mail tray on the office desk, and when the weather is cool a big nickel lamp, standing beside the tray is kept burning for his especial benefit. A fit of indigestion very nearly carried him off one day and it became necessary to perform a surgical operation to save the noble fellow's life. He seemed to know that the veterinary surgeon's lancet was unsheathed for his good and bore the pain like a stoic and without resistance. Vying with Tom in beauty and intelligence and his almost exact counterpart in size and appearance is Joe a splendid maltese of Petaluma birth belonging to a wholesale boot and shoe house on the corner of Second and Stevenson streets. Eyes of amber, a coat of silky blue-gray, sinewy frame and leonine rather than tigerish face Joe is a magnificent specimen of cathood. He not only answers to his name but understands and will obey simple directions issued by his master, jumping on desk or chair at his bidding or playing with a cord strung across the entrance in the office rail. An instance of cat devotion of an extraordinary sort is found in a wholesale dairy establishment on the east side of Front street, near California. Here is a wee motherless gray kitten, so small that it can sit comfortably on one's hand. In the store are five grown cats—common cats of no pedigree, toms and tabbies—and this elder hand has assumed maternal care of the forlorn little orphan. They watch it vigilantly, seeming particularly apprehensive lest it stray out upon the street, and whenever one of them perceives him too near the open door the older fellow walks over to the kitten, picks it up in its mouth and gravely carries it back and deposits it in the rear of the store.

WHEN DAY'S WORK IS OVER.

Mutual Pleasures and Recreations of Husband and Wife.

"If wives and sisters would try to supply something restful and quiet on the arrival of the man of the family from his daily work, might not much of the hopelessness and the discontent of home life be done away with?" "Women work hard all day, too," was the answer, "and they are just as tired at evening time. You cannot expect a miracle from them." But it seems to some of us that just such things can be expected of them, and that were the miracle performed the hopelessness of existing conditions would vanish, says Harper's Bazar. The beginning of the miracle might be brought about if women, no matter how busy they were nor what had happened during the day would arrange to spend an hour in some sort of recreation with their husbands every evening. This recreation might take any form, from quiet companionship, as the wife sewed or knitted beside her husband as he smoked, to pleasant work upon some particular hobby which she had taken up because it was interesting to her and interesting to him, and including anything in the form of outdoor life after the supper, walking or taking part in some game with him. The duties of the two are bound to be of interest to both. It is the pleasures and recreations of both which require study before they can become of common interest and it is part of the wife's field to give sufficient thought to these matters so that they may become of practical use. The miracle might go even a step farther, for the wife or daughter could cultivate some one pursuit or interest of her own, throwing into it her enthusiasm, finding in it refreshment, and making of it an object by which the sympathies and interest of her husband or brother would be aroused. This is only a suggestion, but it has its significance. It has its significance, because it can be tried in any home, because whatever is done with this purpose sincerely in view is just so far a step, and a good step, in the right direction, and because any wife or any sister may fit its application to her own case, and start at once to produce some little result.

Up-Country.

People who have the good sense to live in the country overnight and the good fortune to catch trains back to the city in the morning will appreciate the philosophic remark of the conductor of a certain western "local." There was but one train running on the branch and the service was consequently of the "up and back" order. A number of people bound for the southern terminus of the road happened one day to reach a small station half-way up just as the train paused on its northern trip. The conductor looked them over. "All goin' down to L——?" he inquired. The travelers replied that they trusted to do so eventually. "Well," said the conductor, "you'd better all get on now, and then mebbe we can skip this station on the way back."

All Hands Wanted.

A novel poster was seen by a recent sojourner in Nova Scotia. It was printed on rough paper with red paint in a childish hand, and was tacked to a telegraph pole in a conspicuous position. "There will be a concert and fair in Mrs. Parson's sitting room today, July twenty, at two o'clock sharp. Admission—Adults, five cents; children, two cents; babies, two for a cent."

HEUREAUX'S CAREER

SANTO DOMINGO'S DECEASED TYRANT A FIGURE.

Personal Qualities and Methods That Enabled Him to Maintain a Despotism—His Spy System—Many Enemies Done to Death.

"El que a hierro mata, a hierro muere." "He who lives by the sword shall die by the sword." On July 26, 1899, in the town of Moca, Santo Domingo, Ramon Caceres shot President Ulises Heureaux through the heart, avenging thus the death of his father, whom Heureaux had caused to be assassinated. There are a great many people who add that by this deed also he liberated the Dominican people from the bonds of tyranny in which for the last twenty years they had been held. Ulises Heureaux, or "Lilis," as he was familiarly called, was born in Puerto Plata, about forty-six years ago, and was the illegitimate son of D'Assas Heureaux, a Haytian mulatto, and Josefa Lebert, a negress of St. Thomas. In his early youth he served as a Dominican soldier, and as time went on rose step by step until he obtained the rank of general of division. He was first heard of under Gen. Luperon, and distinguished himself in the wars of the restoration against the Spaniards. In 1878 and 1879 he was the delegate of the executive power in the provinces of Cibao, and in 1880 he served as a delegate of the provisional government in the southern provinces. Afterwards, during the administration of Merino, he was named minister of the interior, and president of the council of ministers. From this point in his career until the day of his death he assumed alone the responsibility of the government of the republic, and with singular ability dedicated all his energies to the complete service of a series of political combinations brought about by elements created entirely by himself. He was elected president of the country in 1882, and remained in office until 1884. He was again elected in 1887, when one small town of 1,500 inhabitants produced 10,000 votes in his favor, and, having been re-elected four times on the same lines, held the reins of government until the day of his death. The personal appearance of Lilis was rather striking. He was a tall mulatto, with tolerably regular features, in which were blended the African and Caucasian types. He had strong, resolute lips, brown and piercing eyes, slightly receding chin, broad, fleshy nose, short curly negro hair tinged with grey, and a short-cropped mustache. One arm hung useless and limp at his side, the result of a bullet wound received in his early days. His bearing was erect and soldier-like, but what most struck one as being remarkable was the comprehensive and penetrating glance with which those intelligent, watchful eyes of his would seem to take in on the instant everything that was going on around him. Lilis was a man of indomitable will, and a good judge of character, his personal bravery and coolness in moments of danger were beyond question, and these qualities, added to his skill as a soldier and his knowledge of the country and of the people with whom he had to deal, enabled him to overcome with ease the conspiracies which were constantly brewing against him. He inherited the instinctive cunning of the African negro, and acquired through constant intercourse with foreigners a suavity and benevolence of demeanor which would throw a stranger off his guard. He was always watchful, although feigning carelessness of deportment, never became excited or lost control of his temper, and even in his most dangerous moments was attentive and courteous. He was a good friend to his friends, and allowed them to enrich themselves at the country's expense. To his enemies, who were greatly in the majority, he was unscrupulous, despotic and cruel in his treatment and he regarded them with a most implacable hatred.

He was licentious in the extreme, and was lavishly generous to his mistresses. Although he maintained many costly establishments, he was simple in the extreme in his personal appearance and habits, and could accommodate himself to the roughest circumstances and the coarsest fare. He never used intoxicants, and used only water as a beverage. At public functions and on gala occasions he wore the uniform of his office and his bearing, though dignified, was always modest and unassuming. He cared nothing for display, and preferred a cool, blue drill suit to blue cloth, gold lace and epaulets, but was always scrupulously clean and neat. In his intercourse with the country people he affected a drawling, singsong patois, but to the more intelligent classes he spoke good Spanish, with much fluency of expression. He spoke English and French well, and it is stated that he understood a little German. He is credited with being superstitious, and a believer in signs and omens. He was generally accompanied by a personal body guard, composed of some six or eight resolute cut-throats, each of whom had killed his man and some of whom had committed murder several times. These men were well paid, were faithful to him, were always armed to the teeth, and were ready to defend him at a moment's notice or to carry out to the letter whatever orders he might give them, without asking any questions.

Feeding the Elephants.

Elephants in the Indian army are fed twice a day. When mealtime arrives they are drawn up in line before a row of piles of food. Each animal's breakfast includes ten pounds of raw rice, done up in five two-pound packages. The rice is wrapped in leaves and tied with grass. At the command, "Attention!" each elephant raises its trunk, and a package is thrown into its capacious mouth. By this method of feeding not a single grain of rice is wasted.

Many persons are credited with being original who only have sense enough to sell old jokes where they have never been before.

VIEW OF THE SOUTHERN CROSS

One of the Most Picturesque Objects in the Southern Skies.

A halo of romance has woven itself about the stars of the Southern Cross, one of the most picturesque objects in the southern skies. At one time these stars formed part of the constellation named the Centaur, which was once included under that called Argo, the Great Ship, but toward the end of the eighteenth century the Southern Cross became a constellation on its own account. Nevertheless its resemblance to a cross must have been observed long before this time, since an Arabian globe has been found on which an outline of a cross is marked about this group of stars. The longer bar of the cross points nearly to the south pole, the situation of which in the heavens is not marked by any brilliant star, but which is about four and a half cross lengths from the foot of the cross. For this reason Alpha and Gamma are sometimes called the 'Pointers." In fact, the Southern Cross may be looked upon as the hour hand of a great clock, which goes around once in twenty-four hours, moving in the same direction as the hands of a clock, unlike our Great Bear or Dipper in the northern heavens, which appear to go around the northern pole in a direction contrary to the hands of a clock. This is because the observer's face, when looking at the northern pole, is turned in a direction contrary to the face of an observer in the southern hemisphere turned toward the southern pole. Near the Southern Cross is an almost vacant patch of sky, which is named the "Coal Sack" by early navigators. In the Coal Sack only one very small star can be seen with the unaided eye, but the telescope reveals many stars in that seemingly deserted region, proving that the striking blackness is due simply to the effect of contrast with the brilliant ground surrounding it on all sides. On the northern edge of the Coal Sack is a star of ruddy hue, known as Kappa, but too small to be seen with the unaided eye. Even a small telescope fails to make one realize the splendor of this star, but when Sir John Herschel turned his twenty-foot reflector in its direction he was surprised to find Kappa the center of a cluster of over 100 stars of all the colors of the rainbow, contrasting wonderfully with one another. He compared it to a superb piece of fancy jewelry, while Flammarion describes it as a "casket of glittering gems."—St Nicholas.

SIBERIA

Destined to Become a Great Agricultural and Mining Country.

The hope of Russia in developing Siberia is that the harvests of the gigantic province will supply Russian grain needs. The efforts, therefore, recently put forth toward attracting Siberian immigrants have been great, but it appears that the province is worthy of such inducements. Its five million square miles have at present a population of four million people, but, owing to Russian energy, last year's addition amounted to no less than four hundred thousand persons. Mr. Monaghan, United States consul at Chemnitz, Germany, reports to the state department at Washington, that this movement is unequaled anywhere except in the records of past immigration into the United States. He says that Siberia, long looked upon as a barren waste, is destined to be one of the world's richest and most productive sections. "In northern France wheat ripens in 137 days; in Siberia, in 107 days. Even strong night frosts do not injure the young seed. I may add that oats require in Siberia and the Amur country only 76 days, and in the regions of the Yenisei only 107. The frost period lasts only 97 days in the Irkutsk country. Speaking of the Yenisei, it may not be known that ten steamers carry the mail regularly on that river. The Obi has already a hundred steamers and two hundred tugs in service. As to the other important development in Siberia, namely, mining, Mr. Monaghan reports that between Tomask and Kuznesk there lie over twenty-three thousand square miles of coal lands which have never been touched. The iron mines are particularly good in quality, yielding as high as 60 per cent. In eastern Siberia alone there are over four hundred places yielding gold.

Small Sins.

There are three crimes which, no matter what may be the degree of their venality, are regarded by the world as venal. They are lying at poker, smuggling, and underrating the age of a 4-year-old child. Where breathes the mother who will not fudge a little when it comes to the question of paying 5 cents for her boy or stealing for him a free ride? If the boy be large for his years, her period of mendacity lasts but a short time, but if he be undersized her equivocation extends far into the seventh year. Such a mother never hands more than a nickel to the conductor when she and Tommy travel together; he might keep a dime for the two, or take change out of a quarter. The railroad companies are beaten out of many thousands of dollars by the darling mothers who cannot see more than four years when paying fares.—New York Press.

Women Piano Tuners.

I have been pondering over the problem of feminine money making occupations, and among the unexplored fields I believe piano tuning to be just the thing for musical women, for it is generally conceded that a woman's ear is finer than a man's, although one musician of my acquaintance takes exception to the statement, says a writer. However, I say to him that fewer women than men sing off the key and play out of tune. Piano tuning is not hard work—that is, it does not require any amount of physical exertion. It does require a correct ear, a knowledge of music and a degree of skill which can be acquired from a teacher. It is one of the few fields where the competition is even.

GREAT OPENING FOR MONEYED MEN.

The Republic of Paraguay Is Ripe for Debts—Plenty of Opportunities for Profitable American Investments, It Is Reported.

Among the foreign investments of the United States there is none which pays a bigger percentage than the investments in Paraguay. Already the United States has many thousand dollars invested there, and, according to the United States consul at Assuncion, the capital of the republic, there are mines of wealth waiting there for those who will come and work for them. Granted that John N. Ruffin is an enthusiast, there seems to be some grounds for what he writes to the state department. He says:

"It is incomprehensible to me why American capitalists overlook a country so full of promising opportunities for the sure investment of capital as Paraguay. I am more convinced than ever, since my recent trip through the republic, that Paraguay is a most favorable country for the operation of American capital. I will name some new opportunities for investment: Bids will be open in six or eight months for the construction of a new city market. The old market will be torn down, and in its place will be erected a fine city hall. Capitalists could execute this work and take as a guaranty the rents from the new market. The rents will amount to $50,000 or $75,000 gold a year; the old market gives about $25,000 gold a year rent, and it is by far too small, covering only half a block, while the new one will cover a whole block. A new city hall will soon be constructed, the present one being in the lower floor of Congress hall. Other public works, such as the docks, levees, city bridges, etc., will offer opportunities for profitable investment. An American bank could conduct a large and profitable business in building houses, such as are constructed in the United States by building loan associations. There are many new modern houses going up in all parts of the city. Many more would be erected if the people could borrow money on reasonable terms and if the architects did not charge exorbitant prices. The bank could get a clause in its charter to build houses, in which case it would be necessary to bring its own architect. A house of one story, containing only seven rooms of ordinary size, costs $4,000 gold. A bank having its own architect could build such a house for $3,000 or less and make a handsome profit. Material and labor are cheap. A penny savings bank could be made a part of the bank, and would be liberally patronized by the people. The bank could export hides and skins. It could easily buy them in the country and sell them to Europe, America, or Montevideo for a good price."

Here is a chance, as a South American consul sees it.

WHOLESALE SALMON FISHING.

Squaws Carry Great Loads of Fish Over the Rocks.

One of the most ingenious machines for catching fish in use on the Columbia river is the fish wheel, says Harper's Weekly. Three great scoop nets revolve on an axle hung out from the rear of a scow anchored near the shore. When the wheel revolves each net as it rises from the water dumps its catch into a slanting trough attached to the axle, and from there the fish slide into another trough, which conveys them into the scow. The swift current propels the wheel, which is set with the open side of the net down stream, and the fish swim into it, so that the river and the fish themselves do all the work, the fisherman's only task being to convey the fish from the scow to the cannery. A story which would carry sorrow to the souls of the imaginative fishermen of Pike county, Pennsylvania, is told of the owner of a fish wheel, near The Dalles, Ore., who fell asleep during a lull in the run of salmon one afternoon and left his fish wheel running. When he awoke, his scow was sinking under the weight of the fish which had caught themselves during his slumbers and he was compelled to swim for shore. Ingenious fishermen have taken advantage of the rugged cliffs that border the river at some points and have erected great wheels on stationary anchorages, with tramways leading direct to their canneries, and the industry of catching, canning and shipping salmon is carried on by them with all the system and accuracy of a manufacturing business. When salmon are caught on a scow wheel they have often to be carried a considerable distance to the cannery. Squaws are in demand for this work, as they carry loads over the rocks that would be impossible to a white man. The squaw holds a large bag on her back, which she holds open with one hand while she tosses in the fish with the other. She hooks her fingers in the fish's gills and throws it with a quick jerk over her shoulder into the bag.

Put on a thick covering of mayonnaise dressing and serve.—November Ladies' Home Journal.

How Mrs. Pinkham
HELPED MRS. GOODEN.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 45,331]

"I am very grateful to you for your kindness and the interest you have taken in me, and truly believe your medicines and advice are worth more to a woman than all the doctors in the world. For years I had female troubles and did nothing for them. Of course I became no better and finally broke down entirely. My troubles began with inflammation and hemorrhages from the kidneys, then inflammation, congestion and falling of the womb and inflammation of ovaries.

"I underwent local treatment every day for some time; then after nearly two months the doctor gave me permission to go back to work. I went back, but in less than a week was compelled to give up and go to bed. On breaking down the second time, I decided to let doctors and their medicine alone and try your remedies. Before the first bottle was gone I felt the effects of it. Three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and a package of her Sanative Wash did me more good than all the doctors' treatments and medicine.

"The first remark that greets me now is 'How much better you look!' and you may be sure I never hesitate to tell the cause of my health."—MRS. E. J. GOODEN, ACKLEY, IA.

CURING INEBRIATES.

Some Facts About the Method of Giving the Keeley Cure.

The management of the Minneapolis Keeley Institute is willing to give information to interested persons who desire to find out something in reference to the Keeley Cure. In a recent interview the manager said:

"The Keeley Cure has reclaimed over 300,000 men and women from inebriety. Any person who takes the Keeley Cure is in the best possible physical condition after taking the cure."

"Are patients confined to their room or bed during treatment?" he was asked.

"Not unless some disease other than inebriety has attacked the patient," he replied.

"Do you give whisky during treatment?"

"In all cases where the patient desires or requires it. He usually declines it after the second or third day of treatment, and frequently will not take it after the first day. The whisky used at the Minneapolis Keeley Institute is absolutely pure."

"Does he refuse it because it nauseates him?"

"No. Nausea is not produced; he drops the use of whisky because he is indifferent to it; does not desire it—the remedy promptly relieves the system of the necessity for liquor, and the patient stops using it."

"Does a periodic drunkard yield as readily to the treatment as an habitual drinker?"

"Any manner of drunkenness is cured in four weeks, whether habitual or periodic, and whether the inebriate has used whisky, beer, wine, brandy, rum or gin."

"Do not patients grow weary and indifferent during treatment?"

"Time passes most agreeably at the Institutes. What with the attendance upon treatment four times daily, taking of the tonic every two hours, the pleasant companionship of men who can sympathize because they have suffered alike, the various entertainments, etc., the time passes pleasantly."

"Is the treatment hurtful?"

"No, on the contrary, it benefits the patient in every respect. There has never been a single instance in which any person was injured by it."

"Is it not said to injure the eyesight?"

"Instead of hurting the eyes, instances are of frequent occurrence where patients who have used glasses have discarded them after treatment."

"Is it not charged that sexuality is disturbed?"

"This charge is absolutely unfounded. The home life of every Keeley Graduate will testify to the truth.

"We will be pleased to send literature to any person sending name and address to the Keeley Institute, corner Tenth street south and Park avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dairy Notes.

Reports are current that more than the usual number of cows have been killed this year by being struck by lightning. Investigations reveal the strange fact that a large number of them were killed while standing by wire fences. The lightning would strike the wire and instead of grounding would run along the fence its whole length, and somewhere in its course would come near enough to the cows to affect them fatally. Had the lightning grounded as soon as it struck the wire the danger of striking the cows at all would have been small. It was evident that the posts in most cases acted as non-conductors or at least were so inferior to the wires as a conducting medium that the lightning hung to the wires. This will be an easy matter to remedy. A wire running down the posts every little way will be a means of conducting the electricity into the earth.

In a recent issue we took up the question of the Illinois law regarding the slaughter of tuberculous cattle. We cited the law that had been in effect for a number of years allowing an appraisement of all animals slaughtered. In the appropriation bill of the last legislature a clause was inserted that made more specific the manner of slaughtering such animals and the amounts of money that could be obtained from the state for them. It was taken into consideration that there was a great difference in the value of cows slaughtered dependent on the progress of the disease. One cow with a single tubercle in her not larger than a pea would be valuable as a milker for years, while a cow whose lungs were in an advanced state of decay would be practically worthless. Therefore all slaughtered animals are now divided into six grades or classes. Class A: All cattle that on slaughter are found to be free from tuberculosis. These are paid for at full value by the state provided the valuation does not exceed $75. B, C, D, E, and F, indicate the degrees of progress the disease has made in the animals. For B the owner recovers 75 per cent of the value; for C, 50 per cent; for D, 35 per cent; for E, 25 per cent, and for F 15 per cent.

The healthfulness of oleomargarine is a question that is constantly being considered. The difficulty of properly answering the question is increased by the fact that the oleomargarine of today is not necessarily the oleomargarine of tomorrow, and the oleomargarine that is turned out by one factory is not the same as that turned out by another. Chemists have now discovered that some oleomargarine contains paraffin, to give it firmer composition. Paraffin by itself is indigestible, and it may also be indigestible when incorporated with the fats that compose oleomargarine, but we are not yet certain of that point, for the reason that no one appears to have investigated what paraffin will do in such a combination. It may be less harmful than by itself or it may be more harmful. It may be that the union of paraffin with fat permits some of it to get through the tissues with the fat, and there it may work all kinds of mischief—or it may not. However, people do not care to take their chances on such uncertainties. It is manifestly the duty of the government to ascertain such facts for the people. If paraffin is to be sold as butter we should at least know what effect it will have when taken into the human system. We believe that every pound of oleomargarine that goes out should have stamped on the package containing it the ingredients that are used in its manufacture, including all preservatives.

Poultry Notes.

From Farmers' Review: This season has taught us that minks or weasels will catch chicks much more than either ducks or turkeys, after the poultry is any size. The reason is not hard to find. After turks get any size they invariably fly high to roost and the ducks make such a terrible racket whenever they are disturbed that it would take a bold mink to face the music. Next season we shall try the plan of hanging lighted lanterns among the coops; they are almost a necessity anyway, when one is fattening a flock of ducks. On dark nights they are in a constant uproar and of course do not do so well as if they were quiet.

Admirers of Blue Andalusians report them as being very great layers of large white eggs, and as being almost as beautiful in shape, plumage and carriage as birds. They are larger than Minorcas, the hens frequently weighing six pounds when in laying shape, which is a very good weight. They are also reported as being extra hardy, especially the young chicks. This will appeal to admirers of the Mediterranean class of fowls, as the Leghorn chicks, as a rule, are not very hardy.

Early chicks were the exception around and in this vicinity this year; and poor hatches the rule. This universal complaint of poor hatches is generally thought to be due to the extremely long continued cold of last winter. Turkeys and ducks were not affected by it, if this was the cause, for their eggs hatched well.

During the dry time this fall, have a large quantity of road dust gathered up and stored in a dry place. Get lots of it, for it will be needed before good out-door dusting places can be found next spring.

The last of this month is a good time to caponize the two-pound cockerels, if one can spare the room, there is no branch of poultry that gives better returns, except early duck, than capons. Caponize a few for your own use next winter, if you do not care to market them.

Aim, and don't miss your aim, to have the pullets and what hens you keep, in their permanent winter quarters by the end of this month. A later removal will cause a later beginning in egg producing and eggs in November, December and January are worth money.

Bogus Hog Cholera Serum.

The veterinarian of the Indiana Agricultural Experiment Station points out that agents of cholera medicines in White, Warren, Pulaski and Fulton counties, Ind., are claiming that they sell goods recommended by the station, and agents in Marshall and Kosciusko counties claim to be agents of the Indiana State Board of Agriculture. All agents making such claims in any part of the state are frauds, he says, and should be prosecuted. This is a timely warning and one that readers of The Farmers' Review will do well to bear in mind when agents come along claiming to possess and use serum made by the government or state bacteriologists. The United States Department of Agriculture has announced success in the preventive treatment of hogs against cholera with serum which they have made and used to inoculate hogs and we now expect to hear from all sides that unprincipled men are out among the farmers claiming to have authority from those mentioned to inoculate hogs. The dire disease will surely follow in their wake, for they are using some fictitious dangerous serum which has been unscientifically prepared from the active virus of hog cholera. Should such men visit the homes of Review readers we trust that they will be required to show signed credentials from those they claim to represent before they are allowed to wield their squirt guns among well hogs. A little learning is a dangerous thing and one cannot be too careful in experimenting with alleged serums which are far more likely to do harm than good. We have abundant faith that the government will eventually make it possible for all farmers to prevent hog cholera among their hogs by inoculation with bona-fide serum, but just at present we warn our readers to fight shy of all but authorized agents of the Bureau of Animal Industry or state experiment stations.

Co-operative Dairying in Belgium.

Co-operative dairy societies had until recently not made much progress in Belgium, but during the past few years there has been a remarkable increase in their numbers, eighty-seven institutions of this character having been established in the year 1897 alone, says the British Dairy Farmer. At the beginning of 1898 there were 167 dairies in operation, supported by 17,022 co-operating members. An interesting feature of this development is the fact that it has taken place for the most part among the peasant farmers, the average number of cows owned by the co-operators being barely three per member. Butter is the principal product of these societies, and their output of this commodity in 1897 was valued at £355,000, while the value of their sales of cheese, milk, and separated milk was estimated at £10,500. The published accounts of one of these co-operative dairies situated at Oosteamp, Flanders, show that the average price realized for the butter produced and sold in the year 1897 was 1s. 0½d. per lb. The average price received by the shareholders for the milk supplied by them to the dairy was 3½d. per gallon, but the profits on the working of the year amounted to an additional halfpenny per gallon, while the value of the separated milk returned to the members was calculated to be 1¼d. per gallon. In this society, which is typical of many others, the profits are divided as follows: One-half to the shareholders who hold one share for each cow they keep; one-fourth to the reduction of loan capital, 15 per cent to the reserve fund, and the remainder is distributed in the form of a bonus to the employes of the society.

Precocity of the Peacock.

Most books on these birds state that they only reach the adult state at three years of age. I should be much astonished if the peacock does not attain this age at one year, but I can affirm that the hen lays fertile eggs at the age of eleven months. I have before my eyes a hen which was born in July, 1898, and is now followed by two young birds. Possibly the precocity of these birds is not general, but the fact I give suffices to rectify an error found in works on zoology and breeding. It is of practical interest because it demonstrates that the rearing of peacocks and their propagation is a much more rapid work than generally believed. Nevertheless, I must remark that this hen, aged eleven months has only laid two eggs, whereas another older hen laid, at the same time, six fertile eggs. Thus laying amongst the birds becomes more abundant after two years of age. It would, then, be interesting to know whether the number of eggs may be yet greater. I must also remark that when confined one peacock suffices for several hens. So says a correspondent of L'Aviculteur.

Now is the time to buy blooded stock for use as breeders in the spring. It is always better to have one's own eggs than have to depend on eggs brought from a distance, no matter whether the eggs are to be hatched out under a hen or in an incubator. Eggs in transit are exposed to too many accidents. We have known a shipment to be delayed for days and come into the hands of the buyer in a half rotten condition. The men that are going into raising pure bred poultry for the first time sometimes hesitate as to whether to wait till spring and buy the eggs for sitting or buy the fowls and have them lay the eggs they want. The latter is by all means the more sensible course. A rooster and two hens will make a good breeding pen. The hens will lay enough eggs before spring to pay for themselves and the eggs will be had fresh for hatching. There will then be no doubt as to their fertility and purity of breed.

Protection for Carrier Pigeons.—An odd contrivance is used in China to protect the carrier pigeons from the attacks of birds of prey. Tiny bamboo tubes are fastened under their wings, and as they fly the air, passing swiftly through the tubes, makes a shrill whistle, which serves to frighten off the other birds.

IN THE PALMY DAYS.

Gambler Won All the Money with the Odds Against Him.

"Times ain't what they used to be in this town," mused the old-timer, as he shoved his hands far down into his trousers pockets and felt about for the "case" coin which he knew was there, says the Memphis Scimitar. "In them days, 'long about '66, '67 and '68, money was plentiful and sportin' people rolled 'em high. Jefferson street, from No. 9 clean down to Third street, was gambling houses, and every one of them was straight except two. And, say, that puts me in mind of a lucky play I had one time. It sounds like pipe, but it's true. I beats the game at 40 Jefferson street and they didn't do nothin' but deal the old thing there. It was one of the two brace houses and the fellers that worked there was so crooked they slept in beds made in the shape of the letter S. They couldn't get no rest in no other kind. Up at the El Dorado on Saturday nights the keno game begun at 7 o'clock, at 50 cents a card, and ran that way until 9, and then it was $1 a card. I goes down there one night about 10 o'clock and took my luck with me and by 12 o'clock I had salted away $600. Next day it was rainin' and drizzlin' and I didn't have nothin' else to do, so I dropped into 40 and set into the game there. I knew that the game was 'bent,' but I had this money and didn't mind takin' a chance. I hadn't been into the game long before I picks up four aces. I bet 'em up the cat's back and a man across the table kept comin' back at me. When it came to the show down I had 'im beat and the banker announces that the game is broke. I waits till they gits another stake and the game starts again. I played along and finally picks up four deuces. I keeps bettin' 'em and finally the show down comes again and I has the other feller beat. The banker says the game is broke again and I cashes in. They were fixin' up hands, you know, and I got the 'cooler' twice when it was meant for one of the house men. The man who was to get the 'cooler' gets my hand and, of course, he thinks he has the 'cooler,' so he bets the bank's roll at me. The man who owned the joint was up stairs sleep and then went and woke him up. He comes down bitin' mad and says: 'Where's the sucker that broke this brace game?' and I smiles and says, 'He's right here.' He knows me, and when I says that he smiles and says, 'Well, if anybody had to get it, I'm glad it's you. You're mighty luck, you are.' He didn't do nothin' but fire the fathead that fixed the hands up wrong. I wouldn't tell this story if I couldn't prove it, but the man that I can prove it by is right back in the saloon yonder." The man in the saloon corroborated the story between drinks.

PAPER AND TREES.

The importation of wood pulp into Italy is greatly on the increase. One and one-quarter million square miles is the estimate of the timber area of Canada, as given by the United States consul-general at Montreal. Norway supplied Great Britain with twice as much ground wood pulp last year as the United States, Canada, Sweden and Holland combined. One of the most valuable timber trees in the great northwest, the red cedar, grows to a maximum height of 300 feet and a diameter of fourteen feet.

Paper shingles have been introduced into Japan by an enterprising Tokyo firm as substitutes for the wooden article. The new idea is a slab of thick-tarred pasteboard, more easily managed than ordinary shingles and costing only half as much. Some historical trees have lately come into the New York lumber market from the Wilderness battlefield of the civil war. The bills of lading showed that the trees had been felled and the lumber sawed there. In some of the planks the minie balls can be seen plainly, the wood adjacent to the bullets being discolored or rotten, but not enough to damage the lumber.

The portion of the state of Washington west of the summit of the Cascade range is covered with the heaviest continuous belt of forest growth in the United States. This forest extends over the slopes of the Cascade and Coast ranges, and occupies the entire drift plain surrounding the waters of Puget sound. Excepting the highest mountain peaks and the sand dunes of the coast, which are treeless, the valleys of the Cowlitz and Chehalis rivers, which are dotted with small oaks and other deciduous trees, and the stunted yellow pines occupying with open growth the barren Steilacoom plain, all of western Washington is covered with a magnificent forest.

Good Story on Lord Aberdeen.

New York Evening Post: A story is going the rounds in London of the earl of Aberdeen, the former viceroy of Ireland and governor-general of Canada, who in his boyhood days developed a large measure of the religious, not to say Puritanical, spirit so strongly characteristic of many of the illustrious Gordon family. In his Eton days he went to one of the upper masters and asked him whether he thought it was right for him to oil his cricket-bat on Sundays, as the other boys did. The teacher intimated that he did not regard the act as one of the seven deadly sins, and advised the youthful zealot to refer the question to his form-master. "O," replied the young Gordon; "I've asked him, and he says it is all right if one does it in a reverent and humble spirit." Thus do sinners make the road easy for saints.

Royal Baking Powder

Imparts Healthfulness to the Food

Royal Baking Powder possesses peculiar qualities not found in other leavening agents, which arise from the superior fitness, purity and healthfulness of its ingredients.

Royal Baking Powder leavens the food perfectly by its own inherent power without changing or impairing any of the elements of the flour.

Thus the hot-breads, hot-rolls and muffins, and the delicious hot griddle-cakes raised by the Royal Baking Powder are wholesome and digestible, and may be eaten without distress, even by persons of delicate digestion.

Alum baking powders are low priced, as alum costs but two cents a pound; but alum is a corrosive poison and it renders the baking powder dangerous to use in food.

COUNTING THE VOTE

RESULT OF TUESDAY'S VOTING IN THE SEVERAL STATES.

Republicans Figure Out a Majority for Nash in Ohio of 50,000—Fusionists Carry Nebraska by at Least 12,000, Official Figures May Make It Larger—Republicans Claim Kentucky, but a Contest Is Certain.

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 10.—The statisticians at the Republican headquarters have been busy day and night endeavoring to secure some accurate figures on the plurality of Judge Nash, the Republican candidate for governor, and an unofficial table of pluralities by counties has been completed. This shows that in fifty-seven counties Nash, Rep., has 84,399 over McLean, Dem., and in thirty-one counties McLean has 34,035 over Nash. This gives Nash over McLean in the state, 50,364. It is not believed the official returns will make any important change in these figures. No figures are available on the total vote in the state as the committee sought to obtain only pluralities. Notwithstanding efforts were made to get the vote for Jones, returns have been secured from only forty of the eighty-eight counties. These include the counties in which the heaviest Jones vote was polled, and show a total of 84,000. The remaining counties will swell the Jones vote to 100,000.

KENTUCKY.

Both Sides Claim the Victory and a Contest Is Certain.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 10.—No matter what result the fact of the returns of the election show, a contest is very likely to occur. Returns received show Republican gains, and basing an estimate on the normal complexion of the precincts still unreported indicate a plurality of 6,000 to 8,000 for W. S. Taylor for governor. The belated returns are mostly from mountain counties, which are strongly Republican. The Eleventh district, which, in 1896, gave McKinley a plurality of 10,000, is only about half reported. Eleven out of nineteen counties in this district give Taylor pluralities aggregating 12,062, indicating that the Republicans have carried the district by about the same figures as in 1896.

The Goebel people cling to their claim of a plurality of 5,000 in the state, these figures being the estimate made by the nominee himself.

At Republican headquarters in this city Taylor's plurality is placed at 8,000. In neither case is it possible to get figures upon which the claim is based, but each side evidently fearing that giving publicity to the reports of its agents throughout the state might work to the advantage of its opponents in the event of a contest.

Almost complete returns from Louisville and Jefferson county indicate a Republican plurality of a little over 3,000.

Returns received by the Courier-Journal give Goebel a plurality of 2,010 votes. These figures are based on returns from 1,791 out of 1,863 precincts. Of the 72 missing precincts 20 are in the Republican Eleventh district, 7 are in Republican counties of the Tenth district, and 31 are in Democratic counties of the Tenth district.

IOWA.

Republicans Claim a Plurality of About 60,000.

Des Moines, Iowa, Nov. 10.—Returns from ninety of the ninety-nine counties of the state, with estimates on the others show that the Republican claim of 60,000 plurality for Gov. Shaw is maintained and may go slightly above that figure. His majority over all candidates for governor is estimated at 48,000, which is the largest in the history of the state on the gubernatorial vote. Based on the vote of 1898 the vote this year shows a Republican increase of about 3 per cent for the Republicans and 10 per cent for the Democrats, which would make the total Republican vote in the neighborhood of 243,000 and the total Democratic vote about 100,000. But this is a falling off from the vote of '97 of about 6 and 10 per cent respectively. The legislature will stand: Senate, 35 Republicans and 15 Democrats; house, 83 Republicans and 17 Democrats, a gain of 17 votes on joint ballot for the Republicans. Both the Gear and Cummins forces claim a majority of the Republican votes for the United States senatorship.

MARYLAND.

Democrats Sweep Everything Before Them.

Baltimore, Nov. 10.—Unofficial returns from Baltimore city and all the counties of the state show that the Democrats swept practically everything before them in the contest. John Walter Smith, Dr. Joshua Hering and Senator Rayner, their candidates for governor, controller and attorney general, respectively, were elected over the Republican candidates by approximately 11,300. The official count, it is thought, will not materially change these figures. They elected eleven state senators for four-year terms, which, with their four hold-overs, will give them fifteen out of a total membership of twenty-six in the upper house of the general assembly. In the lower house, composed of ninety-one members, the Democrats elect sixty-six, while the Republicans will have only twenty-five delegates in the legislature to meet in January of next year.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Republican Ticket Has a Plurality of 65,000.

Boston, Nov. 10.—While the entire Republican state ticket was elected Tuesday the Democrats are jubilant over the result in Boston. The figures for the state are: Crane, Rep., 168,876; Paine, Dem., 103,814; Republican plurality, 65,062. The plurality of Gov. Wolcott over C. L. Bruce last year was 83,168. In the senate the Democrats have 9 members, a gain of 2, which means the ability to demand a roll call, a parliamentary advantage not within Democratic means for some years. The senate will stand: Republicans, 31; Democrats, 9. The house will stand: Republicans, 166; Democrats, 70; Social-Democrats, 2; Independents, 2. The Republicans have lost 1 representative and the Democrats have made a net gain of 4, while the Socialists hold their own.

Mrs. Langtry Denies Separation Rumors.

Reading, Pa.—Henry Goodhart of this city, a cook on Admiral Dewey's flagship, the Olympia, during the Spanish-American war, died of asthma in the Red Cross hospital at Mare Island, Cal.

MISSISSIPPI.

The Democratic State Ticket Is Elected.

Jackson, Miss., Nov. 10.—The Democratic state ticket elected is as follows: Governor, H. H. Longino; lieutenant governor, J. T. Harrison; secretary of state, J. L. Power; auditor, W. Q. Cole; treasurer, Robert Stowers; attorney general, Monroe McClurg; state revenue agent, Wirt Adams; superintendent of education, H. L. Whitfield; state land commissioner, E. H. Hall; clerk supreme court, E. W. Brown; railroad commissioners, Northern district, J. C. Kincannon; Southern district, A. Q. May; Central district, J. D. McInnis. The ticket was voted solid and there will not be a variance of 100 votes between any of the candidates on the list. Late results do not change the estimated majority of 30,000.

NEBRASKA.

Fusionists Carry the State by at Least 12,000.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 10.—Complete county returns indicate that the fusionists have carried the state by 12,000. They elect William Neville to congress over Moses P. Kincaid in the Sixth district, but by a reduced majority, and gain slightly in judicial districts. Chairman Edmiston, of the fusion state central committee, insists that S. A. Holcomb is elected judge of the supreme court by 15,000 plurality more. The Republican committee gave up the fight and have quit counting. W. J. Bryan said he had nothing further to add to his comment that the fusion victory in Nebraska was a rebuke to the national administration. He refused to discuss the results in other states.

NEW YORK.

Republicans Make Gains in the Assembly.

New York, Nov. 10.—Latest returns give the Republican assembly membership as 93 against 57 Democrats, a Republican gain of 12. In New York county the largest Tammany majority was that for surrogate, Abner C. Thomas, 53,568. The Tammany pluralities in the several counties are about normal, the gains of assemblymen in this city being due largely to combinations with Citizens Union and laboring men against Republican candidates.

NEW JERSEY.

Republican Majority Is Estimated at About 16,000.

New York, Nov. 10.—Taking the highest candidate for county office in each ticket in all the counties, the Republican plurality in New Jersey is well above 20,000. Taking what local political leaders consider a fair average of each county the Republican plurality is about 16,000. A year ago the Republican plurality in the state, calculated in the same manner, was 8,400. In the same year Voorhees, Rep., for governor, had 5,499 plurality.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Republicans Claim a Plurality of 100,465 for Their Ticket.

Philadelphia, Nov. 10.—Complete returns from 60 of the 67 counties of the state, and including Philadelphia, and with carefully revised estimates from the seven missing counties show a plurality of 100,465 for Barnett, Rep., for state treasurer over Creasy, Dem. The plurality for Brown, Rep., for supreme court judge, will exceed that of Barnett by probably 30,000.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Republican Candidates Are Elected by Safe Majorities.

Aberdeen, S. D., Nov. 10—Returns, although not yet complete, indicate that the Republican candidates for the supreme bench have been elected by good majorities. The Republicans claim the election of their ticket by not less than 10,000. Fusion Chairman Kidd is not claiming anything, but does not yet admit defeat.

Miners' Strike Settled.

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 10.—The strike at East Bluff, near Pekin, of the miners of Grant & Sons, Bohlander Bros., and King & Grossweiler has been settled and the miners have returned to work. The miners struck a month ago for 60 cents per ton, mine run, and the operators have granted the demand, though they claim that by doing so they are paying 15 cents per ton more than the price paid in that district.

Admiral Dewey's Wedding.

Washington, Nov. 10.—Admiral Dewey and Mrs. Mildred Hazen will probably be married to-day. No announcement has been made, but the necessary license was procured yesterday and arrangements for the wedding, which will be attended only by members of the two families, are complete.

Majesties Meet.

Potsdam, Nov. 10.—The czar and czarina arrived here and were welcomed by the emperor and empress of Germany at Wild Park station. The most cordial greetings were exchanged. Their majesties then drove to the new palace.

In Memory of Winnie Davis.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 10.—The tablets in St. Paul's church to Miss Winnie Davis and the Davis sons were unveiled yesterday with impressive ceremonies.

Double Turrets a Success.

Washington—Naval contractors are delighted over the report which has reached Washington from Newport News of the admirable performance of the new battleship Kentucky. Capt. Chester writes that the ship is particularly steady, rolling only slightly. The weather was such as to test the ability of a large ship, and the results are more gratifying to the designers because there has been some question as to the effect of the great weights represented by the double turrets on the deck.

News of the Northwest

FLURRY IN OHIO.

Claims That the Republican Candidate for Lieutenant Governor Has Been Defeated.

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 11.—A flurry was created in political circles yesterday by the claims of the Democratic state committee that Patrick, Dem., had been elected lieutenant governor over Caldwell, Rep. The returns show that Caldwell had been cut heavily as the result of the fight made against him by the anti-saloon league, but the Republican committee had not given the matter any serious consideration. Yesterday, however, county chairmen were asked for the vote on lieutenant governor. Returns have been received from seventy counties, which give Caldwell a plurality of 8,278. The remaining eighteen counties give Nash a plurality of 12,160, and as they are all strongly Republican, Chairman Dick claims the election of Caldwell with the greatest confidence. It is claimed Caldwell's plurality over Patrick will not be less than 5,000. Revised figures on the head of the ticket show that Nash's plurality is 50,512.

FRAUD IN KENTUCKY.

Is Being Claimed by Both Parties—Result Still in Doubt.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 11—A confusion of claims and counter-claims, to quiet which the official count, or, perhaps, a contest before the legislature, will be necessary, is all that is left of Tuesday's election. Above it all vehement cries of fraud, committed or contemplated, are heard. Each side claims the election of its ticket by a plurality of about 4,000, and presents figures to back up the claim. These figures in some counties vary widely, and it is impossible to tell which side, if either, has accurate returns.

The Duke Called.

Washington, Nov. 11.—The Spanish minister, Duke d'Arcos, was among the callers at the state department. It is understood that negotiations for the new treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation have opened at Madrid, and while not directly participating, the authorities here are exchanging views upon the various features of the treaty.

Bank Wrecker Sentenced.

Northampton, Mass., Nov. 11.—In the superior court Lewis Warner, aged sixty, who wrecked the Hampshire County National bank and the Hampshire Savings bank by embezzling $100,000, was sentenced to a term in state prison of not more than twelve nor less than nine years, the first day to be in solitary confinement.

Rates Will Go Up.

Chicago, Nov. 11.—The Central Freight association has decided to drop commodity rates Jan. 1 and to restore the rates which were in effect a year ago. The new rates will be on an average of 15 per cent higher than those now effective and will be applied to nearly two-thirds of the varieties of freight handled by railroads.

To Fight for the Boers.

Chicago, Nov. 11—Charles Schneider, who says he is in sympathy with the Boers and asserts that he is willing to march to the front and fight with President Kruger's men, is organizing a regiment to send to South Africa. Most of the members of the regiment, he says, will be veterans of the Franco-Prussian war.

Walter Cook Bound Over.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Nov. 11.—Walter Cook, the young man who last Monday evening fired two shots at Joel Jones was bound over to the next term of the circuit court on the charge of assault with intent to kill. In default of bail he was sent to jail. Cook is a native of Jamaica. He has been here since September.

Secret Treasure Unearthed.

Tipton, Ind., Nov. 11.—While workmen were excavating preparatory to laying a foundation for a new home for Jacob B. Tilgas, a farmer, they unearthed an iron kettle containing $1,000 in gold. It is supposed that the treasure was secreted by the late father of the present owners many years ago.

Washington, Nov. 11.—The Marblehead has sailed from Acapulco for San Juan, Costa Rica. At that point she will be in cable reach should the outlook in Columbia require sudden movement. The Machias has sailed from Gibraltar for Port Said on her way to Manila.

LET'S GIVE THANKS.

Gov. Lind Issues His Thanksgiving Proclamation.

St. Paul, Nov. 12.—Gov. Lind has issued his Thanksgiving proclamation. In it he says:

"The season has arrived when custom and pleasant memories, as well as the sanction of positive law, admonish us to specially devote one day to the giving of thanks to the author of our being for the manifold blessings enjoyed by the people of our state and nation. An abundant harvest, active exchange of the products of labor, increase and growth in wealth and population, the comfort and happiness of our many homes, the growing public spirit which from year to year actuates our people to larger activity for the public good, as evidenced by our institutions for the care of the defective and dependent classes and the generous provisions of our system of public schools for the education and culture of our people, are cause for most grateful rejoicing and thanksgiving. Let us, therefore, observe this day, with its time-honored customs, in the spirit of him whose coming heralded 'Peace on earth and good will toward men.'"

DESTROYING PINE TIMBER.

Small Worm Causes Awful Havoc in South Dakota.

Deadwood, S. D., Nov. 12.—Black Hills people are becoming alarmed at the destruction of pine timber by a small worm that made its appearance here about two years ago. The worm is about three-quarters of an inch long and a quarter of an inch through and travel in packs. The worm starts in on the outer bark of the tree, bores in and drinks up the sap and the tree soon dies. Government Inspector G. A. Steele has recently investigated the matter and finds that 150 square miles of the finest pine timber in the Hills has been destroyed by the pest.

ST. PAUL WANTS IT.

The State Republican league is working for this end and the Commercial club of St. Paul is actively co-operating. The next national meeting will be held in the spring, at any date from April to July, as the executive committee will decide.

Must Face the Charge of Murder.

Bemidji, Minn., Nov. 12.—The grand jury for Beltrami county brought in an indictment against Nelson Rust, of the Itasca state park, on a charge of the murder of William McMullin in October, 1898. The two were out hunting with others and Rust claimed to have mistaken McMullin for a deer and shot him through the heart. McMullin's brothers were not satisfied with Rust's explanation of the accident and brought the matter before the grand jury, with the result indicated. The trial promises to be an interesting one.

Terrible Experience of a Woman at St. Louis.

St. Louis, Nov. 14.—In the grasp of her insane husband, Mrs. Ralph Reiff battled for her life from 7 p. m. last Saturday night till 2 a. m. Sunday morning. When help finally came Mrs. Reiff was so weak that she could scarcely speak. She had been kept a prisoner by her husband in their third-story flat for three days. For two days of this time she was without food. There was no one on the same floor but the couple. When she attempted to leave the room her husband would seize her and bring her back. A tenant on the floor below hearing the disturbance finally called on a passing policeman, who summoned help and then hastened to the woman's relief. Muffled sounds and a woman's moans could be heard as the party reached the third floor. Forcing the door Mrs. Reiff was found lying on the bed with her husband's hands clutching her throat. She was struggling feebly but was unable to offer much resistance. The husband retained his hold until he was pulled away.

BOUT WITH BANDITS.

Two Officers Shot and One Robber Killed.

Titusville, Pa., Nov. 14.—Three masked robbers blew open the safe in a railway ticket office but secured only about $20. The bandits then went to a disorderly house, and on entering presented revolvers and proceeded to relieve the proprietress and inmates of what valuables they had, reported as amounting to $2,000 worth of jewels and $500 in cash. Chief of Police McGrath and Officer Sheehy attempted their arrest. A pitched battle ensued in which about twenty shots were fired, three of which struck Chief McGrath, one in the abdomen and two in the left shoulder. Officer Sheehy was shot in the mouth, the ball passing through the side of the neck and inflicting a dangerous wound. In the confusion the robbers escaped from the house. Later the dead body of one of the robbers was found two blocks from the scene of the combat with a bullet through his breast.

Dynamite Wrecks Two Buildings and Kills a Man.

Urbana, Iowa, Nov. 14.—Clarence Burrell, son of Banker J. G. Burrell, was instantly killed by an explosion of dynamite, which wrecked the bank and building and partly destroyed the Monitor office and a general store. Burrell had just opened the doors of his father's private bank for the day's business when there was a smothered explosion in the Monitor office, next door. He rushed into the building and a moment later a second explosion of greater force occurred. Pieces of wreckage hurled through the air by the second shock struck Burrell in the neck, decapitating him. Another missile penetrated his heart. A fire following the explosions destroyed both buildings, entailing a heavy loss.

MINNESOTA NEWS

PINE LAND TRANSFER.

$132,000 Deal in Lumber District Adjacent to Cloquet.

The ore trains which have been running over the Great Northern railroad steadily for the past eight months from the Mahoning mine at Hibbing, have been taken off for the season, as a result of the closing down of the mine. Over 750,000 tons of ore have passed through Cloquet this season, for the Superior ore docks.

Several changes have taken place at Cloquet in the representatives of the St. Paul & Duluth railroad. Charles Coppinger, ticket agent at the union depot, has been promoted to the cashiership of the general freight offices at Minneapolis, and Fred Schultz of Minneapolis transferred to Cloquet to fill the vacancy. Barton Hayes of the local freight department, has been transferred to Carlton to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Ticket Agent P. Nelson, who has left for Spokane, Wash. Mr. Hayes has been succeeded by J. A. Ennis, recently returned from the Klondike country.

Four thousand acres of pine lands in the Cloquet district have been transferred to the Cloquet Lumber company of Cloquet, the consideration being $132,000. The deed was made out by Jane T. Arnold, B. W. Arnold, Jr., and John Millen, running to J. R. Phelps of Davenport, Iowa, vice president of the company.

TOWN LOT SALE.

Old Time Scenes Enacted at Vesta and Wabasso.

The sale of town lots in the four towns along the Minnesota & Iowa division of the Chicago & Northwestern railroad, north of Sanborn, Redwood county, occurred last week. In one town, Okawa, not a lot was sold. In Wanda, the first town north of Sanborn, only a few were sold. In Wabasso, the second town north of Sanborn, and located in the center of Redwood county, the sales ran up to nearly $5,000, some of the lots being auctioned off as high as $260.

In Vesta, the present terminus of the company, and from which station war will be waged on the Minneapolis & St. Louis, the sale of lots amounted to nearly $7,000, the crowd being an unusually large one and lots being sold about as rapidly as the town site agent and two assistants could show the intending purchasers around. Lots were sold for several general stores, a couple of banks, implement houses, etc.

The track on this division is laid to a point about two miles north of Wabasso. The fact that the company cannot get rails has delayed the work materially, and it is now doubtful whether the line will be completed to Vesta, where there is a mile of terminal ground graded, before Dec. 1.

LOGGING RAILROAD.

Merrill & Ring Company to Build One to Lake Superior.

The Merrill & Ring Lumber company has decided to construct a logging railway to Lake Superior for handling 200,000,000 feet of timber recently bought in Lake county. The timber will be railroaded to the lake and rafted to Duluth. The timber will last the mill five years.

Messrs. Knight & Vilas of Ashland recently bought 350,000,000 feet of timber on the north shore, in Lake county. They have sold a small portion, and have now let a contract for logging the remainder, which will be cut in from ten to fifteen years and rafted to the Ashland mills. A logging road will be built for this timber.

It is estimated that at least 400,000,000 feet, or slightly more than half, of the log cut of the coming winter will be handled by railroad. The Duluth & Iron Range Railway alone will bring to this city about 150,000,000 feet of logs. About a third of the 140,000,000 feet to be cut on the St. Louis and Cloquet rivers will be handled by railway.

CASS LAKE'S NEW MILL.

H. H. Frost of Detroit, Mich., has opened a bazar and notion store.

J. J. Schwingler has begun the erection of a building 12-24.

C. W. Weston of St. Cloud, in the interest of the J. Neills Lumber company, which bought the mill site at the recent sale of land at St. Cloud, is here to look up the preliminary work for that company, preparatory to building. John Neills will arrive to-day, and the work of erecting a large saw mill will be begun. Mr. Weston says the mill will have a capacity for sawing 25,000,000 feet a season.

AMERICA'S LARGEST FLEET.

Bessemer Steamship Company Provides for Two New Ships.

Owing to the outlook for lake shipping the Bessemer Steamship company of Duluth will change its contracts for ships to come out next spring. Two that were to be tow barges are to be engined and made into steamships, at an additional cost of about $200,000. One of these will be built at Superior. The company will then have twenty-five steamships and thirty-two barges of steel, and capable of moving 250,000 tons at a single trip. It is by long odds the largest fleet owned in America and one of the largest in the world. Twenty-four ships of this fleet are now registered at Duluth as port of hail, and thirty at Buffalo. The latter, with those now building, will have a Duluth register before another season, thus making a Minnesota city headquarters for one of the greatest merchant fleets of the world.

Worried to Death.

Gettysburg, Pa.—Ephraim Harbaugh, residing near Orrtanna, died a few days ago. During the drouth last summer Mr. Harbaugh fretted and worried and would not eat, and had not taken any food for twenty-five days prior to his death, only drinking a little water.

AWFUL MUDDLING.

Responsible for England's Unpreparedness.

London, Nov. 12.—Complete silence has again fallen upon affairs in South Africa. The British public must perforce be contented with the brief, stereotyped dispatches which the censor allows to filter through from Cape Town. That this condition of things is no longer due to pressure of work or defective cables has been amply proved. The Eastern Telegraph company reckons that the real delay in transmission is about two days. It is evident, therefore, that the censorship is responsible for the other two days of delay which seems to befall all the dispatches.

Moreover, the Daily Telegraph announces that its "appropriated" dispatch from Ladysmith, dated Monday, which the war office published on Tuesday, was not delivered in Fleet street until yesterday (Friday) morning. It is believed that the war office received further dispatches last evening, but nothing further has been published.

At a banquet in the city of London yesterday the duke of Cambridge, speaking of the war, said:

"We ought never to have allowed ourselves to be in the position which the outbreak of the war found us. I could cry over the lives that might have been spared if we had been better prepared."

It is said that Gen. Buller never expected to begin the campaign and it now looks as if this will be the case. Certainly no artillery can reach Durban before Nov. 14, and without additional guns an advance from Estcourt would be impossible. No doubt, as Lord Salisbury said in his speech, England will "muddle through, and an illustration of muddling has become apparent from the fact that gunnery instructors have only just arrived at Woolwich arsenal for instruction in siege field pieces, although men have been selected to manage the siege train, but the fact that the men are at Davenport and the guns at Woolwich seems to indicate that the siege train was an afterthought.

Before Christmas

The Morning Post says: "What would be the effect of our muddling if we came to fight a foe able to turn it to advantage? Some notable reforms are needed in our system."

The explanation that the naval guns do not reply to the Boer artillery because the concrete beds for the guns have not hardened seems to indicate that the British are husbanding their ammunition, as the Boer fire does no harm and only wastes their ammunition.

The Boers are busy planting more guns on the hills surrounding Ladysmith. All the correspondents in the beleaguered town are safe and anxious to get into communication.

The latest advices from Kimberley, dated Nov. 2, say that all was well there then. An explosion had been heard and the supposition was that the Boers had blown up the railway culverts at Dronfield.

USE MORAL SUASION.

Gen. Parades Must Not Bombard Puerto Cabello.

La Guaira, Venezuela, Nov. 12—Francis B. Loomis, United States minister to Venezuela, has asked the commanders of the foreign cruisers off Puerto Cabello to act together in order to prevent Gen. Antonio Parades, formerly a commander in ex-President Andrade's army, who refuses to recognize the authority of Gen. Cipriano Castro, from bombarding Puerto Cabello by bringing moral suasion to bear upon him. The British, French, German, Dutch and American commanders will confer at Puerto Cabello and will take all proper measures to prevent Parades from sacrificing the lives of innocent persons.

The United States legation will protect the French Sisters of Charity by special request.

-o-

Puerto Cabello, Venezuela, Nov. 12—Gen. Parades absolutely refuses to listen to any proposal except for surrender. A conference was held between the British, German Dutch and American captains here, and as a result W. W. Russell, secretary of the United States legation, was sent to discuss the matter with Gen. Parades and endeavor to arrange matters. He was inclined to be defiant and intimated to Mr. Russell that he was ready to fight any force Gen. Castro would send against him.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

Hanna Says It Will Be Called to Meet About the Middle of Next Month.

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 12—Senator Hanna stated that a call would be issued within a few days for the meeting of the national Republican committee at Washington. The meeting will probably be held on Dec. 13 or 14, although the exact date will not be decided upon until next week. The committee at this meeting will choose the date and place for holding the next national convention. There are two vacancies on the committee, and these will be filled at the forthcoming session of that body.

LOWER BOND.

Material Inducement in Underground Railroad Construction.

New York, Nov. 12—The appellate division of the supreme court has granted the application of the Rapid Transit commission for a reduction from $14,000,000 to $5,000,000 in the amount of the bond to be required from the contractor who may undertake the work of building an underground railroad in this city. This, it is believed, will enable the commission to get a contractor for the construction of the road at once.

Suicide of a Sea Captain.

Pensacola, Fla., Nov. 12—The German ship Comet, just arrived here from Hamburg, reports that on Aug. 31 Capt. Kruckman, the master, blew his head off with a musket. He was very despondent on account of his wife's death a few days before the ship's departure.

Cruiser Albany to be Refitted.

New York—It has been decided to bring the cruiser Albany, built at the Armstrong works in England, to the Brooklyn navy yard. There has been some question whether it would not be better to send the ship directly to Manila, by way of Suez, but it has been decided that the ship should be refitted, and [illegible] New York.

THE TWIN ISSUE WITH ANTI-IMPERIALISM, FOR 1900.

The Two Will Be Pushed in Minnesota on Non-Partisan Lines—Trust Evils Emphasized—November Election Results Most Emphatic—The Column for Bryan's Unanimous Re-Nomination Led by Michigan—Good Words for State Grain Inspection—General C. McC. Reeve Called to Succeed Warden Wolfer at Stillwater—The Week's Round-Up in National and State Politics.

Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, Nov. 20, 1899.

But 'tis past, and tho' blazoned in story
The name of our victor may be—
Accursed is the march of that glory
Which treads on the hearts of the free!
Far dearer the grave, or the prison,
Illumed by one patriot name,
Than the trophies of all who have risen
On liberty's ruin to fame.
—Thomas Moore.

Three striking political events have marked the past week, the first, the inauguration of the non-partisan Minnesota Anti-Imperialist movement, seated, for the present, at Minneapolis, but to go into the whole state. Its head is Henry J. Fletcher. Esq., the widely known attorney, a life-long Republican, with other Republicans and men who supported McKinley in the other official positions. For the coming mass meeting, expected to be held about Dec. 14, the expectation is to have 50 vice-presidents, from the most prominent men of Minneapolis, regardless of their party connection.

This arousing of the American conscience is not more marked, however, than the movement, also in non-partisan lines, against the trusts. This is likewise being launched in Minnesota, coming, as did the anti-imperialist movement, from Chicago, directed by Hon. R. W. Boddinghouse, secretary of the national executive committee. That gentleman has communicated with a large number of Minnesotans, who will be invited to attend the coming conference at Chicago. The plan is to carry on this warfare by organizations in all parts of the Northwest.

The third event has been the sorrowful rallying of the goppites, to consider the straits they are in in Minnesota, the occasion being the return of Senator Knute Nelson from abroad. The oldest "political" inhabitant cannot recall such a gloomy gathering. In fact the three days of lugubriousness brought a terrible rain storm. The chief question was whether the resourceful Nelson could give them any light, any hope of success in Minnesota next year. And the resourceful Knute could not. In the first place, there was the miserably selfish course of Mr. Nelson, himself (to describe it as Republicans describe it) when, in the terrible crisis of the last campaign, Nelson took to the woods and devoted himself to the still hunt for the senate, leaving Eustis and the state ticket to their fate. What time Nelson could spare from personal besetments was given to squaring himself with Eustis and the rest for that act. He devoted a whole day's session in the latter city to applying Nelson salve to the sores made by having refused to lift up his voice in the campaign for Webster. If report is true he made but poor progress in all the many "sittings."

Two interpretations are put on Nelson's purposes, the one that he and the federal machinery, including Merriam, Powers, Fletcher, et al., is to be put into activity to make District Attorney R. G. Evans the Hanna candidate for Governor. The other is that the state management is to be returned to Bixby, Byrnes, Jamison, Powers and the rest who were displaced by the Steele-Eustis aggregation. Nelson met, for the one, the hostility of the many candidates for Governor, and for the other, the deep-seated hatred of the old machine, which for years and years was able to muster only a bare majority for state candidates.

These matters and the awful pressure for places in the census department here and elsewhere, made the junior senator's home-coming anything but pleasant. He has left bad feeling because of the shabby treatment of many, whom he dodged and turned down without remorse. He even snubbed the State Historical society, celebrating a semi-centennial, being on the programme for an important paper, involving his colleague, Senator Davis, in a weak fib, about "business" preventing Nelson's presence.

Senator Nelson, in interviews, shows that he favors militarism. He brings home to foreign born voters the surprising information that large standing armies are a good thing, and in the same breath approving our new policy in the Philippines, shows that he will be right in line with Hanna and McKinley for their bayonet government. German-American citizens will be astounded to be told by Senator Nelson that he found in Germany, where he studied the Kaiser's military establishment thoroughly, that the Germans do not regard the army as a burden, but are proud of it and look upon it "not as an economic drain," but as an "increaser of consumption and a reliever of the stress of population." What will our German citizens say to this doctrine? But what else could Minnesota's senator say, since on his arrival at Washington he will be called on to support an imperial policy of conquest and subjugation?

Our election summary of last week is more than vindicated by details.

New York, Republican plurality less than Roosevelt's, and 200,000 less than in 1896.

New Jersey, Republican majority 60,000 less than 1896.

Pennsylvania, Republican majority reduced, and the Quay fraud producers getting into jail, one by one.

Massachusetts, Republican majority 100,000 less than in 1896, and Boston won by a big majority.

Kentucky. Republican majority wiped out, legislature and governor Democratic.

Maryland, changed from 30,000 Republican in 1896 to 20,000 Democratic.

Ohio, changed from Republican majority of over 40,000 in 1896, and actual majority on governor in 1897, to a minority of at least 50,000.

Nebraska, well Nebraska has 14,000 on the right side, and her banner leads for 1900.

Now see the states lead off for Bryan's unanimous renomination. Michigan leads.

Under the trusts this government is an oligarchy and not a democratic republic. Under both trusts and imperialism the republic passes away and we will have but a privileged monarchy.

The Knights of Labor and the National Alliance have declared for the destruction of the trusts. Hopeful for the people is the fact that all elements of the New Democracy stand for death to the trusts. Significant is the fact that Hanna on the stump defended them.

National Watchman: "Hon. Charles A. Towne took a prominent part in the Nebraska campaign. Mr. Towne is one of the most brilliant and accomplished young men in America. Minnesota has reason to be proud of a son who is destined to attain great eminence in the councils of the nation."

In a letter acknowledging congratulations from Minnesota, Mr. Bryan writes: "Mr. Towne did our cause a great deal of good, and won the hearts of our people."

Senator C. K. Davis could not forego a word for the McKinley "assimilation" in his Historical society address. And so fitting, since no men in the nation is probably more responsible for the bloody work in the Philippines.

Appeal to Reason: "Mr. Hanna says he is not afraid of trusts! Nor is the king afraid of monarchy. This assurance of Mr. Hanna ought to settle the trust agitation at once."

And still a few well meaning men continue to urge McKinley to interfere in the South African war on a republic. How foolish. McKinley is too busy banting for Aguinaldo, the man who would found a republic.

Besides, the Boers are doing pretty well taking care of themselves. If you don't think so ask Sir George White.

Hon. George N. Lamphere of Moorhead informs the Bureau that no one can too fully emphasize what the Lind administration has accomplished in inspection reform to this point. Speaking for his region of the state, where the wrongs of the farmers were voiced by public action last year, in protests of far-reaching effect, Mr. Lamphere says that he has not heard one single complaint of present grading and inspection from the farmers. Only the grain buyers have complained, and their complaints, few in number, have been shown to be unfounded, and Mr. Lamphere considers it very significant that the Republican press voice such complaints, showing, as it does that after all their interest is in the dealers instead of the farmers.

Finding absolutely no ground for criticism of grain grading, all that Republicans can say is that there has been a loosening of grading, so that the Minnesota certificate doesn't mean anything. All of which is absolutely silly, for the reason that Minnesota wheat, as before, sells by sample in the large markets at a premium.

It is funny how much has been made of Public Examiner Pope's case by the goppite press which has been thrown into conniptions from transactions involving a picayune sum, when thousands of dollars involved in the case of Republican Kenyon called out no comments from this over-virtuous press. If it should appear at the end of full knowledge of all the facts that there has been anything done by General Pope that might reflect on his official character or impair his influence as a public official, it can be safely predicted that it will receive the proper attention of Governor Lind.

A distinction without a difference: Cleveland sold bonds to help the syndicates, McKinley buys them to help the speculators.

All of our friends in the state, it is believed, will rejoice that General C. McC. Reeve has been unanimously chosen by the board of state prison managers to succeed Henry Wolfer, warden, resigned, the latter closing a long career in prison service to enter a large manufacturing business in St. Paul.

Under the influence of the state administration following its pledge of reform, the administration of Warden Wolfer for the past few months has been admirable, and with special attention given to the twine department, the complaints of the farmers have ceased. It believed that not a pound of twine has been diverted from the state's purpose of benefitting the farmer, by that part of the institution.

General Reeve will bring to the position business ability, good judgment, general fitness and special knowledge of men, with great experience as a disciplinarian, and it is believed that he will make an excellent warden. Governor Lind is well satisfied with the action of the board, and that the general will make an efficient officer, and that the binder plant specially will be managed for the benefit of the grain growers of the state.

IS HARD PRESSED

LADYSMITH BOMBARDED NIGHT AND DAY.

Boers Are Repeating the Tactics Employed at Dundee—Further Retiring on Mooi River Not Unlikely, Owing to the Impossibility of Relief Arriving for Several Days—Evident That Gen. Buller Has Entirely Changed His Plans—Mysterious Movements of Free Staters.

London, Nov. 16.—Special dispatches from Pietermaritzburg and Lourenzo Marques say that Ladysmith is bombarded night and day and hard pressed. On Nov. 6, having during the night placed men close to the town, the Boers, after a heavy bombardment, began an assault, but were repulsed at every point with heavy losses. The Boers have destroyed one of the bridges over the Tugela river.

-o-

London, Nov. 10. — The absence of news of any serious movement against Ladysmith seems to show that the Boers are repeating the strategy adopted by them at Dundee, when they appeared in front and endeavored to effect a surrounding movement. This seems to have been their object regarding Estcourt, and since it is impossible that relief should reach for some days to come, it is not unlikely that a further retiring movement on Mooi river will be made.

Maj. Wolfe-Murray has returned to Pietermaritzburg to take command of the line of communication and Col. Long, of the Royal artillery, has taken command at Estcourt. The forces now at Pietermaritzburg are too weak to attempt to reopen communications. Artillery and cavalry especially are badly needed.

From the difficulty experienced in concentrating divisions at the original points, it seems clear that the plans of Gen. Buller has been entirely changed. Not the slightest word regarding the new plans have been allowed to escape. The first object was supposed to be the sending of a British column to relieve Kimberley, but this seems incorrect, all the accounts regarding the movement at present in the light of a reconnoissance. It seems, however, that arrangements for an advance from Durban are if an advance has not already commenced. Kimberley was all right on Friday, Nov. 10. The burghers at Aliwalnorth have hoisted the flag of the Orange Free State and declared the town in the possession of the Free State. There are reliable reports of mysterious movements of Free State commandoes along the Orange river and important developments are expected. Everything tends to show that the relief of Kimberley could only be safely undertaken by a strong column.

In a Forward State

Lourenzo Marques continues to send Joubert stories, the latest being that no news has been received from him at Pretoria for three days, and that it was rumored that he was a prisoner.

It is announced that the duke of Connaught was among the first to seek employment in the war, and even offered to waive his seniority for this purpose, but it was not deemed expedient that an officer so senior to Sir Redvers Buller should serve under him. The duke was greatly disappointed.

Guarded by Germans.

Durban, Nov. 19.—A gentleman who was arrested at Johannesburg, taken to Pretoria and released, has arrived here via Delagoa Bay. While at Pretoria he was confined on the race course with the military prisoners, comprising 52 officers and 1,705 non-commissioned officers and men from Natal; 10 officers and 25 non-commissioned officers and men from Mafeking and 4 men from Fort Tull. The prisoners' guards were almost exclusively Germans, and the artillerymen manning the forts were also mostly Germans. The prisoners were well fed and were shown every consideration. Most of the officers were removed to more comfortable quarters in the town.

To Intercept British Advance.

London, Nov. 16.—A dispatch from Lourenzo Marques says: "A Pretoria newspaper announced last Wednesday that 4,000 burghers had left Gen. Joubert's force around Ladysmith to join Commandant Botha's force near Estcourt with a view to assisting to intercept the British advance to the relief of Ladysmith. Gen. Lucas Meyer, the Free State commander, has asserted in the course of an interview that he is convinced the battle at Elandslaagte will be the first and last Boer defeat of the year."

More Troops Arrive.

London, Nov. 19.—The admiralty announced last evening the arrival at Cape Town yesterday of the troopship Aurania with a battery of artillery and the Scott's Highlanders (Princess Louise's) regiment, bringing the reinforcements up to 13,500, of which 7,400 have already disembarked at Durban with eighteen field guns, a number of machine guns, engineers and hospital corps, as well as 700 mules. The force, with that already between Estcourt and Durban, is considered sufficient to enable Gen. Hildyard to advance and to take the aggressive against the Boers south of Ladysmith.

Natives Will Join Boers.

London, Nov. 16. — Advices from Maseru, Basutoland, dated Nov. 8, say that Chief Joel, terrorized by false Boer assertions that the British have been beaten in every engagement, and are being driven out of South Africa, is preparing to join the Boers, believing theirs the winning side. The Boers are said to have supplied him with guns, which they have accompanied with specious promises.

MOVE ON ESTCOURT.

Boers Flocking Thither From All Directions.

London, Nov. 21. — The war office posted the following telegram from Gen. Sir Redvers Buller to the marquis of Lansdowne:

Cape Town, Nov. 18, 9:35 p. m.—The following is from the general commanding at Pietermaritzburg: "Today at 8 o'clock the officer commanding our northern outposts reported that the enemy's mounted patrols were advancing across the whole country from Gourton Road to Ulandi, moving on Estcourt. My force stood to arms. The outposts reported various bodies, from 500 to 700 strong, advancing on Estcourt from a northwesterly direction. One party 500 strong moved toward the railway bridge half a mile northeast of Estcourt. Our outposts fired on the enemy and one of the naval guns fired a shell at 8,000 yards range, the shell bursting close to the enemy, who then hurriedly retired. At 12 o'clock reports were received from three pickets that a large number of Boers were in sight on a hill above Leslie's homestead. The troops have returned to camp."

A special dispatch from Estcourt, dated Sunday, says: "All is quiet here. The enemy is believed to be encamped six miles away. Our position is good and our forces are sufficiently strong to repulse attack."

Occupied by Free Staters.

Cape Town, Nov. 21. — Advices just received here show that on Thursday, Nov. 16, a combined force of Free State and Transvaal burghers occupied Colesburg, Cape Colony, without opposition by the residents, and proclaimed the district to be Free State territory. The British troopship Manila has arrived at Durban.

Occupied by Boers.

Cape Town, Nov. 21.—The Boers occupied Burghersdorp on Tuesday, Nov. 14, and it is believed that they were then on their way to seize Stormberg Junction.

British Prisoners at Pretoria.

Pretoria, Nov. 21.—At noon Saturday fifty-six British prisoners, including men of the Royal Dublin Fusileers and seven blue jackets, arrived here. There were large crowds at the railway station but no demonstration was made. Winston Churchill, who is wounded in the hand, was taken to the Model school, while the rank and file are being sent to the race course. One spy was lodged in jail. The wounded had been treated at Colenso. The Boer version of the conflict to which these prisoners were taken says that two British were killed and ten wounded.

Not Officered by Germans.

Lourenzo Marques, Nov. 21.—The following dispatch has been received here from Pretoria, dated Nov. 16: The statement that the Boer artillery is officered by Germans is denied here. It is asserted officially that all the Boer artillery officers were born in the transvaal, although two were trained in Europe.

It is reported that the bombardment of Kimberley was resumed this morning.

Annexed by Free Staters.

Queenstown, Cape Colony, Nov. 21.—Commandant Olliever, with a portion of the Rouxville commando, has occupied Jamestown, hoisted the flags of the Orange Free State and annexed the town. Maj. Gen. William Forbes Gatrier, with his staff and Irish rifles, have arrived here.

Boers Threaten Kimberley.

London, Nov. 21.—An Orange River dispatch, dated Nov. 16, says the Boers were then concentrating their forces outside of Kimberley. According to the latest advices from Jamestown there had been no signs of a Basuto rising up to Saturday last. The Boers has renamed Aliwalnorth Oliviersfontein, in honor of their commandant.

Turned Down by Kruger.

New York, Nov. 21.—A special to the World from Washington says: At the request of the British government the state department cabled to Consul Marcum at Pretoria asking if the Transvaal government would permit him to take charge of money sent by England to procure comforts for the British prisoners of war. Upon transmitting the request to President Kruger Marcum was refused curtly and told that arrangements respecting prisoners must be made through the general in the field.

Gov. Bradley Will Not Recognize Goebel if the Louisville Vote is Thrown Out.

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 21.—Gov. W. G. Bradley and the adjutant general of the state guard, Daniel Collier, conferred here yesterday with Col. R. D. Republican leaders professing to be close to the governor, but having no announcement from him personally, say that if the vote of Louisville is thrown out Bradley will refuse to recognize Goebel as his successor, and will maintain his position even if forced to use the militia. The governor's movements are closely watched.

M'ARTHUR FALLS IN WITH FRIENDLY NATIVES.

Gerona the First Town Where the Natives Did Not Run at the Approach of the Americans—MacArthur on His March Northward Finds Himself Among People Who Have Little Use for Aguinaldo—Bayombong Reported Occupied by the Americans.

Manila, Nov. 21.—The American occupation between Manila and Dagupan is proceeding with a rush. Gen. MacArthur is within five miles of Dagupan which place Gen. Wheaton or Gen Lawton will probably occupy. The railroad is practically intact beyond Bamban, with the exception of a distance of five miles north, and the rails for that portion have been discovered. Large quantities of rolling stock have, however, been destroyed.

Gen. MacArthur is moving his troops by train and the roads within Gen. Lawton's territory are becoming passable.

Capt. Leonhaeuser accomplished one of the best coups of the year. Reaching O'Donnell by a night march from Capas on Nov. 18, he surprised the insurgent force, numbering 200, and captured all of them with their arms, 10,000 rounds of ammunition and four tons of subsistence. One Filipino was killed and there were no American casualties.

-o-

Manila, Oct. 21.—The following dispatches have been received here from correspondents of the Associated Press accompanying the American advance northward:

Gerona, Nov. 18. — Gen. MacArthur entered Gerona this afternoon. The insurgents fled after burning the depot. Nothing else was destroyed by them. Gerona is the first town along the Manila-Dagupan railway where the natives did not run at the approach of the Americans. The padres offered quarters in the convents and churches. The town has one good house. Gerona is the seat of heavy sugar interests.

The trip was a hard one and occupied six hours in covering seven miles and a half, most of the time being spent in fording a quarter of a mile flood running out of the Rio Tarlac. We have no wagons, and pack mules and native bearers carry all our supplies. The natives here say that Bayombong was occupied last Sunday by the Americans, possibly Gen. Young's or Gen. Lawton's division. The people are a better class than we have usually found and they welcomed the Americans as they evidently realize that their agricultural interests will revive. Gen. MacArthur said this afternoon:

"We seem to be entering a different political atmosphere. The people here seem to be less attached to Aguinaldo's cause than those in many towns we have entered on the railway line."

The command will move northward at daybreak to-morrow toward Bayombong. Gerona will be garrisoned by two companies of the Thirty-sixth. Immediately on entering Gerona Slaven's scouts moved up the track toward Panique. On the way they encountered an intrenched party of insurgents whom they drove back and then entered the town and captured four locomotives and thirteen cars. They learned that 500 insurgents had left the town in the course of the afternoon.

Panique, Nov. 18.—Gen. MacArthur's troops arrived from Gerona in the course of the morning. The railway beyond this point has not been destroyed. The captured railway stock is being repaired to handle supplies. The expedition will go north toward Bayombong probably to-day. The signal corps is constructing lines with great rapidity.

A native courier from Bayombong reports that the American troops left the town soon after they entered it and many natives remain, although no insurgents. Gen. MacArthur discovered here Maj. Johnson, formerly chief surgeon on the staff of the Filipino commander, Gen. Mascardo. He resides at Bacolor and is about to return there to resume his practice. Maj. Johnson says all respectable Filipinos are disgusted at the behavior the Filipinos and are very glad that the Americans have the upper hand. Many refugees are arriving at Panique from the north, indicating the presence of other American troops, probably off the line. These refugees say the insurgents have not known which way to turn with the Americans occupying so many places in the country.

Moncada, Nov. 18. — Advancing through the enemy's country by train from Panique a distance of five miles, the Americans reached Moncada, where the natives have displayed a friendly disposition. The train is stalled here by the wreck of two locomotives and 54 cars, evidently intentional, on the main track. The freight house and depot have been burned. thus far the advance has been a complete success. Capt. Carr, of the signal corps, has laid wire from Panique.

DESERTING SOLDIER IS SHOT.

Omaha, Nov. 21.—Corporal Faire and a private soldier of the Tenth infantry, pursuing two deserters from Fort Crook, overtook one of them, Samuel Morgan, at La Platte. He refused to halt when ordered to do so, and Faire and his companion both fired. Morgan dropped, mortally wounded, and died in a few minutes.

"I am not such a vain fool as to think a general has more brains than his neighbor because his head is under the dreadful plume they have stuck in his hat." Thus wrote Charles Napier fifty years ago. Thus, in every action, says the United States admiral of today.

A young man who was being initiated into an eastern college fraternity has been drowned during the preliminary foolishness of the initiatory ceremonies. There are limits to all things, and the iron hand of the faculty of every college should descend in a hurry upon secret societies conducted upon principles which so sorely tempt a violent onslaught by the fool-killer.

The recent presentation of a jeweled sword to Admiral Dewey by the people of the United States through their president, and the degradation from the army, the same week, of a prominent officer convicted of appropriating government money, mark opposite possibilities in any profession. "I have had nearly all the chiefs of Scinde in this room," Napier once wrote from India, "laying their gold-scabbarded swords at my feet, which, if taken, would make a rich armory. Certainly I could have got thirty thousands pounds here, but my hands do not yet want washing." France may have different ideals; but it is such officers as Napier and Dewey that England and the United States delight to honor.

The warden of the Cook county hospital, Chicago, is entitled to the respect due to consistency when he refuses to give any account of the public moneys coming into his hands. He holds his position as a trust from politicians and he administers it accordingly. To take the public into his confidence as to whence the money comes or whither it goes would be supererogatory. The county board evidently takes this view of the matter. It accepts such sums as the warden hands over to it, with the simple notation that they come from the hospital. Anything like exact account of the finances would be illogical when the arrangement tacitly excludes exact account of the larger and more precious items of the trust.

When science uses technical speech the uninitiated listen respectfully, but are conscious of an aching void in their apprehension. An every day comparison, however, brings fact and speculation within reach of the average man. Fossil remains described in plain English can be seen with the mind's eye. A dinosaur, for example, could be pictured in scientific terms and but little more than a vague sense of vastness would be the unlearned hearer's portion. But when a scientist says of a monster discovered by him, that a round steak taken from the ham of the animal would have been at least twelve feet in diameter, or more than thirty-five feet in circumference, the ordinary meat-eating individual has a definite and suggestive fact ready for use. Speculation as to the number of waiters and the size of the tip, in case prehistoric man had ordered such a steak, is inevitable if not important.

In Germany electric plowing compares favorably with steam plowing as regards expenses. The cost of electric plowing in heavy soil, with deep cultivation, is from $11.25 to $14.25 per acre, while steam plowing costs $21.23 per acre. The mechanism used on the royal farms in Prussia consists of a motor wagon containing a motor driving the winding drums, and the motor may also be coupled to the driving wheels of the wagon to give it the proper advance at the end of each traverse of the plow. The depth of the furrow is 8 to 10 inches.

The preparations for war have revealed some curious facts. For instance, the principal mode of traffic in London and other large English cities is by omnibus. It seems that all the large omnibus companies are subsidized by the government, just as the principal steamship lines. Nearly twenty thousand horses have been and are being shipped to South Africa. To replace these drafts have been made on the omnibus companies of London, Manchester, Birmingham, and other cities, for browns, bays, and blacks. The horses cost from £80 to £85 each.

Robert's Pet Goose—A Boy Who Helped—Jack and Jill, Their Story Is Ages Older Than the Mother Goose Rhymes—Pussy Understood.

What the Chimney Sang.

Over the chimney the night-wind sang
And chanted a melody no one knew;
And the Woman stopped, as her babe she tossed,
And thought of the one she had long since lost,
And said, as her teardrops back she forced,
"I hate the wind in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night-wind sang
And chanted a melody no one knew;
And the Children said, as they closer drew,
"'Tis some witch that is cleaving the black night through,
'Tis a fairy trumpet that just then blew,
And we fear the wind in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night-wind sang
And chanted a melody no one knew;
And the Man, as he sat on his hearth below,
Said to himself: "It will surely snow,
And fuel is dear and wages low,
And I'll stop the leak in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night-wind sang
And chanted a melody no one knew;
But the Poet listened and smiled, for he Was Man and Woman and Child, all three,
And said: "It is God's own harmony,
This wind we hear in the chimney."

Robert's Pet Goose.

"Honk! honk!" cried the wild geese as they flew over little Robert's house on their way south to spend the winter. When Robert heard the loud "honking" he would run out, and looking up to the sky see the long line of geese, and wish so much that he could have a wild goose, that one would alight in his yard; but they flew right over. Not far from Robert's home was a large lake where the wild geese often stopped, and many hunters went out and shot them. People liked them to eat very much. One day Robert's father went out to get some of the geese, and when he came back he brought one live goose that had been hurt only a little. "See here, Robert, boy, what I have brought you," called his father. "A fine live wild goose. It is hurt so little that I think it will live all right, and you can have it for your own if you want it." Robert was delighted, and took the best of care of his big new pet, and soon it was well; and after his father clipped its wings it was let out in the yard with the hens and chickens and seemed very well contented. It grew very tame, and Robert played with it a good deal, and the goose would come at his call and really seemed to know the little boy and be fond of him. "Come home with me and see my goose," Robert would often say to his schoolmates, and the children were very glad to visit the odd pet. One fine day early in the spring Robert was out playing in the yard and his dear goose was walking close by him as usual, when a big flock of wild geese went over, going north this time to build their nests and rear their little ones. Robert was so busy looking up at the flock and trying to count the geese, and listening to their loud honking, that he did not notice that his own dear goose was looking up also, and suddenly, before he could stop her, she rose quickly in the air, joined the flock of her wild relations, and off she went. Little Robert stood for a moment too surprised to speak or move, but when he found his dear pet was really gone, he burst into tears and ran crying into the house. "O mother," he cried, "my goose has flown away! She went off with that big flock that just flew over. Oh dear, oh dear!" and he cried as though his heart would break. "Don't cry so," said his mother. "I am so sorry, dear, but try to think how happy your goose is going to be with all the other geese, flying, flying along through the bright blue sky. Perhaps she was lonely with you."

"I am afraid somebody will shoot her," sobbed Robert. "We will hope they will not," said his mother, trying to comfort him. "Well, now, who would have thought of it?" said Robert's father when he came home at night and the little boy ran to tell him his sad tale. "I suppose I ought to have clipped her wings again. But don't cry any more, my boy; perhaps I can get you another goose next fall. I will try to, anyway."

"But it won't be my own dear goosie," said Robert; "and I thought she loved me and liked to stay with me."

"I guess she loved her own kind of geese best," said Robert's father, smiling. Robert often thought of his goose during the summer, and he and his mother used to talk about her and wonder what she was doing in her far-away northern home, for he did not know much of the habits of wild geese. "Do you suppose she ever thinks of me?" Robert asked his mother. "I am afraid geese cannot do much thinking, but if she could, I feel sure she would like to think about one who was always so good to her and loved her so dearly," answered his mother.

When the geese began again to fly south, Robert often watched the flocks and wondered if his goose were there. And one day—you can hardly believe it, but this is a true story—Robert's goose did come back; she flew right into the yard and brought two dear goslings with her! Oh, how delighted Robert was! And the goose seemed to know him, and came right up to eat out of his hand just as she used to do. "Well, well," exclaimed Robert's father, "to think of that goose's coming back! I think it shows that she loved you pretty well, after all, my son." The goose never went away again, but she and the goslings lived all their lives with Robert on the pleasant farm.

ELIZABETH ROBINSON.

Pussy Understood.

This story may sound a little bit like a fairy story, and you may think it safer not to believe it, but it is just as true as can be, for the owner of the cat said so himself. He was a fine, black Persian cat, and came proudly marching into the house one day with a poor, little sparrow in his mouth, for pussies will catch birds, no matter how fine their family blood may be. After showing his prize, Pussy went to the front door, and, thinking the mat there would make a nice table, commenced his meal. Of course he scattered a great many feathers around and made the front entrance look anything but tidy, and the cook was not pleased at the litter Pussy had made, and told him so, and said that the next time he chose to dine there, he must turn the mat over on the wrong side. And following his own text, cook turned the mat over. About two weeks afterward Pussy brought another bird to the front door, and, though the mat was quite heavy for him, took his claws and turned it over as cook had told him to do. Then he proceeded to enjoy his feast.

A Boy Who Helped.

In every conflict with foreign powers, some of those who perform the most important services are persons who for one reason and another have been compelled to remain at home. As a striking illustration of this truth, the Pilgrim Teacher recalls an anecdote of revolutionary times. Luke Varnum lived in a small village among the Green mountains. He was fifteen years old, and was lame in his left foot. So when every other boy and every man, old and young, shouldered his firelock and marched off to join Gen. Stark and fight the Hessians at Bennington, Luke was left behind. He limped out and held the stirrup for Lieut. Chittenden to mount, and then he had to stay at home with the babies and the women. The company had been gone an hour and a half, more or less, when three men galloped upon horseback. Luke went down to the rails to see who they were. "Is anybody here?" asked one of them. "Yes," said Luke, "I am here." "I see that," said the man, laughing. "What I mean is, is there anybody here who can set a shoe?" "I think I can," said Luke. "I often tend fire for Jonas. I can blow the bellows, and I can hold a horse's foot. Anyway, I will start up the fire." So Luke went into the forge and built a fire. He hunted up half a dozen nails, and he had made two more, when a fourth horseman came slowly down on a walk. "What luck," said he, "to find a forge with a fire lighted!" The speaker threw himself off the horse meanwhile, and Luke pared the hoof of the dainty creature and measured the shoe, which was too big for her. He heated it white, and bent it to the proper size. "It's a poor fit," he said, but it will do." "It will do very well," said the rider. "But she is very tender-footed, and I do not dare to trust her five miles unshod." For pride's sake, the first two nails Luke drove were those he had made himself. When the shoe was fast, he said, "Tell Jonas that I lit up the forge and put on the shoe." "We will tell him," said the colonel, laughing, and he rode on. But one of the other horsemen tarried a minute and said: "Boy, no ten men who left you today have served the country as you have done. That is Col. Warner." And when we read how Col. Warner led up his regiment just in time to save the day at Bennington, we may think of Luke Varnum, who bravely helped his country.

Jack and Jill.

The Icelandic Edda contains a legend about Mani, the moon. It is said that Mani once stole from the earth two children, a boy and girl, named Hjuki and Bil, who had been drawing water from the spring Byrgr and were carrying it in a bucket suspended from a pole which rested on their shoulders. Mani placed these two children, together with their bucket, in a conspicuous place in the heavens where they could be seen by all men. This undoubtedly refers to the spots on the moon, and it is said that to this day the Swedish peasants point to two of these spots as a boy and a girl carrying a bucket of water between them. Now "Mother Goose"—whatever may have been the age in which this delightful old lady lived, and this matter is as uncertain as the age of Homer—undoubtedly had heard this story of Mani, and that is how she came to make up the rhymes about Jack and Jill. She changed the name Hjuki into Jack and turned Bil into Jill, to preserve its feminine character, and the story about the mishap which befell the children was easily invented. Indeed, we can see, the accident happen in any month, if we will watch the moon through its various phases, for as the moon wanes its spots successively disappear: "Jack falls down and Jill comes tumbling after."

Small for His Age.

"Grandfather," said a saucy little boy the other day, "how old are you?" The old gentleman, who was much under the ordinary size, took the child between his knees and said: "My dear boy, I am 85 years old, but why do you ask?" The little fellow replied: "Well, it seems to me you are very small for your age."

Proverbs from Madagascar.

There are few more expressive phrases than some which pass current among primitive races. Henri Mager, a member of the French council for the government of the colonies, transcribes a few expressions used by natives in Madagascar, which seem to deserve a wider vogue. Speaking of an egotist, they say, "He knows two for himself and not one for anybody else." "He is like the cock that sings at night," they say of the unlimited talker, while at the everlasting borrower they remark: "His mouth is his snuff-box." When a man conducts his affairs well, a native will tell you: "He swims without noise," or if he seeks the impossible: "He wants the bird on the wing." To render the idea of "a little," a Malagasy will point to the ground and say, "Like the water in the holes made by a chicken's feet;" and if he wishes to describe a person who is content with moderate comforts, he will put it thus: "He behaves like a hound munching fleas."

FOR THE THANKSGIVING DINNER

MY MOST NOTABLE THANKSGIVING

BY FRANK R. STOCKTON

It was Thanksgiving time, nearly thirty years ago. To the ordinary inhabitant of that portion of this country where I then dwelt the season was very much like other seasons of autumnal fruition; there was nothing in the earth, the skies, or the waters that gave in this period any peculiarity which would distinguish it from the similar period of any other year, past or to come.

But there was something that made this Thanksgiving season very peculiar in my eyes. For some time the whole world had seemed to me to be permeated by the knowledge that something was about to happen which had never happened before, and which could not, by any possibility, happen again.

I had always loved the Thanksgiving season. To be sure, much of the brightness and color in which the landscape reveled in October was lost, but the rich browns of the oaks, the heavy greens of the pines and the cedars, lighted up here and there by some late hanging sumac leaves or reddening ivy, with hill and dale gently softened by the mists of Indian summer, made a picture in which I delighted as much as I did in the beauties of any other season.

But in this year the late autumn foliage was much finer than I had ever known it before. Van Dyke never dreamed of such browns as I now saw, and the curtains of distant mist seemed ever about to rise upon visions of even greater beauty than those which then entranced me.

I had always liked the first keen winds which had come to us as the avant couriers of winter, making it delightful to walk and be out of doors, and also agreeable and satisfactory to go into the house. But this year there was a sparkling spice in the air which it would have been impossible for other people to understand, even if they had perceived it. I knew it was there, I understood its origin, and I did not care a snap of my fingers whether or not anybody else knew anything about it.

In those days, after the regular periods of meteoric showers, there used to be a good many falling stars which appeared to be left over from the grand display, and I had always been accustomed to watch for these with a great deal of interest, for the reason that I generally forgot to go out of doors on the regular star-falling nights, and, therefore, was naturally anxious to make the best of what was left of the shower.

A GREAT YEAR FOR RABBITS.

This year the few stars that rewarded my vigilance by falling in the latter part of November were exceptionally fine meteors. They glistened more brightly, they scintillated, they moved slowly, as if they wanted to let me know that they knew of something as well as I did.

The birds of that autumn were of particularly bright plumage. I remember that they sang very well, and although I am not positive that those who were in the habit of migrating to the south in the late autumn delayed their journey this year, those of them who did remain made themselves very conspicuous and agreeable.

It was a great year for rabbits. In earlier days I had given much attention to trapping these little creatures, but seldom took much interest in the sport until the snow had covered the earth, and thereby induced game creatures of various kinds to cast their eyes upon the delicate morsels exposed in traps by men and boys. But now, although I did not care to trap the rabbits, I was charmed to gaze upon them as they skipped about on the edge of the woods, wagging their little tails and sitting up looking from side to side, with their little noses nervously trembling, while their long ears waved in the breezes. The rabbits' fur seemed very long and fine that year, and I am sure that its color must have been extraordinarily well adapted for the adornment of human youth and beauty.

I do not know that there were great crops of corn that year, or that the pumpkins had gilded to a greater extent than usual the brown, denuded fields, but I felt the farmers ought to be very happy people.

To me the country was pervaded with an atmosphere of richness and unsurpassed fulfillment. I knew that the apple crop had been very good; at least I knew that the trees had borne some remarkably good fruit, because I had tried a good deal of it, and it had never possessed to a greater extent the juiciness and sub-acid flavor of which I was so fond.

It was also a great year for chestnuts, and a very poor one for squirrels. I do not wish it to be supposed that I was not, and am not, fond of squirrels. I like them better now than I used to in my earlier days, although they are as active competitors in the business of chestnut gathering as when I was younger. But in this Thanksgiving season of which I speak the squirrels must have been fewer or lazier, for I made no complaints about the scarcity of chestnuts.

If I remember rightly, those I ate were remarkably fine, either one great chestnut in a single hull, or a fairly large one with two little ones which did not interfere with the expansion of the fittest.

There was a peculiarity about the weather of that November; very often the skies were really cloudy and gray, and the rain sometimes came down with steady persistence, while the cold and penetrating winds made people think of heavy overcoats before their appointed time. But these days of bad weather had very little effect upon me or upon my spirits. It did not occur to me that the melancholy days had come, and as for their being the saddest of the year, that was impossible. At that time some sort of a sun was always shining. If it were not the ordinary sun about which our earth revolves, it was a particular orb which existed for my especial satisfaction. It sometimes even shone at night, after I had gone to bed—that is, if I happened to be awake.

But it was not only nature that was more than usually agreeable; the people of this world, so far as I knew them, were very pleasant, remarkably so. I do not remember quarreling with a living soul during the whole of that November. It seems as though my intercourse with my fellow beings was unusually genial. In regard to social progress and the steady betterment of the human race, I was an ardent optimist. Even people I knew as not being very pleasant of manner or intelligent of speech seemed then good company.

Politics did not trouble me at all. I suppose a good many people voted for the wrong men, but I paid no attention to their misguided actions. It was scarcely possible there could be any candidates for office who did not possess some virtues, and a strong disposition in the direction of general altruism made me wish well to all good people who had been selected to administer the affairs of township, county or state.

There was truly something exceptional in this Thanksgiving season. Other people may not have noticed it, but it impressed itself most forcibly upon me. How could it be otherwise? It was a time that my first book was published.

Mrs. Astor's Thanksgiving Dinner.

What Mrs. William Astor's Thanksgiving dinner this year will be cannot be told in detail, but judging from former occasions, it should be about as in the accompanying menu:

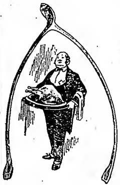
Little Neck Clams.
Plain Consomme. Terrapin.
Sweetbreads. Soubise.
Artichokes, White Sauce.
Roast Turkey. Cranberry Sauce.
Spinach. String Beans.
Roman Punch.
Canvasback Ducks.
Celery. Mayonnaise. Salad.
Chocolate Ice-cream. Fancy Cakes.
Roquefort Cheese. Hot-house Fruits.
Coffee.

Last Thanksgiving Mrs. Astor had her table in yellow. An enormous mass of costly chrysanthemums filled to the brim the huge golden bowl, the centerpiece of her renowned gold service, the handsomest in America. Yellow bows of ribbon were laid flat on the white cloth, and maidenhair fern completed the decoration. Beside each plate was a bunch of the same chrysanthemums, tied with yellow ribbon.

The Astor gold service is costly almost beyond estimate. Its acanthus pattern is copied from an old English set. It includes even gold knives, forks and spoons.

Only on state occasions is this gold service brought out. It never fails to appear on Thanksgiving day.—New York World.

In the East.



At a fashionable Thanksgiving dinner the butler brings in the turkey. It is then removed and carved in the butler's pantry.

Fig Pudding.

Half a pound of bread crumbs, 1-2 lb. of figs, 6 ozs. of suet, 6 ozs. of soft sugar, 3 eggs, a little nutmeg, a teacupful of milk. The figs and suet are to be chopped very fine, and all well mixed together. Boil in a mold or cloth for three or four hours. This pudding can be made with half the quantities.

Slag left after the making of steel by the Bessemer process is now being converted into phosphate.

PICKING BILLIONS OF FLOWERS

Work of Women Where the Perfume Industry Is Carried On in France.

Grasse, in the southern part of France, is the center of the perfume industry. There women and girls may be seen, with broad hats on their heads, gathering flowers from 5 until 11 a. m. and then returning with their fragrant burdens to the houses, where they pluck the leaves from the blossoms and pass the rest of the day in preparing them for the work of extracting the essences of essential oils, which contain the perfume itself. In March they begin plucking violets, from which violet water is made, and from the beginning of May to the end of June they gather the jessamine, roses and orange blossoms, as well as the tuberoses in July, the mignonette in August and the cassia in September. The nimble fingers of the women must move rapidly to pluck the millions and billions of leaves that go to make up the 1,200,000 kilograms of rose leaves alone that are used each season. Besides there are a million kilograms of jessamine to be plucked, and violets and orange blossoms to the extent of two million kilograms a year. To give an idea of the number of plants that are raised for this huge result, it is calculated that each stalk of jessamine yields two kilograms of blossoms a season. So there must be five hundred thousand stalks to yield the million kilograms required. But the gathering of the blossoms is only the beginning of the work, for then the flowers must be picked apart and all the spoiled leaves thrown aside. Then the making of the perfume begins. The leaves are spread one by one upon layers of pure lard that cover plates of glass. Three or four times these flower-layers are renewed before the lard has absorbed all of the perfume that it can hold, for the fat has a peculiar attraction for the essential oils of the flowers. This perfumed lard is the pomade of commerce, not the pomade used for hair or beard, but the crude material out of which this is afterwards manufactured. The lard is then shipped as it is to other manufacturers, or put into alcohol, which draws off the perfume from the fat, having a stronger attraction therefor than the lard, and the result is the finest eau de cologne. Most of this pomade is shipped as it stands to all parts of Europe and America, but some of it is reserved and the oils are extracted by distilling processes, making the purest extracts.

PEOPLE OF SHAWNEETOWN

Deserting the Place, Fearing Another Flood—Historic Old Town.

Harrisburg (Ill.) Cor. Chicago Record: The city of Shawneetown, on the Ohio river, the second oldest town in the state and as historic as Alexandria, the oldest town in the United States, is passing away. The recent flood has worked greatly against the city. People are becoming dissatisfied and alarmed, and are leaving, most of them moving to Ridgway, in the same county. Eventually the court house will be removed to Ridgway, and before many years Shawneetown, like Kaskaskia, will be no more. Shawneetown was a flourishing city when Chicago was but a village, and there are indeed many interesting old landmarks to be seen about town. The hotel where Lafayette was so royally entertained when he visited this country in 1825 still stands; the state bank, with its colonial pillars and copper roof; the house where John A. Logan was married; the home of Col. Mulberry Sellers, Mark Twain's character in his "Gilded Age;" the old court house where Logan, Ingersoll and a number of other noted lawyers practiced law in early days, are all objects of interest to visitors. But probably the most interesting spot is the old Westwood cemetery, where lie the bodies of McLean, the first United States senator from Illinois; Hon. Thomas S. Ridgway, at one time state treasurer of Illinois, and many others of Illinois' brightest stars. Shawneetown is the birthplace of some of the best people in this grand old state, and the names of Ridgway, McGehee, Peebles, Poole, Bartley, Townsend and Robinson will live in the hearts of the people when Shawneetown is in the bed of the Ohio river.

Privileged to Paint Royalty.

Prof. Angell, the queen's portrait painter, is a fortunate man. He alone is privileged to paint her majesty, not because he is a surpassingly fine artist, for in that respect his repute is not high, but because he is the only artist that the queen can bear to look at her. "Her majesty has got accustomed to me; to be constantly looked at by another man would greatly annoy her." It is useless to argue with regal prepossessions, but what a pity that her majesty did not choose an English, or a Scotch, or an American artist, and get accustomed to him! Millais would not have looked at her more than was necessary, and as a painter he was worth a dozen Angells. Mr. Sargent would have been a model of discretion and would have painted a portrait with tremendous force. Mr. Whistler would have tried to instruct her majesty in the "gentle art of making enemies."—London Chronicle.

Priority of Standards.

From Collier's Weekly: According to an English journal, the yellow-and-red flag of Leon and Castile is the oldest of any used by the European powers, as it was first flown by Spain in 1785. The French tricolor was first used in 1795, the red English ensign, with the present Union Jack in the upper canton, in 1801, the present Italian flag in 1848, the present Austro-Hungarian flag in 1867, and the German flag in 1871. This would make the stars and stripes the oldest flag of all, but, as a matter of fact, many of the accepted standards of European princes, such as the white and black eagle of the House of Brandenburg, date back in the early Middle ages.

Her Economy.

Chicago News: Mr. Quinn—Lucy, why in all creation do you persist in sending for that plumber if he charges more than the rest. Mrs. Quinn—Because, Archibald, he always leaves enough scrap zinc to tack over the rat holes in the kitchen.

In the United States 390,000 cubic feet of pine is used annually in making matches.

THOUGHTS FOR THANKSGIVING

UNCLE EZRA'S THANKSGIVING.

Yep. Thanksgivin' Day is playin' out, er so it seems to me,
Fer it don't make no comparison to what it use' to be;
Though the turkey and the mince pies is the same we've alw'ys known,
An' I'm here, an' Sary Ellen, but we're eatin' 'em alone.

It's the buildin' of the railroads thet hes made it that-a-way—
Thet hes tuck our children from us an'
hes sp'ilt our holiday—
Holdin' out their wild shameeries about lan's that can't be beat (But whar cyclones digs the taters, an'
whar chinch bugs mows the wheat).

Why, it use' to be thet youngsters didn' seem to want to go
From the homestead of the ol' folks any more'n a mile er so;
They 'ud take things 'twas given 'm, an' they'd settle thar an' stay,
An' they'd fill the homestid table when it come Thanksgivin' Day.

Law me! yes, them times is ended!
Little Sary married fust,
An' Jim Medders 'lowed be'd take her out to Idyho er bust.

BUT WE'RE EATING 'EM ALONE.

An' he bustid, an' I've ben a-sendin'
money ever sence,
Though it's more fer little Sary thet I care than the expense.

An' then Chrissy went to Texas—
Chrissy alw'ys was our pride,
But he headed off some cattle, an' he hurt his spine an' died.
An' now Sammy's in the city, an' that ain't so fur away,
But he's writ us that a baby's brought
'em their Thanksgivin' Day!

So we narrered down the table, bein'
by ourselves, you see,
An' the turkey'll las' forever, jes' fer
Sary an' fer me;
An' the raisins in the mince pie, bought fer Sammy's special taste,
Sence he didn't come to eat 'em, sorter
seem to be a waste.

Yep, the railroads tuck 'em from us,
an' we're all alone at last,
An' Thanksgivin's like I told yeh, jest
a mem'ry of the past;
But we're countin', me an' Sary, on a better place, an' then
We will have a big Thanksgivin', an'
the childr'n home again.

HIS THANKSGIVING.

Tinkle-tinkle, tinkle-tinkle, tinkle-tinkle.

The leading man engaged in an attempt to remove a black spot from his dress cravat by means of an application of white grease paint, paused and listened.

"It's a mandolin," he said. "That's a new wrinkle. We've had all kinds of fiends in this company since we started out, everything from cigarettes to bicycles. Who's the musician, I wonder? Oh, I say, Jenks! Jenks! Who's the band wagon?"

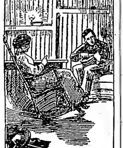
There was a step in the narrow passageway that led to the dressing rooms, and Jenks, the property man, appeared in the doorway. "Sh!" he said, "not so loud. The old man'll hear you."

The leading man started. "The old man, did you say—not Merriam?"

"Yes, Merriam," in a whisper.

The leading man sat on his trunk. "That beats me," he said. "The Ancient Mariner tinkling a mandolin. Now I'm prepared to see Father Time playing sentimental ditties on a jew's harp."

Jenks did not laugh, a fact which helped to sober the other man. "It's no surprise to me," said the property man, gravely. "I says to Mrs. Jenks just before I left the hotel, says I, 'Mrs. Jenks, you know what night this is?' 'Thanksgiving,' she says. 'Why, right,' says I, 'and it'll be a hard night for Merriam.'



I WANT YOU TO LEARN IT.

"'Poor old man,' says Mrs. Jenks, a-wipin' of a tear. 'Poor old man, I suppose he'll be playing of his mandolin again.' 'Thet he will,' says I.

"He hasn't missed it, as near as I can judge, for thirty years. As sure as Thanksgiving night comes, just so sure he gets out that old mandolin of his and tinkles away. And it's always the same tune. God! But it does make my mind go back. I'll never forget the first time he played it. You see, me and Merriam have been together, off and on, so long that I know his story most as well as he does himself. Not that he ever talks about it. To-night, after the show, that instrument 'll go back to the bottom of his trunk, and it won't come out again till this time next year."

The leading man was all ears.

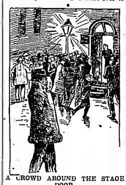
"Thirty years ago I was stage doorkeeper at the old California theater. Now, the stage doorman ain't so unimportant as some folks think. There's mighty little goes on that he don't know something about. He gets the flowers first, and he usually sees the cards. He's a good friend to the actor when the actor's a friend to him, and he can do a favor now and then that's worth the while.

"Merriam was just beginning to climb up the ladder in those days. He had come into the stock three years before as utility, but he was a handsome chap, with brains and ambition to back his good looks, and it wasn't long before he got to playing leads. Say, when Merriam went on as Romeo at the matinees you couldn't see three rows in front of you for the bonnets. Mrs. Jenks used to live in a regular garden those days, for Merriam wouldn't have none of the flowers the silly girls used to send him. When I'd offer to bring them home to him he'd laugh, and tell me he reckoned my wife cared more for flowers than he did.

"But I often noticed that he came into the theater with a big bunch of violets or roses that he'd bought himself to give to the little woman who played opposite parts to him. I asked him once why he didn't give her the flowers the girls sent him, instead of spending money that way. I took a kind of fatherly interest in Merriam in those days. Lord bless you, to look at him now you'd think he was my grandfather. He looks that old.

"Well, I seen how things was going with him and Nellie Moore, and everybody else seen it, too. When she was on the stage he stood in the wings, and his eyes followed every move she made. I remember one of the women saying that it was worth while to have a man care for you like that, and certainly Nellie seemed to like it. She came to me one afternoon—that Thanksgiving I'm telling you about—and said that she was too tired to go home after the matinee. She asked me if I'd run across the way and order dinner for her. Then she whispered in my ear that she wanted it served for two, and asked if I couldn't fix a bunch light on the stage, so she and Merriam could have a cozy Thanksgiving dinner all alone.

"Of course I done it for her, and while they were eatin' I went over to my boardin' house. There was to be a change of bill that night, so I came back early to get my props in shape, as I had them to attend to as well as looking after the door. When I came back to the theater I heard Nellie Moore playin' a mandolin. She was always fond of music and carried the instrument around with her.



A CROWD AROUND THE STAGE DOOR.

"'Now you try,' she said, and Merriam answered that he didn't know a note.

"'I'll teach you,' she said. 'There's an air I want you to learn and remember.'

"'All right,' said Merriam, and he took the mandolin from her. She showed him where to place his fingers and kept humming the tune until he could play it with only one or two breaks. Then she went to her dressing room to get ready, and Merriam sat there thrumming until the half hour was called.

"That night there was a good deal of hand-shaking, and the word went around that there was to be a weddin' at Christmas.

"The next night on my way to the theater I noticed a crowd around the stage door, and heard talk of a runaway. I hurried up, and as I did so Merriam came out, his face as white as a ghost's.

"'For God's sake, get a doctor, Jenks!' he cried.

"I rushed to the nearest drug store, and, luckily, found one there. When we got back to the stage door Merriam was waiting, and, without a word, he led us to a sofa in the wings on which Nellie Moore was lying. The doctor bent down over her for a minute, shook his head and said he was too late.

"An understudy played Juliet that night and Merriam as usual was the Romeo. The audience didn't know the real reason for the change, but in the tomb scene I don't see how they could help feeling it.

"Those of us who saw it from the wings will never forget it. The women were in hysterics and the stage hands and flymen were nearly as bad. I don't know how Merriam ever lived through it, but this I do know. He was a different man from that night. He seemed to lose all his ambition and he withered up so, that when I met him at a rehearsal two years later, I hardly knew him. He was bent much as you see him now, and was playing character old men. Every year he dropped down further, until they wouldn't trust him with anything better than bits and servants. Yes, sir, and that old man has played Romeo with the best of them."

The story was finished, but the mandolin still tinkled. The leading man's face was drawn, and Jenks sat thinking. Perhaps the former was thinking of his own high tide of prosperity, and of what the future had in store for him.

But sympathy and curiosity are closely allied, and soon the two men were tiptoeing through the passageway. They paused before the old actor's room. A ray of light filtered through a crack in the thin pine door. Merriam was dressed and made up for a comedy servant. His green livery coat hung on a peg on the wall, and the red wig with which he covered his own white hair lay on the dressing table before him. There, too, was a faded photograph of a pure-faced girl in the dress of Juliet. The actor was bent over his mandolin and the leading man now caught the tune for the first time, broken, but recognizable.

"When other hearts and other lips
Their tales of love shall tell,
Then you'll remember, you'll remember——"

Twang! There was the sound of a broken string.

"First act! All up for the first act!" The callboy came tumbling down the passage and the listeners hurried up to the stage. A few minutes later the callboy came up, too, and he found the stage manager fuming.

"Where's Merriam?" he cried. "I can't hold the curtain all night for that doddering old fool. Hurry him up, will you?"

The boy disappeared, and reappeared almost instantly.

"Mr. Merriam's——" The tears choked his voice and he got no further. The stage manager made a rush for the stairs. Ten minutes later he came up dressed for the comedy servant, but the man whose name was down on the bills for the part lay in his dressing room clutching an old mandolin, with his eyes fixed on a faded photograph.

The Soldiers in Battle.

It is not easy for the hearts in darkened rooms today, mourning sons and brothers to see God's face in the gloom, and if we give thanks for brave men and brave deeds, for the heroism that faced death unflinchingly in the trenches or on the seas, it should be in humility, that the world has not progressed far enough in God's way to be relieved of the curse of war, but we can be unreservedly thankful for the voices that have rung out in all the land for peace. Let us be thankful that never before have so many men and women been pleading for the right in defiance of the wrong. Never before have so many thoughtful ones faced the evils of the times, the great underlying causes of sin and misery, and sought to solve the knotty questions of our modern civilization.

Mothers of the Nation.

We are thankful for the mothers of the nation, their increasing interest in the care of little children, as well as in the welfare of the nation. The handing together of women in various organizations and their handling of practical questions is making the world a better place to live in. They are touching vital questions here and there, and calling a halt to the onsweeping of vice and impurity. They are helping to make ugly places beautiful, and are reaching out a hand to the unfortunate—educating, protecting, uplifting. This intellectual enlightenment and the heart culture that stands for the regeneration of the world is something for which to give thanks.

Things to Be Thankful For.

We are thankful for a day that brings a resting, breathing place to this work-a-day world for all, when we can think of God's goodness to us, when we can remember his poor, and can have a special opportunity to do good to others.

That Thanksgiving day may not be a mere name or a time of questionable indulgence, determine to make it a beautiful anniversary in the home, help to make the Thanksgiving service a success by being there yourself, do everything possible to make the aged, the sick and the poor happy, and the spirit of gratitude will fill your own heart.

HUNTING IN DANGEROUS COUNTRIES.

There never was a more enthusiastic hunter of orchids than Ignatius Forstermann, who stuck to his chosen calling as long as his vigorous manhood remained, visiting many out-of-the-way corners of the world in pursuit of the strange plants, but finally settled down near the Newton station, on the Long Island railroad, and remained there cultivating and selling orchids till the day of his death, three or four years ago. Forstermann was a native of Coblenz, on the Rhine, the son of a sturdy peasant couple. Being of a delicate constitution, the boy was sent to a German school of gardening for three years, and after that he was made an employe in a great garden now belonging to the Duke of Hesse. There he first became infatuated with orchids. Later, at the Botanical Gardens in Basle, Switzerland, he met an inspector who had visited almost inaccessible parts of South America searching for new varieties of the curious flowers. His tales of adventure in the tropics fired the youth's imagination and made him long to be an orchid hunter.

Forstermann used to tell how his opportunity came, early in the 80's, while he was in London as an employe of one of the largest British houses which deal in orchids. A man came into the offices of the concern with an orchid of unusual appearance. It had been sent to him by a brother then living in India, and he wanted to know whether it was a new variety or not. Examination by experts showed that it was, and the plant was sold a few days later for 200 guineas, or about $1,250. Naturally, Forstermann's employers were anxious to get hold of more orchids of the same variety, if possible, and, naturally, he jumped at their offer to send him to India in search of them. He knew when starting out that his journey might be a wild goose chase, since the only information that could be given to help him in his search was that the orchid was discovered by a tea planter of a certain name, living somewhere in India, and that it probably grew in the neighborhood of his plantation.

Forstermann's first rebuff was received at Calcutta. There he applied to the postoffice authorities for the address of the tea planter, but they said they had no time to hunt up the information he desired. From the postoffice he went out into the city, and for days wandered almost aimlessly up and down the streets, trying to think out a plan of action. He dared not go directly at his task, since if it had been known that he was seeking a rare orchid other professionals in his line, more experienced than himself, would have dogged his footsteps from morning till night, and likely would have found the plant as soon as himself.

On the third day his eye was caught by a sign in a window. It read, "Tea Planters' Gazette." He had seen the sign before, but that day it flashed into his head that possibly he might get the address he wanted there. Up the stairs to the office he bounded, two steps at once, barely bethinking himself in time to moderate his pace so as not to seem too eager. The clerk behind the counter was polite, and when asked for the address got out a big book and ran his finger down a long list of names.

"There are two planters of the name you ask about," he said; "one has a plantation at Silchar and the other's is near Sylhet."

This was a puzzler. The two places were 200 miles or more apart and there was no way of finding out which was the right one but by a personal visit. If he chose the wrong place the entire trip would be wasted; probably, since, while he was traveling and searching, the agent of the man who had left the orchid in London might go to the other place, gather a lot of the rare plants and ship enough of them to England to glut the market. However, the risk had to be taken, and Forstermann took it. He worked out his course on the theory that the object of his search would be found, probably, in the more out-of-the-way of the two localities. Inquiry showed it to be Silchar. It is near the border of the province of Manipur, where the population is sparse and where Europeans are scarce, because no white man is allowed to enter Manipur. So far as Forstermann could learn, orchid hunters had scoured every inch of territory near Sylhet, while few or none had ever scorched the neighborhood of Silchar.

So, hiring a boat, a cook and some coolies to tow the boat, Forstermann betook himself to Silchar. There he found the house of the planter, and, without making his presence known to the latter, began a weary hunt through the jungle for the orchid. In prosecuting his search, which lasted more than a week before any results were attained, Forstermann traveled over many miles of jungle and every day was more discouraged than on the day before. The jungle was full of orchids, some of them extremely beautiful, but none was like the one that had been sold in London for 200 guineas. One day, when about to give up the search as hopeless, he ran foul of a Scotchman, and the two began to talk about flowers.

"I came across a beautiful orchid, one day last year," said the Scot. "It looked like a new species to me, but, not being an expert, I gave it to a planter friend of mine who lives near here. He promised to send it to London, and if it turned out as I thought, I hoped to make some money out of it. Not long ago he told me word had been received from London that plants of the same species are common there."

Naturally Forstermann held his peace about the real object of his presence at Silchar and the talk drifted to game and shooting. Presently the Scot said that there was a chance to get tiger and other big game in the jungle about twelve miles away, just over the border in Manipur.

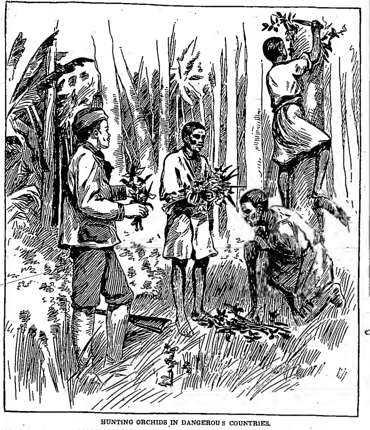
"If you go there," said the Scot, "you must be cautious, for the natives of Manipur have been killing white men pretty freely of late. It's over there that I found the orchid I was telling you of."

Forstermann started on a hunting trip across the border in Manipur on the following day, but he did not go hunting for tigers. He found the growth much more difficult than any he had encountered as yet, but he persevered, literally cutting his way through in places. Finally, in an open space in the forest, not far from the Manipur boundary, he found a great tree standing by itself, and upon its trunk there were orchids growing so thickly that they almost covered it. A brief examination showed them to be of the species he was searching, and he hugged himself with joy as he gave his coolies orders to begin gathering the plants.

Forstermann and his employers made a lot of money out of his first consignment of several thousand fine specimens, and his good luck induced him to remain in the East for five or six years hunting new varieties. In that time he visited many localities in India, the island of Ceylon, Siam, Java, the Philippines and the islands of Sulu, whose picturesque Sultan recently acknowledged the sovereignty of the United States. From his talk it would appear that Forstermann got to be on extremely good terms with the reigning Sultan, who must have been the one murdered a few years ago by the old Sultana, whose young son is now the ruling Sultan.

In all, Forstermann found about two-score new orchids. Not every one was commercially valuable, though nearly all were of great interest to botanists. He made no other special searches on which so much depended in a financial way as his first one, but he had many thrilling adventures. Once, in Siam, when on the march, he sent a guide ahead to select a camping place for the night. He had not gone far when an agonizing cry for help was heard. All hands rushed to his aid, but were unable to save him, for a gigantic tiger was dragging the wretch into the woods as they came up. They dared not follow in the rapidly gathering darkness, but next morning they found tiger and guide, the former gorged to stupidity and the latter half eaten. They killed the beast.

Once, when in the Dyak country, Forstermann knocked at the door of a native hut to ask his way. Being invited to enter, he complied, but was horrified to see half a dozen human heads suspended by the hair in the middle of the place. Naturally the orchid hunter declined the invitation to spend the night there, though, as he learned later, it would have been entirely safe to do so. The master of the hut was a "head hunter," but had the reputation of being friendly to white men. One of Forstermann's most valuable finds was an orchid growing at the tip top of an exceedingly high tree. He discovered it while looking up and down the trunks with his field glass. The plant was listed by the botanists under Forstermann's name.



HUNTING ORCHIDS IN DANGEROUS COUNTRIES.

How the Doctor Got His Clock

From the Philadelphia Record: In the hallway of a Philadelphia doctor's house stands a fine example of a grandfather's clock, the possession of which the medical man owes entirely to a pinch of snuff. Some years ago the doctor in question set his heart upon such a timepiece, and devoted two of his vacations to clock hunting. He visited many New England farm houses without success, as old furniture has been pretty well gathered up by the dealers "down East" and then carried his quest into Delaware and Maryland, where he found many old clocks, but none of them for sale. He was about to return home disconsolate, when he was called into consultation over a patient dying of quinsy. The resources of medicine had been exhausted, when the Quaker City doctor bethought himself of an old snuff box he had picked up during his wanderings, in which still lingered a modicum of snuff, pungent as of yore. With this powdered tobacco the doctor assailed the nostrils of the sick man, who, sneezing violently, broke the abscess in his throat that was choking him to death. Stimulants were administered and the sick man recovered. The Philadelphia doctor left the place the morning after this remarkable operation, but he had not been home a week before the grateful Marylander sent him a grandfather's clock, accompanied by a card upon which was written: "This clock, which struck the hour of my birth, would have also marked the hour of my death if your skill and knowledge had not stayed the hand of the destroyer."

Not Contagious.

The reminiscences and recollections of W. G. Grace, the veteran English cricketer, contain at least one good story—a joke made by Tom Emmett, a famous bowler. One Saturday afternoon Emmett was bowling for his club, but the fielders dropped catch after catch with such systematic persistence that he lost his temper, threw the ball on the ground, and said: "I'm not going to bowl any more. There's an epidemic on this ground, but thank heaven, it ain't catchin'!"

Mock Fights.

Mock fights are common in English service, where troops are taught how to march, charge, retreat, form in line of battle, and do all the things which are likely to be required in actual warfare, except to kill the supposed enemy. The soldiers take great delight in it.

ROPE MAKING IN MANILA.

A Good Product Turned Out with the Most Primitive Machinery.

From the Chicago Record: Rope making is an industry at which many work. The machinery used is primitive, but the finished article the workers turn out is smooth and strong. There is no way of cheating in this work. The hemp comes in bales, as it leaves the plantations. It is taken out to the street, where the work is done and where the spools are, for the first process. Time and practice are needed to learn the knack of keeping the reel going around by a simple twist of the wrist. The operator backs slowly away as the strands grow in length, and when he has gone as far as he deems necessary he begins to wind up all the cord that he has spun. For the next operation twelve spools of this cord and another machine are used. The machine has twelve cranks at one end and two at the other. When the strands are laid, if the rope be a long one, supports are erected about fifty feet apart. These are to keep the strands from twisting and tangling as they are spun about. Two men stand at the upper end of the walk and face the man who is turning the twelve strands. Each has two cone-shaped pieces of wood in his hands, and in these cones are six grooves, through which the strands run. The operator at the strand end turns his wheel to the right and the men at the other end reverse the operation. The strands begin to twist and grow smaller and harder, and at last the two men with the cones start slowly toward the strand man. If there are tangles in front of them, they separate the snarl with their toes. In front are twelve strands. Behind the advancing operators are two. It is a slow walk from one end to the other, and it is hard work to keep the strands whirling and the machinery going until the two ropes are complete. When all is done the finished object is a rope the size of a clothesline. If a larger rope is to be made, the operation is repeated with as many strands as desired, according to the thickness of the rope wanted. The process is the same, but cones with larger grooves are used. The rope may be made of any length. In fact, as long as the hemp holds out the operators can splice and splice indefinitely. The rope is rolled up in great coils when it is finished for shipment, and is then wrapped in coarse cloth manufactured from the same fiber.

AN ODD COURT-MARTIAL.

Tried to Obey Love and Duty at Once.

A naval court-martial, the record of which has just been received at the Navy Department in Washington, has decided the question whether an enlisted man on guard is neglecting his duty in making love to a girl, says the Boston Globe. Corporal Thomas Scanlon of the marine corps was the accused. Corporal Scanlon was marching his beat outside of an officer's residence at the League Island Navy Yard, near Philadelphia, when a servant maid in the officer's household joined him. The officer came upon the couple suddenly, much to the confusion of both, as Corporal Scanlon had his arm around the maid's waist. Charges of unsoldierly conduct and neglect of duty were preferred by the officer against Corporal Scanlon. A court-martial was ordered, much to the astonishment of Corporal Scanlon, who, being a soldier, could not understand why he was not privileged to make love to a pretty girl at any and all times. Several interesting questions were involved in the case. Was it unsoldierly to make love to a girl while on guard? Was Corporal Scanlon protecting public or private property in standing guard before an officer's residence? Can a soldier keep his arm around a girl and his eye on property which he is guarding at the same time? The court did not undertake to answer these questions except by inference. It returned a verdict of "not guilty" on all charges and specifications, which the Navy Department has interpreted to mean that love-making and guard duty synchronously are not inconsistent with military law. The department evidently indorses this view, as Secretary Long has approved the verdict of the court-martial and ordered that Corporal Scanlon be restored to duty.

Forests of Leafless Trees.

Forests of leafless trees are to be found in some parts of Australia. The trees, known as the "Leafless Acacia," have no leaf, and their respiration is carried on through a little stem which, for this purpose, apparently acts the same as the leaf. In this species, in consequence of the intense heat and drought of Australia, where the trees abound, the leaf blade entirely ceases to be developed, and the leaf stalk becomes vertically flattened into what botanists term a "phyllode," which performs the same vegetative function as the leaf, but presents only an edge to direct sunshine and light; and is thereby protected from excessive evaporation. There are also forests of another leafless tree in Australia, the Casuarina or beef-wood, a tree with rigid, drooping branchlets, something like our "horsetails," their wood the color of beef, (whence their name), and as good as English oak. Leafless forests are also met with in Florida. In the dry districts of Mexico an immense area of country is covered with a species of mimosa trees which bear nothing but thorns and blossoms; no leaves ever appear, all growth and progress taking place through the thorns, which are shed at certain seasons and replaced by new ones.

Here Is a Good Thing.

In London is an individual who can scarcely be described otherwise than as a "smile doctor." For a small fee he will transfer the most uncomely laugh or smile into a dainty and elegant playfulness of the lips—only he must have his fee first. The "smile" doctor puts his subject through lip and mouth exercises which are of his own invention. The eyes are the organs which are most concerned in the act of smiling or laughing, and the subject is taught how to use them most effectively. By constant practice the desired pretty smile is obtained at the end of a few weeks. Actresses and music-hall artists patronize this smiling tutor.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Origin of Massage.

China claims to have originated massage treatment. According to long time Chinese ideas, life is entirely dependent on "air currents," which are designated as the primary aura of the organism. So long, then, as the body is permeated by the air current it is proof against disease, and the object of physical exercise is to circulate the air current. To effect this the Chinese system is divided into three periods, each period occupying a hundred days, the first period commencing at the time of the new moon.

The patient must rise at 4 o'clock in the morning and walk outside his house, taking seven deep inspirations, and immediately after this two youths who have been specially trained commence a gentle friction all over the body, starting over the cardiac area. At the time of full moon a further set of inspiratory exercises are taken. Later on, in the second period, the various parts of the body are rubbed with wooden planks until the muscles are hardened, and it is not until the hardening takes place that the real physical exercises are taken. Between the fifth and sixth month is the period of greatest activity, the European dumbbell being replaced by large sacks filled with stones. It is in the third period that the back muscles are chiefly exercised.—Chicago Chronicle.

The Development of the Skin.

By almost constant overcovering day and night for successive generations the skin has by degeneration adapted itself to its reduced requirements. From birth to senile death we are much overcovered. That a full and vigorously developed skin is a desideratum will be generally conceded. The tendency is for ours to degenerate to a tissue paper consistency. The exquisite structure of the skin at once indicates its importance as one of the organs of the body.

A homely showing of that functional power which can be developed in the skin is indicated by the story of the Indian. Being almost naked and yet apparently quite comfortable in inclement weather he was asked why he did not seem to suffer and be made ill by the exposure, he replied: "White man's face no pain no sick. Indian all face." By this excessive covering our peripheral nerves are too intensely impressed by caloric changes, our capillary blood system too feebly and incompletely developed to battle most successfully with heat, disease and traumatic impressions. Its muscular fat and connective tissue substance are all too deficient and defective for our greatest comfort and welfare. All its functional powers have been reduced. Yet seldom is heard a cry to develop the skin.—Philadelphia Medical Journal.

Outwitted the Lunatic.

While residing at Rome I paid a visit to the lunatic asylum there, and among the more remarkable patients one was pointed out to me who had been saved with much difficulty from inflicting death upon himself by voluntary starvation in bed, under the impression that he was defunct, declaring that dead people never eat. It was soon obvious to all that the issue must be fatal, when the humane doctor bethought of the following stratagem: Half a dozen of the attendants, dressed in white shrouds and their faces and hands covered with chalk, were marched in single file with dead silence into a room adjoining that of the patient, where he observed them through a door purposely left open sit down to a hearty meal.

"Hello!" said the would be corpse to an attendant. "Who be they?"

"Dead men," was the reply.

"What," rejoined the defunct, "do dead men eat?"

"To be sure they do, as you see," answered the attendant.

"If that's the case," exclaimed the dead man, "I'll join them, for I'm famished."—Lancet.

Kate Field's Love Letter.

If that charming woman, the late Kate Field, did not marry, it was assuredly not because she did not have many an admirer. A Washington lady has in her possession a little old bit of yellow paper upon which is penciled a boyish scrawl. It was preserved by Miss Field from her little girl days. The scrawl runs thus:

"wont yue mete mo down hye Tho Gate aftter school Yue nowe i Luv yue."

On the other side of the bit of paper is the address, thus:

"Miss Kate Field, Esq., last Seat nex to the Door goin out."

It must have been like a breath of the forgotten perfume of yesteryears when the clever, kindly woman happened upon this little old piece of yellowed paper on a rainy afternoon of rummaging.

Trapped by Its Portrait.

If an old English writer be true in his observations, the pheasant must be a very simple bird, for he declares that it puts its head in the ground and thinks that all its body is then hidden. This is just what our old friend the ostrich does in the African desert. The same author says that it was also captured by another curious plan. A picture of the bird was painted on cloth and then placed in a spot where it was sure of being seen. By and by a silly pheasant coming along catches sight of the portrait and goes up to have a close view of the new neighbor. While engaged in inspecting the canvas the fowler draws near from behind and throws his net over the unwary art student.

Early Clocks.

Many clocks with weights and wheels were in use in England during Chaucer's time, and most of the monasteries of the fourteenth century possessed clocks, though these were used to show the astronomical movements, as well as the passage of hours. Throughout the fifteenth century clocks were made mostly by armorers and blacksmiths, as they were constructed of iron and steel.

A LEGEND OF JAPAN.

THE STORY OF CHOBEI, THE MAN WHO KNEW NO FEAR.

Rather Than Tarnish His Reputation For Bravery He Accepted the Prince's Invitation and Went Voluntarily to Assassination.

The following legend of Chobei has been handed down in Japan as indicative of the courage of the "bravis," or duelists, who flourished in Yeddo during the sixteenth century, forming a sort of Japanese St. Hermindad. Chobei, the leader of this clique, was a redoubtable swordsman, whose constantly recurring duels forced his master to expel him from his retinue. Unwilling to enlist with another of the feudal lords, he assembled all the D'Artagnans of Yeddo about him until his power incited even the princes to envy, although they declined to recognize the outlawed duelist.

On this pretense he was excluded from a popular teahouse one day at an hour when was expected Juirozayemon, the leader of the Hatamotos, then the most influential political party in Japan, who had arrogated the city of Yeddo for the official residence. But Chobei, with a shrug of his shoulders, forced his way past the attendants into the apartments reserved for the prince, where he removed his garments and cast himself on a couch in feigned slumber.

"Who is that brute?" demanded the prince on his arrival. "The leader of the swordsmen," they answered him. Juirozayemon seated himself in silence and began to smoke. Having smoked his pipe, he emptied the glowing cinders into the pretended sleeper's nostrils, repeating this five times, when he paused, astounded by such courageous endurance. Chobei, noting this, yawned, rubbed his eyes like one awakening from profound slumber and exclaimed:

"You, O most noble master! And I having drunk too much should have slept uncovered before your eyes! How shall I excuse my vulgarity?"

"I have so long sought your acquaintance that you are forgiven. Be seated and accept this cup of wine, I pray you."

Politeness forbade Chobei to refuse a drop of the proffered cup, a huge beaker of powerful wine, offered him in the hopes of overpowering him. But Chobei drained it easily and, replenishing it, presented it to his host, who accomplished this feat with the utmost difficulty.

"Will your highness permit me to offer you some gift of value?" Chobei asked humbly.

"Surely."

"What do you most desire?"

Thinking to render the brave ridiculous before the whole city, the prince said promptly:

"A plate of macaroni."

"Ah, Chobei," thought he, "the whole town will soon be telling how the great duelist was permitted only to offer a plate of macaroni to the president of the Hatamotos."

After a whispered colloquy the attendant disappeared, leaving the two enemies alone, smiling but impassive. But soon a great noise penetrated the apartment, and the prince discovered a crowd of workmen busily constructing an immense wall of macaroni around the teahouse. All Yeddo was assembled to view this unique and royal gift. Discomfited that the "bravo" should have outwitted his ruse, the prince departed to plan revenge. The following day brought with it an invitation from Juirozayemon to breakfast. Despite his comrade's remonstrances, Chobei insisted on accepting it. As he entered the prince's dwelling the Samurais threw themselves upon him with drawn swords. Chobei's immense muscular strength enabled him to disarm them, when he proceeded unannounced to the rear apartment.

"Pardon me, your lordship," said he, "for announcing myself. Your attendants have forgotten to do so."

"Surely. Perhaps they have sought quarrel with you. 'Twas but a joke, for I wagered that all six could not disarm you. Perhaps you would like a bath to refresh yourself."

Who shall say that Chobei was wise? Alone in his enemy's house, he discarded his weapons, removed his garments and crouched in the bath. The water that was at first hot was soon boiling. Chobei dashed from the bath, but ten spears held by invisible hands forced him back. Suffocated by steam, exhausted by blood, Chobei fell dying to the ground.

The Samurais were still congratulating themselves on their success when a loud knocking was heard. Inquiry revealed the dueling confederates who were come to seek their leader.

"He is drunk and cannot see you."

"Our leader is dead. We have brought his bier."

The Samurais were dumb with astonishment. Chobei had divined the trap, yet, preferring to sustain his reputation of daring untarnished by any accusation of fear, had voluntarily gone to his assassination.

Shocks From Live Wires.

"It is a singular fact," said an electrician of this city, "that the human body is capable of becoming more or less inured to shocks from live wires. I suppose the average scientist would scout the idea, but what I say is borne out by everyday experience. The employees of a big electric light works, for instance, are continually receiving shocks that would disable an ordinary man, but are apparently none the worse for the experience.

"I remember some time ago a couple of young fellows came in contact accidentally with a live wire at a manufactory here in town, and both received exactly the same current. One of them was a helper around a dynamo and had met with mishaps of that sort before. He was knocked off his feet and momentarily stunned, but was all right in less than two minutes. The other man, who was a stranger, fell over as if struck by lightning, and it was fully half an hour before he showed the least signs of returning consciousness. He was laid up for several days and, oddly enough, was much the more powerful physically of the pair.

"I have known several cases of practically the same sort. The motormen on the street cars frequently 'get the current,' as they call it, especially in rainy weather, when wet wood becomes a conductor. They tell me they don't mind it much after the first few times."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Throne That Was Never Called For.

On the eve of the Franco-German war when the Emperor Louis Napoleon entered upon the conflict which ended so disastrously to himself and his countrymen, a couple of strangers appeared at a German town. They brought with them a large packing case, which on their arrival was carried to a hotel. Here the unknown visitors remained some time and eventually disappeared without paying their bill, which amounted to a considerable sum.

The landlord, whose curiosity had often been aroused with reference to the possible contents of the case, at last determined to open it and on doing so found a handsomely designed and richly upholstered state chair. This was adorned with the French imperial arms, eagle and Louis Napoleon's monogram, and beneath it was a musical box which played when the cushion was sat upon.

It is supposed that the throne—for such it is believed to have been—in the event of success attending the French army was to have been used by the emperor at Berlin after the capture of the German metropolis. Fate, however, spoiled the imperial plans, hence the sudden and precipitate flight of the custodians of the chair. The widow of the hotel keeper a few years later sent it to England; where it eventually found a purchaser.—Stray Stories.

A Medical Prospector.

"It isn't getting your diploma that's the worst of it," said a new fledged M. D. "It's where to hang out your shingle. A doctor's got to bear two things in mind in deciding that—he mustn't choose a place that already has physicians enough, and, above all, he must not settle in a healthy place—one of those towns, don't you know, where nobody dies except of old age. Of course a doctor doesn't want people to die—that's almost as bad as to have them never sick—but he does want them to be sick enough to keep him going.

"Now, the way a friend of mine did was this: He took the train out through central New York, and he stopped off at pretty much every place he came to till he found what he wanted. It was a pretty place to look at, but it lay low along a river. He noticed as they approached it lots of marsh lands, and he said to himself, 'There'll be malaria here anyhow and probably typhoid.' And, sure enough, though he's only been there three years, he already has a paying practice."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Ear Piercing In China.

Every Chinese woman has her ears pierced. In fact, the custom is nearly as important as the binding of the feet. When the child is a year old, the operation may be performed as soon as convenient. It is considered quite an art.

First two little tassels of red cotton are prepared, with a blue bead on each and a long end hanging loose. Then the child's ear is pinched till it is numb, when a needle is run through and the thread after it till the tassel hangs over the lobe, where it is secured. Of course the child often makes considerable objection to the operation and then if there is a kitten anywhere near its ears are often pierced to encourage the human victim. This accounts for the frequence of cats with holes and slits in their ears in the Celestial empire.

The Tragedian's Defi.

"Yah! Yah!" yelled the boys in the gallery. "Wot ya doin on de stage? Go back to de lunch counter!"

"Canaille! Rabble! Scum of the earth! Offscourings of the slums!" hissed the tragedian, facing them with folded arms; "the hoodlums of the gallery hoot at me and the critics of a venal press roast me! I defy ye both! I care neither for the higher criticism nor the hired criticism!"

And he went on with his lines.—Chicago Tribune.

The Refractory Weather.

"Does the climate agree with you?" inquired the mild but conversational person.

"No," answered the weather prophet fiercely. "Nearly every time I announce what it ought to do it assumes an attitude of rigid and uncompromising opposition."—Washington Star.

The Best Authority.

Hettie—Harry is a man always to be trusted. He has never deceived me.

Clara—But how do you know that?

NEW YORK WORLD.

THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

What is home without a newspaper? says an exchange. It is a place where old hats are stuffed in windows, where the wife looks like a bag of wool with a string tied around the center, where the husband has a tobacco panorama painted on his shirt front and the neglected children wipe their noses on jacket sleeves.

A brother editor puts the old question in new form, and says to his subscribers:

"Reader do not stop your paper just because you don't agree with the editor. That last cabbage you sent didn't agree with us either, but we didn't drop you from our subscription list on that account."

Again there is talk of building a canal from Grand Forks to Duluth and the plan is to use the Red Lake river to Red Lake, through the lake, thence southeast through many of the smaller streams and lakes and into the Mississippi, and to a point due west of Duluth. Surveying will start within two weeks, the work to continue all winter.

The great trouble with some people in most towns says an exchange, is that they will not cast their bread upon the water unless they are assured in advance that in a few days it will come back to them a full grown sandwich all trimmed with ham, butter and mustard and rolled in a warranty deed for onehalf of the earth and a mortgage upon the other half.

—For cuts and sores there is nothing better than the Imperial Carbolic salve.

The man who gets the smallest numbes of letters—says an exchange—is the one who complains most at the management of the postoffice; the man who complains most of the preacher pays the preacher least; the man who runs down his town does the least to build it up; the man who does not take, and complains the most of his home paper does the least to make the paper a success or public benefit. He says the town is no good, and that it is dead. But he is mistaken—he is the copse.

This from The Leeds Review contains more truth than poetry: "A business man came into our sanctum yesterday and asked for exchanges from a few towns in this vicinity. He said he wanted the names of some of the business men, live men of the towns and the way to get them he thought was to see who advertised. The men who advertise each week are the pushers of the town, the public spirited, the broad minded men on whom the prosperity of the town largely depends and whom the people should patronize.

—If you are troubled with rheumatism take the Imperial Blood and Rheumatism cure. It will positively cure all diseases arising from impure blood, and is sold under an absolute guarantee to benefit or money refunded. Call for free sample at the New Drug Store.

Mack Surprised.

Mike McAndress, proprietor of the Hotel Markham was the victim that furnished material for a surprise party Monday evening and which turned out to be the largest gathering of this kind ever held in St. Hilaire. A few days previous some of Mr. McAndress' friends had discovered that his 36th birthday was on Monday and they got together and in a quiet way, invited friends of the popular landlord who were to congregate at the Hotel St. Hilaire and at a certain hour to march over and take possession of the house which was very successfully carried out. Dancing and visiting was the order of the evening after which an excellent lunch was served and again dancing resumed. The party presented Mr. McAndress with a beautiful rocking chair and in accepting and returning thanks he made a short but witty speech. All report of having an excellent time.

The interment of the remains of Hosea Tway, whose death was announced in our last week's issue took place Sunday forenoon under the auspices of the Odd Fellows—the following of whom acted as pall bearers: Messrs. Nolan, Thibedeau, Fricker, Penno, Fikhoff and Kortgaard. The members of the order met at their hall at 9:30, formed in line of procession, marched to the residence on Wall street and accompanied the remains to the M. E. church where the local pastor, Mr. Vernon, preached an able and instructive sermon. The line of march was then resumed to the cemetery where the services were concluded.

H. Thibedeau left Monday for Missoula, Montana where he goes to visit with his father, who he has not seen for a number of years. He expects to return about Christmas time. His wife and son accompanied him as far as Crookston.

From Farm, Stock and Home.

The prospects are good for beef cattle for several years to come.

Tidy up, snug up, batten up, stop up, nail up, winter is coming!

Punch, punch, punch the trust, punch it deep or all else will bust!

Make teams earn their winters board by hauling the winters manure.

That steer calf is worth taking care of this winter, and good care, too.

The farmer who has choice beef cattle is in luck; would that his number were greater.

The farmer who thinks he is not properous cannot be well posted; he should read papers, statistics and things, and find out how mistaken he is.

It is said that farm mortgages are getting so scarce that they are commanding big prices as curiosities in museums! How nice, how glorious it is, to be sure!

There is a deal of printer's ink used now-a-days to tell farmers how prosperous they are. It seems that farmers might be allowed to find out a little thing like that all by themselves.

If the government must go into the goods selling business why not make it coal, kerosene, tin, glass, nails or something else the trade of which is monopolized, and not tackle a business in which competition is too sharp to allow exorbitant charges or to make any man enormously rich?

—Dr. Thomas is an up-to-date in all the different branches in his profession. Remember the dates, Dec. 5th and 6th.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent

The Cruiser Charleston, wrecked off the coast of the island of Luzon, although one of the oldest ships of our new navy, was worth more than half a million dollars, and that sum may now be added to the large and rapidly growing amount that this country is paying for imperialism.

What readers of this paper have known for sometime—that Boss Platt was scheming to get Gov. "Teddy" Roosevelt on the ticket with Mr. McKinley next year—is beginning to be fully understood by friends of other would-be running mates of Mr. McKinley. That Platt was working with the knowledge and consent of Roosevelt has been suspected from the first, and now it is practically certain. Roosevelt told a prominent New York republican the other day that if the party managers wished him to run for Vice Presidency he would accept. Humph! of course he would accept, and be almighty glad of the opportunity, too.

Why the preliminary report of the Philippine Commission, which was forced by Mr. McKinley for use in Ohio did not throw any bouquets at Gen. Otis has been ascertained. Admiral Dewey put his foot down on the report containing a single sentence of praise for Otis. And that isn't all that has become known. Admiral Dewey, while declining to criticise his, told Mr. McKinley that if the American army had been commanded by the right sort of an officer there would have been no war with the Filipinos. That is said to have been the principal reason for curtailing the authority of Otis by fixing it so that Gens. MacArthur, Lawton and Wheaton, would be left free to fight the troops under them in their own way during the present campaign against Aguinaldo.

The Rev. Irl R. Hick's Almanac.

There is no comparison between former editions, and this splendid Almanac for 1900, now ready. Printed in beautiful colors, on much finer paper, its 196 pages are packed with invaluable information on storms, astronomy and meteorology. It is illustrated with nearly 200 finest half tones and other engravings. This superb book would sell anywhere for fifty cents, but it costs only 25 cents a copy, and every subscriber to Rev. Irl R. Hicks' now famous paper, Word and Works, at $1.00 a year, receives this elegant Almanac as a premium. Word and Works is a recognized leader among the best family and scientific journals, while nothing of its kind can compare with the Hicks Almanac. One dollar a year is a nominal price for such unique and usefull publications. Professor Hicks has justly, and of necessity, withdrawn his storm and weather forecasts from all free almanacs, having generously given his time and labor free for nearly twenty years. Used by British Soldiers in Africa.

Capt. C. G. Dennison is well known all over Africa as commander of the forces that captured the famous rebel Galishe. Under date of Nov. 4, 1897, from Vryburg, Bechuanaland, he writes "Before starting on the last campaign I bought a quantity of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which I used myself when troubled with bowel complaint, and had given to my men, and in every case it proved most beneficial." For sale by The Imperial Drug Co.

HANS AND LENA.

Frau Gherken was young and inexperienced of men and business, and her temper was fruitful soil for suspicion and jealousy. She was not pleased with the new arrangement of the store. She could not bear to think of Hans in the company of a strange woman day after day, and her pride was hurt that she had not been consulted in advance about the plan. When the merchant went home that night he found his wife in tears and no dinner prepared.

After much talk and more tears Frau Gherken recovered her good humor, and permitted Hans to kiss her forehead, after which it was agreed that Prof. Van Brieden should come two days a week to give her music lessons. The professor was young and handsome and a great artist, and the days when he came to teach her music would not seem so lonely, and she might forget the horrid woman making change at the store.

One day Frau Gherken went to the store and surprised her husband standing in the little cage with the cashier. Their heads were close together, because the young woman was helping him add a column of figures so he could check her daily cash account, but to the jealous wife the scene was proof that her husband no longer loved her. That night she charged him with planning to run away with his cashier, and they came near to a serious quarrel, for the patience of Hans was exhausted.

"Then you can elope with your professor," he replied, with some spirit and anger.

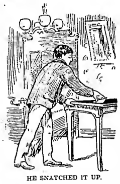
Hans remained a long time alone in the cozy little sitting room of his home, thinking as hard as he could. At last he slapped his hands on his knees and laughed aloud.

"I will elope," he said to himself in a whisper. "I must cure Lena, she makes me so miserable. She shall have a lesson."

The young merchant closed and locked the door, and then he spent an hour composing a brief note. When it was finished he read it over several times and laughed softly. Then he went to the door and listened. There was no sound. His wife had gone out. He then placed the note on the center-table, where it would be seen by any one who entered the room. The note read:

"Lena: You have guessed my secret. I have eloped. Now you will be happy with your professor. HANS."

The little bronze clock on the mantle chimed 11 o'clock when Hans turned down the light and tiptoed out of the room. He stopped at the foot of the stairs and listened. No one was stirring in the house. Then he crept softly up to the door of his wife's room. The door was ajar, and he glanced inside. A lamp was burning on the table, but Frau Gherken was not there. He stood still and listened for a minute, and thought he heard her moving about the dining room below, but the sound was not repeated. Then he stepped forward and turned up the light. A sheet of paper neatly folded lay on the table. With a trembling hand and sinking heart he snatched it up and read:



HE SNATCHED IT UP.

"Hans: I am gone. You do not love me, but I hope you will be happy now that I am out of the way. LENA."

Hans Gherken ran down the stairs and into the street like a man gone mad. He was just in time to see a cab turn the corner a block away. He ran after the vehicle as fast as he could and caught sight of it in the next street. Love, fear and jealous rage combined to send the hot blood flying through his veins and lead wings to his feet as he sped on after the cab. For five blocks the race was even, and then the heart of Hans bounded with joy as he discovered that he was gaining. Two blocks more and, panting and breathless, he made a flying leap and caught the reins from the hand of the cabman.

"Where is he? I'll strangle the wretch!" cried Hans, who believed that Lena and Prof. von Brieden were in the cab. The cabman fought back and shouted for the police. A crowd gathered quickly, and two officers came and pulled the struggling men apart as a weeping woman leaped from the cab and threw her arms about the neck of Hans.

"O, Hans, Hans, come back to me!"

"Where is he?" cried the struggling husband.

"Where is she?" wailed Lena.

"I was foolish Lena! Why did you leave me?"

"You are not trying to elope?"

"I swear I was only fooling. Where is he? O, Lena, Lena, you shall not leave me."

"Hans, Hans, how could you believe I would leave you?"

"Where is the professor?"

"I discharged him yesterday. He is not coming back."

"And you were not trying to elope?"

"No, Hans; I thought you had left me."

Hans and Lena went home together after he had settled with the cabman, and next day he discharged the cashier.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

SECRETS OF MALARIA.

Fatal Diseases of Men Traced to Flies and Mosquitoes.

London Times: A correspondent writes from Sierra Leone, under date Aug. 18: "The medical research expedition sent by the School of Tropical Diseases, Liverpool, arrived here on the 10th by the steamship Fantee. It consists of Major Ross, of University College, Liverpool, formerly of the Indian medical service; Dr. Annett, also of the University College, Liverpool, a pupil of Dr. Koch, and Mr. Austen, entomologist of the British museum. They have been busy ever since their arrival in making experiments and in investigating fever cases. The expedition could not have come at a more opportune time, as the weather is exceedingly unhealthy at present and fever cases are prevalent. One most important discovery has been made—that is that the Anopheles mosquito, which absorbs and transmutes the fever parasite, abounds in this colony; also that the fever parasite exists in it, after it has bitten a fever patient. The fever parasite has also been found in large numbers in the blood of fever patients in the military hospitals. Another remarkable discovery is that of the tsetse fly, which apparently thrives in this climate. This discovery will account to a great extent for the reason why horses invariably die after a short time spent here, and for the great mortality among cattle. It is worthy of note what little interest has hitherto been taken in Sierre Leone, although it has been in our possession for 100 years, and hundreds of horses must have died during that period, yet no investigation has ever been made to find out if the mortality among horses was caused by the tsetse fly; on the contrary, it was always supposed that the tsetse fly did not exist, and that horses died from lion disease caused by eating the grass of the country. The expenses and disadvantages of human transport might have induced the government to ascertain if the tsetse fly did exist on the west coast of Africa. As no accommodation had been provided for the members of the expedition in Freetown, they have been put up by the officers of the West India regiment in Tower Hill barracks, where every opportunity has been afforded them of carrying on their investigations. Much advantage should be gained by the indefatigable researches of this expedition, and a new light has been thrown on the treatment of malarial diseases by the great benefit to be derived from the revelations of the microscope."

LAND OF MEDALS.

Frenchmen Cannot Hope to Escape Being Presented with One.

France is the land of the medal. Not taking into account the thirty odd military ones, all of which no soldier—and, owing to conscription, every Frenchman is one—has been able to dodge, there are 13 labor medals and some 12 awards of merit. If you are a clerk or have been employed in a commercial house for 30 years, you get a medal. All government officials, from doorkeepers to heads of departments, get a medal for being true to the republic. If you are a farmer—and any one who owns one acre of land can call himself one—you are decorated with the Order of the Leek. Crossing sweepers also have their own badge of good conduct. Apropos of this they tell a story of a Frenchman who lay dying in Paris, yet, although he was dying of starvation, he seemed happy. His few friends, standing round his bed, waiting for the end, asked the reason. "Ah!" he replied, "I have lived for 59 years without having received one medal." Two days passed and still he lingered on the borderland. On the third, as he was fast sinking, a parcel came by post. It was from the Anti-Medal society, and decorated him with its badge of membership made in bronze!

The Religious "Slot-Machine."

In the Adirondack mountains, at a place of popular resort, there is a chapel where the contributions are often liberal in the summer season, but where the contributions still chiefly consist, as far as bulk goes, of small coins. The rector of this church, who is a man of dignified and ministerial appearance, is accustomed to go with the Sunday offerings to one of the hotels and receive a check for the amount of it. One Monday morning he was counting the money at the desk of the hotel cashier, and was at that moment scraping together the nickels and coppers, which were in abundant supply. Just then a bell-boy came up who seemed to have something on his mind. "What is it, my little man?" asked the rector, in his most honeyed tone. "Beg pardon, sir," said the boy, "but are you the man what runs the slot-machine down-stairs?" The boy could never understand why all the people, including the rector, laughed at him. The laugh was really on the Sunday contributors to the church funds. Many clergymen, we have no doubt, will sympathize with this supposed proprietor of the slot-machine.

A Scheme That Failed.

In a well-known town in the Midland counties resided two friends, who were very fond of practical jokes and bore the character of being "two cute 'uns," says Tit-Bits. Their cleverness, however, did not save them from being "landed" with a bad 2-shilling piece. A consultation took place between them as to how to get rid of the false coin. "Let's go to the theater," said one; "it's only sixpence to the pit. I'll try it, and if I get in, all right, you can pay and follow me. We shall have our night's amusement and be a shilling to the good." "Agreed," said the other. No. 1 tendered his counterfeit coin at the doors of the temple of the drama, which was taken without examination, one shilling and sixpence being given him in change. No. 2, seeing his friend had safely passed the money box, went up gleefully and put down the first coin he could take from his pocket. It was half a crown. Imagine his consternation on receiving change—the bad 2-shilling.

BANKING ON LUCK.

Why Gambling Establishments Prove Profitable in the Long Run.

"In all gambling games," said an old-time sport in the New Orleans Times-Democrat, "there is a percentage in favor of the 'house.' Anybody except a born fool knows that a man couldn't afford to equip an establishment, hire help, pay rent and defray all the hundred odd one incidental expenses unless he derived a profit that was based on some fixed principle and not dependent upon mere luck or chance. Just where the profit comes in, however, is something that very few people understand. Most of them imagine it is derived from some slight advantage in the arrangement of the game, such as the 'zero' numbers in roulette or the 'splits' in faro, but they are very much mistaken. It really depends on a principle that applies to all games alike, and is what might be termed the 'percentage of capital.' Strange as it may seem, I could take a capital of $1,000 and begin pitching nickels, in which the chances are perfectly even, letting the players guess either way they wanted to, and I would make a steady profit, day in and day out. The secret is this: The average player has only a limited amount of money, and a slight run of bad luck wipes him out. He is obliged to quit, and somebody else takes his place, while the house keeps right on through good luck and bad, continually swelling its reserve with the cash of the broken players. To simplify the matter, suppose I have 100 pennies and you have one, and we begin matching. One loss breaks you, but I can stand 100 losses before having to quit. You may have a spurt of luck at the start, but in the long run I am morally certain to wipe you out. That principle of the percentage of capital is at the bottom of the profits of every gaming house in the world from Monaco to Long Branch."

SEA-GOING CANOES.

One That Could Carry 100 Passengers and Cross the Ocean.

The second largest Indian canoe in British Columbia, if not on the Pacific coast, is now hauled out on the tide-flat hill on First avenue south. "We could cross the ocean in that canoe," said the owner this morning in very good English. "It will hold more than a hundred people, and is the largest canoe but one of all our country." The big canoe is but one of about a score of large canoes that belong to the Fort Rupert and West Coast Indians of Vancouver Island. Fort Rupert is on the northern end of Vancouver Island, and the Indians now here were eighteen days on the voyage. With a good fair wind they can go 100 miles a day, and could, therefore, accomplish the almost 1000-mile voyage in eight or ten days. However, they do not always get the fair wind. The big canoe is a new one, made this summer. It is about fifty-five feet long and seven to eight across. The Indians say there are even bigger cedar trees than the one from which the canoe was made. These Indians have been coming here ever since the first hops were planted. They always look for a sound tree for a canoe, one without any rotten parts or knot holes about it. The Indian owner hired a number of other Indians, and made the canoe where the tree fell, then skidded it into the water. He considers it worth $300 or $400. War canoes of these northern Indians used to create a great deal of terror in the minds of the first settlers. There are old gray-haired patriarchs in the camp today who doubtless have in the past taken part in many a raid on the Sound Indians, and possibly in some of the few attacks made on the early settlers.—Seattle Times.

Manuscript of the Book of Mormon.

In a bank vault in the little town of Richmond, Mo., says the Chicago Tribune, is kept the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, in the handwriting of Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdry and the others to whom Smith dictated what he claimed was a translation from the golden plates found by him buried in the hill, Cumorah, near Palmyra, N. Y. After the book was printed the manuscript was turned over to David Whitmer, who took it to Independence, Mo., and later to Richmond, Mo., where he died in 1888. Before his death, the leader of the Mormon church made many efforts to get possession of the manuscript, at one time offering $100,000 in cash for it. Whitmer was a poor man, but he refused the offer, because he feared an attempt would be made to incorporate into the book by forgery a defense of polygamy. George W. Sweich of Richmond is the present possessor of the manuscript, and within the last two weeks representatives of the Mormon church from Utah have renewed negotiations for the purchase of the manuscript of the book.

How to Avoid Colds During Winter.

"This idea that many people have, that winter is an unhealthful season, is all wrong. Winter is just as healthful as summer, if people will take care of themselves. If you want to go through the winter without a cold, observe these few simple rules:

"Don't overheat your house, and don't stop all ventilation. Sleep in a cool room, but keep warmly covered. Always take off your outdoor wraps when you come in the house, and always put them on when you go out. And, lastly, just as long as there is snow on the ground, don't go out without your rubbers. This last rule is the most important of all, for two colds out of three come from wet feet."—The Independent.

We Parted in Silence.

We parted in silence, we parted by night,
On the banks of that lonely river;
Where the fragrant limes their boughs unite,
We met—and we parted forever!
The night-bird sung, and the stars above
Told many a touching story,
Of friends long passed to the kingdom of love,
Where the soul wears its mantle of glory.

We parted in silence—our cheeks were wet
With the tears that were past controlling;
We vowed we would never, no, never forget,
And those vows at the time were consoling;
But those lips that echoed the sounds of mine
Are as cold as that lonely river;
And that eye, that beautiful spirit's shrine,
Has shrouded its fires forever.
And now on the midnight sky I look,
And my heart grows full of weeping;
Each star is to me a sealed book,
Some tale of that loved one keeping.
We parted in silence—we parted in tears,
On the banks of that lonely river;
But the odor and bloom of those bygone years
Shall hang o'er its waters forever.
—Mrs. Crawford.

Vulgarity of the Exclusive.

In a very candid and plain-spoken article on "The Graciousness of High Breeding" in the November Woman's Home Companion, Ella Morris Kretschmar makes these pertinent remarks: "Men and women who by contact or travel know the world's best society need not be told that simplicity and graciousness are the invariable characteristics of the highest breeding. If this fact could only reach the minds of that class of people who talk of 'exclusiveness,' of 'four hundreds,' of the 'vulgarity of trade,' of not knowing any one outside of 'our set,' what a grateful social change would be wrought. That cold stare of the would-be elect is but the expression of an under-bred, poverty-stricken soul. What is 'exclusiveness?' It is that human policy which shuts individuals off from the enjoyment of their kind, by which society gains, since an inharmonious element is thereby removed. How pathetic is the isolation of the determined aristocrat, especially in a small town where, other stirring interest lacking, human relations mean so much. Could even a Divine microscope detect the difference between the naked souls of a banker's and a grocer's wife? How infinitely stupid it is to draw lines in small pieces instead of honestly enjoying all there is to enjoy. If one has had superior advantages, is there no obligation to give pleasure, to make sunshine in others' lives because of that good fortune? The time is at hand when intelligence will be too widespread, progress to a more vigorous plane of thinking too real to admit of men and women looking askance at one another to make mental invoice of social, financial or other probabilities? Will it not soon penetrate the dullest brain that wealth, rank or leadership are powerless as shields against unhappiness, or as props to mental, moral or physical deficiencies; that there is positively no honest or sensible basis for judging individuals excepting individuality?"

Use of Hand Glass.

Every girl's dressing table boasts a hand glass, of course—that is, it does if she's a real girly-girl, with a fair amount of vanity, but one sometimes wonders when she looks at the maids on the streets to what use these implements are put, for the toilet of the average feminine shows so often a total lack of symmetry that one cannot believe she spends much time using the reflectors. At least she doesn't let her gaze wander below her head, it would seem, for, while her coiffure is all right usually, the collar below is often a sight. One young woman in a car the other evening had on a black velvet stock which was fastened with white pins in the frankest manner imaginable, each little head showing conspicuously on the black, while at the other end a row of bristling points warned "hands off." The remainder of the costume was pretty and even elegant, but this one feature spoiled it all. Another maid who walked down the street recently had her skirt on slightly awry—only slightly, mind you—but it was enough to throw the line which commenced at the curly knot at the back of the head was continued down the plait of the shirt waist and should have finished straight down the skirt, completely out of its course, and so it was quite sufficient to ruin the effect of what was otherwise an attractive toilet. She didn't use a hand glass, that's certain. Examples of this sort multiply when one looks for them, says a writer in the Chicago Chronicle. There's the woman who pins her bodice with tiny safety pins, those fastenings forming a zig-zag line that it makes one dizzy to look at, and she whose sash is maudlin looking, it's so crooked, and a host of others, the great majority of the transgressions occurring in the neck arrangements. The hand glass is a real necessity, not so much from motives of vanity as from a desire to appear decently arrayed, and in order, and it's a pity, therefore, it isn't used oftener and with more thoroughness.

Tight Lacing.

The evil effects of tight lacing will be very soon realized by the woman who has tender feet. The undue compression adds tenfold to the pain, and very often the ankles are so swollen and inflamed by the end of the day that they are utterly shapeless. In cases of this kind the remedy is not far to seek. The following treatment should be persevered in; it will give immediate relief, and, when practicable, should be resorted to twice a day: Soak the feet well in tepid water, to which a little ammonia has been added, and as the water gets cold pour in more hot to keep up the temperature. After drying the feet rub them gently and thoroughly with a mixture made thus: Add one ounce of the best linseed oil to the same quantity of lime water, shake the bottle in which the ingredients are until a mixture about the thickness of cream is produced, then pour in half a dram of spirits of camphor, shake again, and it is ready for use.

Those Long Rooms.

Long, narrow rooms are more difficult to furnish artistically than are rooms of better proportions. In furnishing such rooms the endeavor must constantly be made not to interfere with the little width they already have, but to cut off the length in effect. Where two long rooms open into each other, screens and portieres may be effectively employed to give them a shorter and therefore broader appearance. A sofa stood across a corner or a table so placed, especially with a screen behind it, helps to break up the length of an apartment. Another way to break up length is to form a group of objects, such as a table with books on it and a jardiniere, with a couple of chairs close to it, as if inviting guests to sit there; this group should stand three-quarters of the length of the room from its front or rear and a little to one side, to break the length of the wall line. Another way to make a room look less long and narrow is to place a large rug over the carpet floor and a lesser rug of another color effect just beyond it, placing a table on the smaller one.

A New Pillow.

Have you heard of pillows stuffed with paper? Well, that is just what is being done, and from a hygienic point of view they are declared without an equal. These paper pillows are in great demand for hospital use, and are declared by the doctors who have used them superior to any other kind of pillow stuffing. The latest manner of preparing the paper for stuffing is to cut it into narrow strips about three inches long and a quarter of an inch wide. Then with a dull-bladed knife each strip should be curled, as are ostrich feathers. A case stuffed with paper in this way makes a light, serviceable pillow, and has proved more satisfactory than one stuffed in any other fashion.

Coffee by the French Method.

Divide the quantity of coffee to be roasted into two parts, put the first half into a coffee roaster, which must be kept constantly turning until the coffee becomes a pale brown, like dried almonds, and is reduced one-eighth in weight. Set that aside, and put in and roast the other half until it is the color of fine brown chestnuts and has lost one-fifth of its weight. Mix the two parts together and grind them at once in a coffee mill, both roasting and grinding should be done as the coffee is wanted. To two ounces of ground coffee put four cups of cold water, then draw off this infusion and put it aside, then put the wet coffee into the bigger with three cups of boiling water, let it stand a minute or two, draw off this infusion also, adding it to that made with cold water. This makes six cups of coffee, which should be heated quickly in a silver coffee pot, but take care it does not boil, lest the aroma should be lost. Then serve it in cups after dinner. Never make this coffee in a tin vessel; always use either silver or the brown fire-proof china.—Columbus Dispatch.

A Good Cosmetic

Authorities all agree that cold water is the best of cosmetics, and those who wish for good complexions can employ no better means to that end than the daily bath. Beside this, nothing so conduces to health and comfort in warm weather, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. Taken just before going to bed, it frequently insures a good night's rest; taken on rising in the morning, it gives a feeling of freshness for the labors of the day. Sea salt, cologne, etc., add much to the luxury of the bath, and one need but read of the ancient Romans to learn how far luxuriousness may go in this direction.

A Mistaken Idea.

Do not soak clothes over night. It sets the dirt when the water gets cold. Look over the soiled pieces and rub soap on the worst spots, and put them in the tub with hot water to cover. Let them soak until the black stockings and woolens are washed and out of the way. Then wash the white clothes next and then the colored ones.

"Yes; what do you want?"

"Must see him myself. Most perticklar."

"Must see him immejit. Most perticklar."

The boy's importunity got him in.

"Well, boy, what do you want?" said the merchant, anxiously.

"D'yer want an office boy?"

"You impudent rascal! No; we've got one."

"No, you ain't, sir; he's just bin run over in Cheapside."

The Whole Truth!

There's nothing so bad for a cough as coughing.
There's nothing so good for a cough as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

The 25 cent size is just right for an ordinary, everyday cold. The 50 cent size is better for the cough of bronchitis, croup, grip, and hoarseness. The dollar size is the best for chronic coughs, as in consumption, chronic bronchitis, asthma, etc.

HE DID HIS OWN MARRYING.

A South Carolina Magistrate Who Read His Own Ceremony.

John G. Thomason, seventy-two years of age, of Summerville, S. C., is the first and only man who has officiated at his own marriage service. Mr. Thomason recognizes that he has done something remarkable and worthy of notice.

He was not fenzed in the slightest. He said he wanted a wife, and he immediately began to try to get one. He found several girls whom he thought he could love, and finally he centered all his affections upon Miss Emily Alice Lamb, who resided about seven miles from Summerville. She agreed to marry him, and arrangements for the marriage were immediately begun.

Mr. Thomason said that the magistrates and ministers had frequently expressed their sympathies for him and their willingness to officiate when he got a girl who was willing to marry him, but when he finally produced her they all flunked and would not perform the ceremony. Mr. Thomason was not again to be outdone, so he decided to officiate at his own marriage. He secured a number of witnesses for the appointed time, which was on the afternoon of April 23. Miss Lamb was present, and when the time came he said he called her and told her to stand to his left. He then read the service, and at the proper time took her hand. He made his own responses, and at the conclusion he told the gathering that he and Miss Lamb were now Mr. and Mrs. Thomason, and they were congratulated.

Mr. Thomason said that he had been marrying people for twenty-five years, and he saw no reason why he should not marry himself. He said that he had discarded his former wife, who deserted him last summer, and he lives happily with his present wife, who, by the way, is the third woman to whom he has been married. Mrs. Thomason is thirty-two years of age.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A MAGNIFICENT WOMAN

Holds Up Pe-ru-na as the Ideal Remedy for Female Catarrh.

Mrs. Clara Makemer.

Mrs. Clara Makemer, housekeeper for the Florence Crittenden Anchorage Mission, of Chicago, writes the following letter from 302 Chestnut street, Chicago:

"Peruna is the best tonic I have ever known for general debility, a sure cure for liver complaint, and a never failing adjuster in cases of dyspepsia.

"I have used it in cases of female irregularities and weak nerves common to the sex, and have found it most satisfactory."

From early girlhood to the end of the child-bearing period few women are entirely free from some degree of catarrh of the pelvic organs.

With Peruna the thousand and one ailments dependent upon catarrh of the pelvic organs can be wholly averted.

DAIRY AND POULTRY.

INTERESTING CHAPTERS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Poultry Notes.

Those unreasonable hens! Here some philanthropist has been advising to allow at least one foot per hen on the perch, and the hens wont even use the space when it is given them. There seems to be an unaccountable desire on the part of hens to crowd together in a bunch and to roost closely. A hen seldom takes more than eight inches of space and no amount of carpenter work can make her take more. It would be far more reasonable if the hen would only decide to occupy the middle of her allotted foot on the roost. She would not catch lice from the other fowls at least. But our experience is that we cannot get the hens over to our way of thinking. We do not say give each hen at least a foot of room on the roost, but give them all they will occupy. More is useless.

A poultry writer asserts that it has not been proved that lime, ground bone and oyster shells help at all in the formation of egg shells, public opinion to the contrary notwithstanding. He may be right, but there are some things that seem to indicate that the material thus obtained is utilized in some way to make egg shells. Hens will run eagerly after an egg shell unless they have all the bone meal or ground bone they want. They will even attack whole eggs to satisfy their cravings in that direction. If none of the material goes into their system it is hard to see why they should have such cravings for the material mentioned. The cravings of fowls for some form of lime is paralleled in the animal world by the cravings of even wild animals for salt. As is well known salt licks in various parts of the country were so called from the custom of wild animals coming long distances to lick the salt that oozed out with the water. We know that salt is needed in the animal economy and it is to be presumed that forms of lime are used in the special functions of the fowl—that of laying an egg with a shell composed of lime. We are not satisfied that the fowl does not utilize this mineral matter. There are powerful acids at work in the bodies of the fowls that are doubtless able to make even mineral matter serviceable. At least we advise to keep right on feeding lime in some form.

Some of our agricultural colleges and experiment stations make the mistake of putting inexperienced men at the head of departments, believing that they are smart fellows and will soon learn enough from others to make up for lack of experience. When this is done the college or experiment station authorities should caution the young men not to talk too much, and especially not to run into print. It is almost as bad when boards of trade take up subjects they want elucidated and hire inexperienced men to do the work. A report on the Poultry Industry of Colorado, issued by the Denver Chamber of Commerce is an example of this. The man that did the work on it certainly knows nothing practically about the raising of poultry and production of eggs. He devotes a good deal of space to showing what a fortune may be made from a 300-hen outfit. It is easy. He figures it out that the hens will lay easily 144 eggs each, or 43,200 eggs. He says that half are sure to hatch and this makes 21,600 chicks, 70 per cent of which are sure to grow to maturity even when cared for only by the old hen. He thus gets 10,800 chicks to the age of 14 weeks and sells them all at 40 cents apiece, and has an income of $4,320. All expenses he puts at $1,500, and leaves a net profit of $2,820, or $9.40 cents for each of the 300 hens. But this is not all. He suggests that by planting fruit trees in the hen yards the entire cost of care and feed could be made from the fruit, leaving the entire receipts for the poultry, clear profit, or $14.40 per hen. The writer, B. L. Winchel, then asserts that this is not a "fancy sketch."

Dairy Notes.

The recent decision of a Michigan court that the Michigan law against the coloring of oleomargarine is void shows how hard it is to frame a law that cannot be picked to pieces by lawyers and judges determined to prove it void. The court ruled against the validity of the act on the ground that the heading to the act was not worded so that anyone reading the headline would see that it referred to the coloring of oleomargarine. The title to the act reads: "An act to prohibit and prevent Adulteration, Fraud and Deception in the Manufacture and Sale of Articles of Food and Drink." The court held that the coloring of oleomargarine, though forbidden by the law, could not come under the words Adulteration, Fraud or Deception, since all people know that the oleomargarine is colored.

Some men make light of the efforts to stamp out tuberculosis. They claim that the whole situation is overdrawn, and that there is really little tuberculosis among our cattle—not enough to make it worth while to worry over it. Yet the slaughter of tuberculous cattle is constantly going on. We believe that if some of these sceptics will visit the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, when the slaughter of tuberculous cattle is proceeding they will never again oppose measures tended to eradicate the disease, and will henceforth have confidence in the tuberculin test. Among the cows slaughtered last week were twelve from a dairy herd that supplies milk to Downer's Grove, Ill. The owner had thirty-five cows and desired the tuberculin test applied to them, and in fact paid a private veterinarian to do the work. Out of the thirty-five cows tested twelve reacted. On slaughter three of these were found to be only slightly affected, and their flesh was passed for food. The other nine were so badly diseased that they were sent to the rendering tank to be made into fertilizer. The lungs of these animals were yellow with tubercles, and in some cases the entire lungs were masses of pus. One of the cows was so badly diseased that when the lung was cut into the pus spurted a foot and the stench was very offensive. To use a common term, this cow was "rotten inside." Yet the milk from them had been used for a long time by the people of Downer's Grove. Fortunately the udders of all these cows showed no signs of being tuberculous, and this would tend to reduce the danger. Yet to say there is no danger in the milk from such cows is going too far. The query naturally arises in ones mind: If this one herd had over 34 per cent of tuberculous cows in it, how about the other herds that are supplying milk to Chicago? Is it likely that this was the only herd affected by the dreadful disease? The answer can be given on general principles. There must be numerous herds supplying milk to Chicago where tuberculosis has obtained a firm foothold. More than that, an examination of these herds would show many affected udders.

Care of Colts' Feet.

Now that horses are again in great demand and the supply is deficient the breeder can afford to look well to the feet of his young stock. Our horses have naturally sound feet if proper care is taken of them but carelessness imposes upon the horse numerous preventable troubles. Where horses are bred upon rocky lands or where gravel abounds in the soil the hoofs are pretty well worn down to normal proportions without man's interference; but upon our rich corn-producing soil there is no chance of such wear taking place, the result being that the feet grow out of all proportion. The toe as a rule grows too long and as a result the weight of the colt comes upon the frogs, or the walls at the quarters become too high and the frog not coming into ground-bearing shrinks up, retracts into the sole of the foot and contracted heels are the result. Frequently, too, we find that where the feet are not kept properly trimmed and rasped level, cracks appear and sometimes extend to the coronet. Again, when a colt is sold and gets into the blacksmith's hands, if he has never worn shoes upon the hind feet, we find them grown out of all proportion and the smith does at once in most heroic style the work of trimming which should have been a gradual process. He then nails on a high-heeled shoe and the poor horse unaccustomed to hard roads goes out to work feeling terribly uncomfortable with his iron appendages and promptly begins to interfere and soon has his hind ankles swollen, sore and wounded, a condition it is always very difficult to remedy, owing to the mutilation that has taken place at the hands of the blacksmith.

The horse breeder will do well to examine the feet of his colts frequently and promptly set matters right by the intelligent use of the rasp and in doing so will discover all cases of "thrush" which, if not cured at once, may lead to chronic trouble and certainly abnormalities in horn growth. The feet of all farm animals require similar attention for it would prevent such troubles as "foul" in the feet of cattle, foot rot in sheep and lameness in hogs.

Dairy vs. Creamery.

Under above head the Northwestern Creamery Journal says: Many buttermakers, at the creamery and home dairy, fail to receive a remunerative price for their product, the reason being that they do not supply the market requirements as to quality. As the art of buttermaking advances—and it has made wonderful progress during the past two years—the public taste for something better has kept pace with it, until today butter that will grade first and extra is in demand. Poor butter cannot be disposed of excepting in limited quantities, and at a low market price. It is an undeniable fact that although buttermaking at the creamery has reached a high degree of perfection, buttermaking at the dairy has shown little or no improvement. Every farmer who owns a herd of dairy cows would find it much more profitable to take his milk to the creamery than to attempt to manufacture a high grade of dairy butter without the machinery, utensils and facilities for so doing. Too many attempt the latter, and as a result, the common barrel of the country store finds most of the so-called butter. In time, through the lessons taught by individual dairymen, there may be an awakening along this line, but the progress is discouragingly slow and there are few dairies whose product can equal that manufactured at a first-class creamery. These few find that dairying pays good dividends. If you are desirous of financial benefit through the keeping of a dairy herd, make up your mind to do one of two things.

Profitable Chickens.—James Rankin of South Easton, Mass., reports an unusually good season for spring chickens. He says, in Reliable Poultry Journal, "We hatched about 12,000 birds and got them out some six weeks earlier than any of the other growers, and we had, as it were, the control of the market during that time. We commenced shipping March 1 and marketed nearly 1,000 birds at 35c per lb., and as these birds dressed 11 lbs. per pair and represented a feed value of but 25c each, there was some profit connected with it." (That is pretty good. Each bird sold for $1.92½ and represented a feed cost of but 25 cents. That left an apparent profit of $1.62½ or $1.626 for the first 1,000 birds. Of course, there were other expenses, but probably none that would greatly reduce the profits.—Ed. F. R.)

A Jealous Cow.—A strange piece of spite on the part of a cow is reported from Slough, says the British Dairy Farmer. The animal belonged to Mr. Johnson, a farmer, and on a valuable horse being driven into the farmyard the cow charged at it, and inflicted such injuries that it died. A strange feature in the case is that after the cow had brought the horse down she appeared to relent, and while the suffering animal lay in the stable under treatment she was constantly at the door, and resented any attempt to drive her off. Mr. Johnson attributes the cow's strange conduct to jealousy, as the horse was often patted and made much of, and the cow was a young one which he had reared himself.

SHAFTER'S CHICKEN.

A LIVING REMINDER OF A DEED OF MERCY.

Story of the Days of Starvation in Cuba—A Little Boy Who Was Picked Up by Brooke When Almost Dead Showed His Gratitude.

In Gen. Shafter's quarters at San Francisco is a fine, glossy, "black Spanish" pullet which, if it had the power of speech, could tell a thrilling and pathetic story. Early in July, 1898, when the American army in Cuba was supplying food to the starving reconcentrados in El Caney, a terrific storm wrought such havoc to the roads that it became impossible to convey further supplies to the town. Gen. Shafter therefore issued an order that all who were able might walk to his camp, six miles away, and draw rations. The order set in motion one of the saddest processions that ever followed in the wake of war. Ragged, hungry, weak, emaciated, a line of specters daily wound its awful length through swamp and mud and jungle toward the blessed food. Lieut. Brooke and an interpreter were returning to camp from El Caney one day, when they saw a little band of the reconcentrados ahead of them. Behind the men and women lagged a six-year-old boy. He was evidently sick and weary unto death, but still he tottered persistently on. At length, his last ounce of strength gone, he fell, and lay there in the mud, unable to rise. His father and mother glanced back at him stolidly, and went on. Their own strength would be hardly sufficient to carry them to camp, and suffering had dulled their sensibilities. If he could not keep up he must die where he fell. Lieut. Brooke dropped from his horse, picked the little fellow up, and galloped into camp with him. There he fed him till he could eat no more, wrapped him in warm blankets, and left him to the long dreamless sleep of exhausted childhood. An old Cuban woman washed his little cotton shirt and trousers, and after a few days' rest, he was sent back to El Caney with a generous supply of provisions. Two days later the little fellow, still weak and pale, again appeared in camp. Going straight to Lieut. Brooke, he took a small chicken from inside his little shirt, and with tears in his eyes, presented it. It was the only thing he could give him, he said, to show his appreciation of the senor's kindness. He had walked all the way from El Caney through the deep mud, and after he had made his humble present, he walked back. Lieut. Brooke took the chicken to Gen. Shafter and told its story. The general tethered it to his tent-pole. When he entered Santiago, he took the bird with him. There her nightly roost was a gilded chandelier in the governor's palace. When the army moved out to camp again, the chicken went, too. Later, she journeyed to Montauk Point, thence to Governor's Island, and now she struts and scratches and cackles contentedly in San Francisco, a living reminder of a deed of mercy, a pathetic acknowledgment, and the gratitude with which at least one little reconcentrado will always recall los Americanos.

VELOCITY OF FALLING.

In a Vacuum All Fall Alike, Not So in the Atmosphere.

The old-time query as to which of the two, a pound of lead or a pound of feathers, dropped from the same height at the same time, would first reach the ground, seems ever new. Someone propounded it to the wise man of the Scientific American recently, using instead of lead and feathers an ounce and a ton of iron. And this is how the wise man responded: "This matter was put to the test of experiment by Galileo at the Leaning Tower of Pisa in the seventeenth century, with two balls of lead, weighing one and ten pounds respectively. The followers of Aristotle had taught for centuries that the balls would fall in proportion to their weights, the heavier one falling the faster. Galileo pointed out the fact that the lighter one would reach the ground first, because the air would resist the fall of that of the larger one more than it would that of the smaller. He had previously demonstrated the law of falling bodies that the velocity under the action of gravity is independent of the mass of the body. Experiment confirmed his position. The small ball reached the earth first. In a vacuum all bodies fall with the same velocity through any distance. As a practical statement, it may be taken as true that small dense bodies will conform to the theoretical laws, falling any distance less than 200 feet, in the atmosphere. But with an ounce and a ton there would be a perceptible difference. The ounce ball would fall the faster. Facts like this are nowadays demonstrated by even elementary students in almost every class in physics in the country."

Ought Art Students Study Anatomy?

Nature says the youthful impressionist is apt to sneer at anatomy, and that his contempt for the subject is revealed in the construction of the forms he represents. The more serious-minded artists, however, who are laying the foundation on which a true impressionism can alone be based, find anatomical studies a help in their work. Most books on artistic anatomy, however, are "boiled down" from the technical treatises supplied to medical students by anatomists who have no knowledge of art. Nature recommends the treatise of Dr. Paul Richer, who is both artist and anatomist, and whose method is to "represent the figure in action in different poses, and submit a chart explanatory of the various structures on which the surface contours depend."

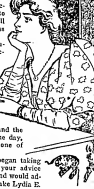
THERE are women everywhere who suffer almost constantly because they cannot bring themselves to tell all about their ills to a physician.

Such women can surely explain their symptoms and their suffering by letter to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for the confidence reposed in her has never been violated. Over a million women have been helped by her advice and medicine.

A WOMAN HELPS WOMEN

Mrs. Pinkham in attending to her vast correspondence is assisted by women only. If you are ill, don't delay. Her reply will cost you nothing and it will be a practical help as it was to Miss Ella E. Brenner, East Rochester, Ohio, who says: "I shrunk from the ordeal of examination by our physician, yet I knew I must have treatment. My troubles were backache, nervous tired feeling, painful menstruation and leucorrhœa. I am so grateful to you now that I am willing to have my name published to help other girls to take their troubles to you. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound used as you wrote me has made me entirely well and very happy. I shall bless you as long as I live."



Mrs. Pinkham receives thousands of such letters from grateful women.

Miss Nellie Russell, of 138 Grace St., Pittsburg, Pa., in a letter to Mrs. Pinkham says: "From childhood I suffered from kidney trouble and as I grew older my troubles increased having intense pain running from my waist to my womb and the menses were very painful. One day, seeing your advertisement in one of our papers, I wrote to you.

"When your reply came I began taking your Compound and followed your advice and am now in perfect health, and would advise any lady rich or poor to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I can praise above all other remedies. It is a wonderful help to women."

History continues to repeat itself in spite of the fact that two-thirds of history isn't worth repeating.

I may say that I hope the next time this defendant steals money from a cash drawer, it will be from the drawer of one of the members of this jury. You are dismissed." In the work train were a number of flat cars, upon which were a hundred or more workmen, principally Italians. The men on the handcar jumped off, leaving the car on the track.

When the rapidly backing work train struck the obstruction the force of the collision threw four of the flat cars from the track and killed five of the workmen and injured many more. Five of the injured are expected to die.

The injured Italians immediately became wildly excited, and, drawing knives, made threatening demonstrations toward the crew of the work train, who, being greatly outnumbered and fearing that their lives would be taken by the excited mob, pulled away from the scene of the accident. Five doctors were hurried to the scene of the accident. A relief train sent from here has returned, bringing five injured. One, a fifteen-year-old boy, died en route.

O'DEA KICKS A VICTORY.

Wisconsin Wins From Minnesota by a Score of 19 to 0.

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 21. — The Gophers are rather inclined to pat themselves on the back on the strength of the showing they made against the Badgers in the game Saturday afternoon, losing only 19 to 0. They expected a large score would be piled up against them, and went into the struggle with the grim determination to keep it as low as possible. Wisconsin did not have its strongest team in the field, but it had a good one, and it was needed. The first half ended with the score 0 to 0, and then the visitors, finding Minnesota was playing a stronger game than they had figured on, made a change in two positions and relied on O'Dea to punt the game to victory. TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

Awful Work of an Insane Man in Chicago.

Chicago, Nov. 16.— Carrying out a plot he had apparently planned with deliberation, Cornelius Corcoran yesterday shot four of his children, killing two of them, and then ended his own life. The tragedy occurred at his home, 5461 Dearborn street. The police are convinced that the man was insane.

Corcoran had lived with his several children in a flat building at 5461 Dearborn street for a month past. To all outward appearances he was kind and considerate to his children. For some days he had plotted for the death of his children and he nearly accomplished his purpose Tuesday night. Hearing the children cough he arose and in the dark administered laudanum to five of them, Clifford, John, Timothy, Margaret and Lizzie. Clifford and Timothy were removed to the Mercy hospital, where Timothy died the next day. Corcoran exhibited such profound grief over the affair that the police and coroner thought the giving of laudanum was a mistake. Balked in his purpose to end the lives of the young ones Corcoran, it is thought, made deliberate plans for his act of yesterday. At 10 o'clock the grandmother of the children, Mrs. Margaret Wrenn, accompanied by her niece, Mrs. Mamie Corbett, called at the Corcoran home. When they rang the bell Corcoran called out from the inside: "Who's there?"

"Its Mamie Mamie and your mother," replied Mrs. Corbett.

Corcoran thrust his head out of the door, disclosing the fact that he was attired in his night gown, and closed the door again, saying: "Wait just a minute, Mamie."

The two women opened the door and stepped into the hallway. Just then three shots were hear, followed by a succession of screams. In the panic the two women darted out the doorway and ran down the street, screaming at the top of their voices.

"Its murder, its murder," shouted Mrs. Corbett frantically, and hurrying to an adjacent drug store word was sent to the Fiftieth street and Hyde Park station.

An appalling sight greeted the eyes of Lieut. Clancy, Sergt. Ryan and other officers when they entered the Corcoran flat. In the first bed room, just off the parlor, was the body of Margaret lying in a mass of blood at the head of the bed, while at the foot lay John, unconscious and breathing heavily. In the room to the rear Corcoran's dead body was found on the floor, while that of the baby, Lizzie, reclined on a pillow. A revolver lay near Corcoran's right hand. Five of the chambers were empty. Every one of the wounds with the exception of Kate's was inflicted behind the ear. She was shot in the left temple. The police removed Kate and John to the Mercy hospital, and later the baby, Lizzie, who was still breathing, was taken there. John died within a half-hour after his arrival at the hospital, and no hopes are held out for the recovery of the others.

A threshing separator belonging to Armstrong Brothers of Easton was blown apart when in operation on the farm of Mr. Heise, north of town. About $200 damage was done. It is thought to have been the result of dynamite placed in one of the stacks. No one was injured, although several men were around the machine at the time.

A farm house two miles south of Stewartville, occupied by August Rabine and family, was burned with all the contents, and a small child narrowly escaped being cremated. The fire started from a lamp being tipped over while the mother was out doors. The mother and children were both badly burned, but will probably recover.

C. A. Pfeifer, who travels for the Minnesota Elevator company, says that not more than half of the threshing was finished in Western Minnesota and Northern Iowa, and that heavy deliveries of grain to farmers are just about to commence. The delay in the threshing was due to the scarcity of labor, which made many farmers prefer to do their plowing first. The prevailing low prices for grain was also partly responsible for the delay in marketing the cereals.

The residence of Geo. W. Vollmer at Stillwater proved a veritable gold mine, $15,000 having been found in out-of-the-way places, where no one dreamed money could be secreted. A potato bin was examined, and under the potatoes and onions a box was discovered containing $10,000 in gold. Other sums were found, bringing the amount up to $15,000, and it is believed there is more, the old man being known to possess much wealth. A public meeting was held at Fergus Falls, in which the committee of ministers which is to locate the new Swedish Lutheran college was present and outlined its plans. Citizens of Fergus Falls offered $3,000 and a free site, conditioned upon the expenditure of $10,000 on buildings at the outset. The committee took the offer under advisement, but will not make its final decision until Alexandria has been given an opportunity to modify the conditions which were attached to the offer made by that city. WAR IN COLOMBIA.

Kingston, Jam., Nov. 21.—The British steamer Atra, from Colon, Friday, reports a widespread revolutionary movement in Colombia and a grave outlook. Her cargo she landed with difficulty and she was unable to secure an outward cargo owing to the suspension of inland transportation. The government is recruiting an army by impressment under martial law and is levying forced loans in Colon, Barranquilla, Panama and Carthegena, where the Colombians have been taxed $25 each at 12 per cent interest, with the alternative of $500 fine or enlistment. Foreigners are excluded, but commercial houses in Colon and Panama are subjected to a force loan of $100,000 at 12 per cent under a guarantee of railway subvention. Business is practically suspended, famine prices prevail and excitement is at fever heat. Foreigners are regarded with suspicion, the government claiming that the strength and popularity of the revolution are due to foreign support.

The passengers of the Atra declare they experienced difficulty and in some instances indignity, when securing passports on leaving the country. There was fighting last Sunday on the Magdalen river. The government claim to have won a victory. The revolution is retarded by want of arms, but, according to advices brought by the Atra, is daily gaining strength.

SLEW WOMEN AND BABIES.

If the Charge Against This St. Louis Woman Is True.

St. Louis, Nov. 21. — The Post Dispatch says that Mrs. Henrietta Bamberger, a midwife, has been arrested on a bench warrant sworn out on information lodged before the grand jury which charges that she has knowledge of the murder of at least three women and the destruction of scores of babies. The testimony, the Post-Dispatch says, was furnished by four women, all of whom have been in the employ of Mrs. Bamberger as nurses. An almost incredible story, it is alleged, was related by the nurses. The tales deal with the disposition of bodies in a revolting manner. Five indictments were found against the woman by the grand jury. One charges murder in the first degree, three manslaughter in the first degree and one in the second degree.

Only a slight difference exists in the appearance of the sides, and in this case the wrong side was used, and the ball entered the thigh, resulting in death.

HOPEFUL OUTLOOK

FOR THE REFORM NATIONAL POLITICAL SITUATION.

Gathered From the Democratic Executive Committee Meeting — National Committeeman O'Brien's Conservative View—Maturing Plans—Good News of Senator Jones' Health — Mr. Bryan May Rest Till He Comes Here in January—Farm, Stock and Home on Current Questions — McKinley-Cleveland Financiering All the Same — State Political Points—The Week's Roundup of News and Comment.

Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, Nov. 27, 1899.

All reports from the Chicago meeting of the executive committee of the National Democratic committee, agree that the outlook is encouraging for an efficient national campaign and consequent success next year.

Mr. T. D. O'Brien, the Minnesota member, gave an interesting summary for our daily press. Senator James K. Jones, national chairman, was present at the meeting, and his friends throughout the country rejoice at his recovery. The business in the senator's absence abroad has been in able hands, those of Hon. J. G. Johnson of Kansas and Hon. Sam B. Cook of Missouri. These have proceeded on lines agreeable to Senator Jones and the party's other great advisers, and encouraging results are being accomplished, both as to raising means and as to actual work in the field. All factious bave, Mr. O'Brien says, disappeared, which is specially pleasing, considering the friction that has existed in Illinois. The party will enter on the campaign of 1900 very much better equipped than it was in 1896. Mr. O'Brien emphasized the attention turned towards the Central, Western and Northwestern states, and that Minnesota is looked to for important results next year. In other words the electoral vote of Minnesota is to be called for for our great leader, W. J. Bryan. There is every reason to feel that our friends will not be disappointed.

From Mr. O'Brien, and from State Chairman Rosing, who accompanied him, every encouragement was received as to the outlook. Our forces of 1896 are practically as solid as they were when lined up at the polls. We have powerful allies for the newer issues, on which the attitude of Democracy will be nothing uncertain. There is nowhere a serious suggestion of any candidate but Bryan, and in all parts of the country, the South especially, the party is unified or fast unifying. This also includes New York, with the assurance that it will be in the Democratic column.

Senator Jones, national chairman, has been in Arkansas since his return from abroad, until the committee meeting, and has now gone to Washington for the session and to give attention to the committee work accumulated there. The principal work, for the time being at least, will be in the hands of Messrs. Johnson and Cook at Chicago.

Speaking of allies, the American Anti-Imperialist league, is progressing well at the Chicago national headquarters, which is in charge of Chairman Edwin Burrett Smith and Secretary M. J. Mize.

From Hon. R. W. Boddinghouse, secretary of the Anti-Trust National League, Chicago, we learn that preliminaries for the coming conference are progressing favorably. The call will soon issue, and is signed by several hundred prominent men of all parts of the country. Minnesota will be represented on the call by several prominent citizens. "Toledo" Jones, Anti-Hanna McKisson of Cleveland, Attorney General Monett of Ohio, Senator Mason of Illinois, Judge Black of Pennsylvania, President Droppers of South Dakota University are among the signers of the call.

"See the goppite papers make another "break" in placing Mr. Bryan in the senate in the place of the dying Republican senator of Nebraska. The senate is too small, at present, for W. J. Bryan. He's too busy. Just now he is resting in the far Southwest, where he may remain until he comes here in January."

Farm, Stock and Home, Minneapolis, certainly one of the greatest agricultural journals in the whole country, and which ever has in mind the true interests of its agricultural patrons, devotes more than usual space in its current issue to topics of state and national importance, the more important since Farm, Stock and Home has upwards of 50,000 circulation, all in the Northwest, and a large part of it in Minnesota. Mr. Owen, the editor, goes into details, from the records, as to the increase in inspection fees, made so much of by the goppite press. In addition to the well known explanation that it has been necessary in order to meet the increased demands, including increases of expenditures made by Republican legislation, another is found in the increase of the size of cars, the capacity of which has risen from 400 to 600 bushels to 800 to 1,400. For these the 25 cent rate is not more that 12½ cents would have been formerly.

Among most toothsome and effective matter in the same issue, Mr. Owen has skinned "Sound Money" to a finish, on the purchasing power of gold. It is not "stability" that gold standard advocates really want, but "purchasing power." Questions to ask the farmers, says Mr. Owen, are:

Why this insistence upon money with large purchasing power? Why should we object to a dollar that would require only a bushel of wheat to buy, and why is there a class of men who regret to see such a dollar, and will do everything in their power to prevent its coming?

In which connection Farm, Stock and Home has an article showing how cattle, for instance, in both price and quantity, considering population, have gone down. If this is not by the reason of the purchasing power of money, what is it due to?

"Sound Money" fears an avalanche of gold, yet denies the quantitative theory of money. If increasing the quantity of money does not make other things higher priced as measured in money, then where comes in the fear of the gold standardites?

But of prices not trust controlled, what? All farm products tending lower and lower, except in favored localities. Cattle, hogs, grain. Labor and salaried positions, except trust, controlled and specially favored, and except what labor can accomplish by organization and never ending watchfulness. Wheat, our great staple, now ruling at the 50 cent notch again, as last year at this time, in the sections of the state where it is the great product.

The reason why the McKinley purchase of bonds will not help anybody but the speculators, is because only they and the banks have government bonds to sell. If others have them they keep them and live on the meagre interest, because there is no line of business in which they can invest the money at profit, because they are not in the trust and combine deals, and can't get in.

McKinley's treasurer is paying 113 and 111 for bonds that were sold for par, and the $25,000,000 to be bought will amount to $28,000,000. Here is $3,000,000 out, and besides that nearly $1,000,000 has been paid in interest on the same bonds since issued.

The McKinley financiering is in some respects worse than Cleveland's, though both are on the same principle of benefitting the speculators on the country's bone and sinew. Cleveland sold the $62,000,000 to his syndicate at 104. If McKinley should now buy back some of these, and he will when Wall street makes the demand, he will, in the light of his recent purchase, have to pay over 130 for them.

Instead of the whole iniquitous bond business, give us money issued by the government, with postal savings banks for the convenience, safety and protection of the people.

Sworn affidavits appear that one Colonel Metcalf, in the McKinley army of conquest in the Philippines, shot an unarmed and supplicating Filipino prisoner. But that does not disturb the slumbers of the occupant of the White House. The murders of prisoners on their knees are fit companion pieces for the burning of villages, looting of churches and assault of defenseless women. They usually attend armies of conquest, like the Hessians, hirelings of the Revolutionary War.

Congressmen are wending their way to Washington, and before another week rolls 'round Hanna's annual message will be before a palpitating world.

Hon. A. W. Thomas of Chicago, so pleasantly representing the Democratic national committee here recently, has been assigned to the same work for New England, with headquarters at Boston, and writes most hopefully of the situation there.

Our best advices from Kentucky are that Goebel will be the next governor, and that the attempt to overawe voters by Republican bayonets, as was done in Louisville, will not be successful. That the legislature will re-elect Blackburn is without question.

Times are so brisk that an army of men are after the places that Census Superintendent Merriam will dispense for the G. O. P. There are 20 to 30 applicants for every place there is.

John R. McLean may have accomplished more in the defeat of the Cox gang in Hamilton county, than his election as governor without winning Hamilton would gain. Several G. O. P. concerns in and about Cincinnati are out of business, such as Watchem & Skinnem, advisers; Robb & Steels, campaigners, and Holdem & Guttem, financiers. 'Tis very well.

Senator Knute Nelson thinks he fixed matters up in fine shape in Hennepin. Our advices are that Knute deceives himself. There's a boom on for Elevator King Peavy.

And, further of Hennepin politics, it is stated as a fact that William Hennery Eustis, who also ran, will demand a vindication and run again. His explanation of why he was beaten before is said to be pathetic.

Meanwhile how dare the bosses disregard the Hanna orders to get to work for United States Attorney Evans?

Insurance Commissioner O'Shaughnessey, in his handling of the Insurance Union, has dealt an anti-trust blow that will be appreciated everywhere. This, with the co-operation of Attorney General Douglass, is really the first effective blow dealt the trust in this state. Do it some more.

The state dairy department finds in its experience that the greatest use of oleomargarine and rotten "butter" is in the lumber camps of the Upper Mississippi. This shows the regard the lumber barons have for our producers. Commissioner Bowler thus stated the matter to The Pioneer Press the other day:

"Nothing else but oleomargarine is served in the lumber camps. The lumbermen asked for a duty on lumber and got it. They have raised the price under the protection of the tariff. But when it comes to buying butter from the farmers, they haven't any time to think of that."

It is everywhere the same under Republican policy. Protection for all the special interests. Ruinous competition for the producing classes. G. S. C.

Enemy Was Compelled to Retire After Desperate Fighting—Result Was Not Known at the Time of Telegraphing—Believed That the Losses Will Be Heavy — British Forces Worked Splendidly—Naval Brigade Suffers Heavy Sacrifices —News From Natal More Hopeful.

London, Nov. 28. — Yesterday afternoon the war office posted the following dispatch, dated Cape Town, 12:20 p. m., from Gen. Forestier-Walker:

"Lord Methuen reports that he moved yesterday (Saturday) at 3:30 a. m., with the Ninth brigade, the mounted corps, the naval brigade and two batteries, the guards following with the baggage. Near Gras Pan (about ten miles north of Belmont, on the railway line to Kimberley) 2,500 Boers with six guns and two machine guns, opposed him. The action began at 6 a. m. Our battery fired shrapnel very accurately till the heights seemed clear. Then the naval brigade and the infantry advanced to the assault. The fighting was desperate until 10 a. m., when the heights were carried. The Boers retreated on the line where the Ninth Lancers were placed to intercept them. The result was not known at the time of telegraphing. The artillery took immediate advantage of the enemy's retirement. Early in the action 500 Boers attacked our rear guard. The brigade met this and also protected the flanks. The naval brigade acted with the greatest gallantry and suffered heavily, but no particulars are yet known. The enemy showed the greatest stubbornness and must have suffered greatly. Twenty were burned. It is known that 31 were killed and 48 wounded. More than 50 horses were found dead in one place. One battery fired 500 rounds. Our force must halt one day at Gras Pan to rest and replenish ammunition. The force worked splendidly and is prepared to overcome many difficulties. The naval brigade, the Royal marines, the light infantry and the First battalion of the North Lancashire regiment especially distinguished themselves.

"Regarding Tuesday's fight, 81 Boer killed are accounted for; 64 wagons were burned, a large quantity of powder, 50,000 rounds of ammunition and 750 shells were blown up. Commandant Albrecht (chief of the Orange Free State artillery) commanded the Boer artillery. Gen. Rolewy was in chief command."

Creates Great Suspense.

London, Nov. 28.—No further news respecting Lord Methuen's advance has been received and the absence of official details regarding his losses creates the greatest suspense, especially since the publication of the heavy sacrifices endured by the naval brigade. No alarm, however, is felt as to his position, despite the evidence that the Boers intend to contest every foot of the way. It was known that in the absence of sufficient cavalry he would be compelled to advance slowly, and he has a preference for night or early dawn attacks, which events seem to have been justified, the Boers being decidedly averse to darkness for their operations. The fact that in the Gras Pan action one British battery fired 500 rounds proves the desperate nature of the fight, and there is no doubt the casualties were great. It now develops that no guns were captured in the Belmont engagement. Meanwhile the news from Natal is distinctly more hopeful from the British point of view. The details are rather vague, but it seems certain that the Boers are retiring, that railway communication is being reopened and that British relief forces are joining hands.

Buller at Pietermaritzburg.

London, Nov. 28.—Special dispatches from Pietermaritzburg announce the arrival of Gen. Buller there. He met with a splendid reception. Railway communication between Estcourt and Mooi River has been restored by Lord Dundonald's force, and the Mooi River column entered Estcourt yesterday (Sunday), the Estcourt column immediately starting the advance toward Colenso.

England Declares State of War Exists.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 28. — The Russian newspapers announce that the British charge d'affaires has informed the Russian government that Great Britain has been in a state of war with the Dutch republics since Oct. 12. The Svedt, commenting upon this, says: "England, in giving this notice, withdraws her declaration that she is not carrying on war, but is merely subjugating rebels."

The Novoe Vremya, which attributes far-reaching importance to the British notification, says: "The powers are now in a position to send not only Red Cross agents, but military agents as well, and they may judge this a fitting time to intervene, especially as the Afrikanders are going more and more to the Boer side."

ON ITS LAST LEGS.

Not Much Left of Aguinaldo's Revolution.

Washington, Nov. 28.—Secretary of the Navy Long received a cablegram from Admiral Watson informing him that the entire province of Zamboanga, island of Mindanao, had surrendered unconditionally to Commander Very, of the Castine. The surrender was made on the 18th inst. Admiral Watson's dispatch follows:

"Nov. 18 entire province of Zamboanga surrendered to Very, unconditionally. Delivery of all guns promised. Numerous local chiefs declared loyalty.

—"Watson."

The information contained in Admiral Watson's dispatch was received by the president and his advisers with unconcealed satisfaction. The surrender of the province of Zamboanga is regarded as the beginning of the end of the revolution in the island of Mindanao, and, it is believed, will be a hard blow to those who are still endeavoring to maintain the insurrection in the island of Luzon.

Advices from Admiral Watson indicate that the southern half of the island, which comprises the province of Zamboanga, has yielded to the American forces and acceded to the authority of the United States.

Revolution Crumbling.

Manila, Nov. 28. — The news which the steamship Brutus brings from Dagupan indicates that the so-called Filipino republic is crumbling like a house of cards. Aguinaldo is deserted or being abandoned by the politicians, and the army which a fortnight ago was intrenched at Tarlac and exercised a de facto government over nine-tenths of the people of Luzon, is fugitive in the mountains, with small hope of reestablishing the machine. The army is scattered in the hills on both sides of the railroad, and widely separated detachments are within the cordon which Generals Lawton and Wheaton have cemented.

Buencamino, the ruling spirit of the cabinet, is a prisoner in Manila, and the small fry are tumbling over one another to get to Manila. Three provincial governors have arrived in Manila to request Gen. Otis to install them in their old offices under the new regime. Dr. Luna, a brother of Gen. Luna, and a prominent insurrectionist, has arrived here, and many others are applying to Gen. Otis for permission to return to Manila after months of separation from civilization. Aguinaldo began his retreat with 2,000 men under Gen. Gregorio del Pilar. That force was probably reduced to its present proportions by desertions. The last definite news as to Aguinaldo's whereabouts is that he passed through Trinidad, east of Ariaguny, toward Bayombong, escorted by 200 men.

Aggy's Last Council.

Manila, Nov. 28.—The last Filipino council of war was held by the retreating leaders at Bayamban on Nov. 13, in the house now occupied by Gen. MacArthur. It was attended by Aguinaldo, Pio del Pilar, Garcia, Alejandrino and some members of the so called cabinet. Information has reached Gen. MacArthur from several sources to the effect that the council recognized the futility of attempting further resistance to the Americans with united forces and agreed that the Filipino troops should scatter and should hereafter follow guerilla methods.

Reports of ambuscades and skirmishes come from every section of the country along the railways. Military activity continues in every section.

Aguinaldo's Child Taken.

Washington, Nov. 28.—The adjutant general has received the following from Gen. Otis:

"Vessel from Lingayen gulf with dispatches from Wheaton on 23d inst., brought in Buencamino, insurgent secretary of state, captured 21st inst. He was with Aguinaldo and party left Tarlac night of 13th to be escorted by 2,000 troops north from Bayambang and Dagupan. These troops Wheaton struck at San Jacinto, and Young eastward. Aguinaldo, with part of family, escaped north with 200 men, passing between Young and Wheaton. Young still in pursuit last accounts, and has been rationed at San Fernando. Aguinaldo's mother and oldest child, with Buencamino, separated from the rest of party; mother lost in woods, and child, four years old, with Wheaton's troops; $2,000 gold, belonging to mother, captured and now in Manila treasury. Heavy storm in Lingayen has prevented loading of troops there for the north. MacArthur has captured insurgent director of railroad, who endeavored to destroy railroad to Dagupan; also Capt. Lawrence, Englishman, who served in Aguinaldo's artillery. Our troops have liberated some 300 Spanish prisoners recently."

ON A SECRET MISSION.

U. S. S. Ranger Fitting Out for a Long Voyage.

Chicago, Nov. 28.—A special to the Record from San Francisco says: The United States ship Ranger, now lying at Mare Island, has quietly fitted out for some long voyage, and rumors are current that she is bent on some secret mission. The officers of the warship refuse to discuss the nature of the voyage. Several six-inch guns are being placed in position on the vessel. The only thing the officers will admit is that the Ranger has been ordered to Panama and will sail in December.

Black Eye for Prerogatives.

Madrid, Nov. 28.—Senor Selrela, having refused to present to the chamber of deputies the reports of the proceedings against the officers who surrendered Santiago de Cuba and Manila to the Americans, Senor Morenco moved that such refusal was an infringement on the prerogatives of parliament. All the leaders of the minority supported Senor Morenco, but the motion was defeated by a vote of 125 to 85.

THE LAST SAD RITES.

Remains of Vice President Hobart Laid to Rest.

Paterson, N. J., Nov. 28.—With the impressive religious services of the Presbyterian church and with the dignity due to his high office, all that is mortal of the vice president, Garret A. Hobart, was committed to the earth Saturday afternoon.

President McKinley, Secretary of State Hay, Chief Justice Fuller, Former Vice President Levi P. Morton, Former Secretary of War Alger, Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock, supreme court judges, members of the senate, members of the house and the vice president's personal friends filled the Church of the Redeemer, and with moistened eyes and bowed head testified silently and eloquently to his worth as a statesman, friend and neighbor. The exercises were simple in form, as had been requested by Mr. Hobart. There were never gathered in New Jersey, and seldom in any part of the United States, so many mourners of eminence.

Business houses were closed and many private residences had flags at half-mast, besides other mourning emblems. In anticipation of the arrival of the presidential party and the military escort crowds gathered around the Broadway depot. The military lined the streets between Carroll Hall and the Church of the Redeemer. The church floral decorations were magnificent.

The service at the house was brief and simple. It was held in the library, which was banked with flowers sent by friends. Mrs. Hobart, with her son, Garret A. Hobart, Jr., sat near the head of the casket, while near her were grouped the president and his cabinet, judges of the supreme court, the honorary pallbearers and the immediate friends of the family and the family servants. The Rev. David D. Magie offered the prayer and read a passage of Scripture. The president, cabinet and supreme court judges and others present took a look at the face of the dead. The casket was then closed and carried to the hearse by members of the senate police. There were thirty-two pallbearers, eight representing the United States senate, eight representing the house of representatives, eight personal pallbearers selected by Mr. Hobart two months before his death, and eight senate police, who carried the casket.

The funeral services at the church were opened by the Rev. Dr. Charles S. Shaw, who read a portion of the nineteenth Psalm. This was followed by a selection from Job, xiv., verses 1, 2 and 7 to 12, and concluded by a reading of the fifteenth chapter of Corinthians I. After a prayer sixty male voices filled the church with the beautiful melody of "Nearer, my God, to Thee." The sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Magie.

After the sermon the cortege wended its way to Cedar Lawn cemetery, where the body was placed in the receiving vault.

To those familiar with the enormous salaries paid to the judges of the higher English courts it may come as something of a surprise to learn that the president in chief of the French Cour de Cassation gets only about $6,000 a year. In no country save the United States do judicial salaries reach in amount to even a third of those paid in Great Britain. The heavy rise in judicial salaries in England began about the middle of the last century, based on the assumption that the payment should be in ratio with the earnings of barristers from whom judges were selected.

According to the annual crop report of the Omaha Bee, compiled from reports of special correspondents in every county in the state of Nebraska, "the corn crop of 1899 exceeds the record of the best previous year by 14,217,240 bushels. Previous to 1899 the greatest corn crop was two years ago. The figures show that the crop of 1899 reaches the enormous figure of 244,125,093 bushels. The average yield per acre is 34.5 bushels, and the quality of the crop is excellent except in very limited portions of the state, where hot weather in August damaged it somewhat. The crop is not only the largest, but taken as a whole is of as good quality as any ever raised in the state."

Don't let us be too much alarmed by the statistics of the organization of corporations and "trusts" under the laws of Maine, New Jersey, Delaware and other states which are competing with each other for the fees that pay the expenses of state governments. In many cases—in four out of five cases at least—the record might read something like this: "The Air Monopoly company; capital one hundred million dollars; nothing paid in; never heard of again after the organization papers were filed." But all the same that hundred millions would swell the statistics of trusts, and many people would become really alarmed lest the atmosphere should be made the subject of a trust.

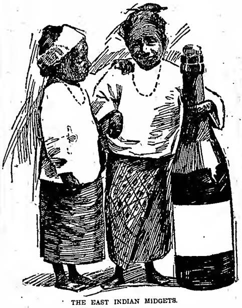
The most memorable hour in the first days on shore of Admiral Dewey, when man's highest relations are taken into account, was not that in which the right hand of welcome was given him by the president in behalf of the American people. It was a quiet hour in a Washington church, when, at the admiral's request, the minister thanked Almighty God for the commander's safe return from sea. The recognition of divine guidance and protection was an example of loyalty to the Ruler whose service is perfect freedom and whose rewards are imperishable.

On the back of all this comes the usual information that a $200,000,000 trust has been formed to corner every article connected with the construction of the new machines.

THE SMALLEST MARRIED COUPLE

Tiny East Indians Who Are the Sensation of the Hour in Berlin.

Smaun and Fatma, two tiny East Indians, are the sensation of the hour in one of the leading music halls of Berlin. They are undoubtedly the smallest married couple in the world. Smaun is the taller of the two, standing almost twenty inches in his sandaled feet. Fatma, his better half, is shorter by about an inch and a half. They were born of peasant parents in a village of central India, and were brought to Germany by a theatrical manager, who has been traveling in the orient in search of novelties for the vaudeville stage.



THE EAST INDIAN MIDGETS.

Smaun has developed, under the guidance of his manager, into a gymnast of no ordinary caliber, and is particularly clever in performances on the trapeze and with the so-called Roman rings. Fatma is very light upon her feet, and has made a hit in native Indian dances. What a diminutive couple they are is well shown by comparing their height with that of a champagne bottle of the quart size. When the latter is placed upright by the side of Smaun the top of the cork is on a level with the middle of his cheek bone, while at the same time it is almost even with the crown of Fatma's head.

Both dwarfs were born in 1879, and in neighboring villages. At birth Smaun weighed about twenty-three ounces, Fatma almost the same. Fatma was barely seven inches in height when born, Smaun probably an inch or so taller. After exhibiting through the fall and winter in German and Austrian cities these little wonders from the far east are to visit Paris, where they will be star attractions while the exposition lasts; a year hence they expect to be in America.

Tiny as Fatma is, she is not the smallest person of whom we have knowledge, although she is believed to be the most diminutive one now living. Toward the end of the last century a child was born to a peasant couple in northern Germany which weighed less than nineteen ounces at birth, and was at that time under seven inches in height. An ordinary wooden shoe was its cradle; it lived beyond its teens, and grew to the tremendous height of seventeen and one-half inches.

HAD HIS REVENGE.

How a Draughtsman Got Even with a Former Employer.

Chicago News: A young Chicago man who came to this country several years ago unable to speak English was somewhat dependent upon his own countrymen at first. He was a fair draughtsman, and as he had made the acquaintance of an architect of his own nationality he asked for work in that line and was accepted as an assistant for his supposed merit, without any stipulated salary. The first job he did was a perspective in color of a country home. He did it in three days and saw his employer receive $50 therefor. At the end of the first week he asked the architect how much he thought his services were worth. "I think I will pay you $4 per week," was the response. "Four dollars a week," said the surprised artist. "I'll work on the street first." "Work on the street then. You are not competent to earn more in this country. You can't even speak the language. You'll starve to death." So the young stranger worked on the street awhile, saved money, got to drawing pictures again, made the acquaintance of a young lady with some money also, married her and decided to build a house for himself. He already owned a fine lot on the south side. One of the first things he did was to hunt up his old employer. As he walked into the office of the architect that pleasant-mannered person shouted: "Hello! Come back for your job, have you?" "I have come to consult you about planning my new residence. That is, I desire to find out whether you are competent to design a gentleman's house." The architect was surprised, but was anxious to get business, so he changed his manner, and became quite obsequious. He was permitted to go ahead with the plans. After a week or so the young man ascended to the office again and found a complete set of plans waiting for him. Turning them over contemptuously, and tossing them down, he snorted: "Is that the best you can do? I can't use those plans. You don't seem to be competent to build an American gentleman's house." The tables were completely turned. The architect at last said: "Well, you have got even with me at last. But you ought at least to pay me something for my work on these plans." "All right, sir," was the cold-blooded response, "just take it out of that $50 you received for that perspective drawing." And that was all he ever received in payment.

AN UNLUCKY PET.

What Came of Having a Big Lizard on Board.

While coasting in South African waters, says Robert Cochrane, in "Strange Pets on Shipboard," I had a monitor lizard as a pet, confined in a box. Fully five feet long from tip to tail, he swelled and tapered in the most perfect lines of beauty. Smooth, though scaly, and inky black, tartaned all over with transverse rows of bright yellow spots, with eyes that glittered like fire and teeth like quartz, with his forked tongue continually flashing out from his bright red mouth, he had a wild, weird loveliness that was most uncanny. Mephistopheles, as the captain not inaptly called him, knew me and took his cockroaches from my hand, although perfectly frantic when any one else went near him. If a piece of wood, however hard, were dropped into his cage, it was instantly torn in pieces. One day the steward, pale with fear, entered the ward-room and reported, "The lizard escaped, sir, and yaffling (rending) the men." I rushed on deck. The animal had torn his cage into splinters and declared war against all hands. Making for the fore hatchway, he had seized a man by the jacket skirts. The man got out of the garment and fled faster than any British sailor ought to have done. On the lower deck Mephistopheles chased the cook from the coppers and the carpenter from his bench. A circle of Kroomen were sitting mending a foresail; the lizard suddenly appeared among them. The men unanimously threw up their toes, individually turned somersaults backward, and sought the four winds of heaven. These routed, my pet turned his attention to Peeple. Peeple was a little Arab slave lass. She was squatting by a calabash, eating rice. Mephistopheles seized her cummerbund; it was her only garment. But Peeple wriggled clear and ran on deck. On the cummerbund the lizard spent his fury, and the rest of his life; for, not knowing what might happen next, I sent for a fowling-piece, and the plucky fellow succumbed to the force of circumstances and a pipeful of buckshot.—Youth's Companion.

THEORY MADE PRACTICAL.

Energetic Agent No Longer Dared to Handle a Certain Book.

"I'm through," said the book agent wearily. "I've notified the house that they may no longer expect me to risk my life handling their goods. For the last thirty days I have been touring the state with a universal compendium of knowledge, containing first aids for the wounded, treatment for snake bites, how to bring a drowned man to and a thousand and one other things that every man should know, bound in calf and sold at a price within the reach of all. I traveled on my wheel, and that enabled me not only to work the small towns, but the surrounding country as well. One day I chanced to call upon an old farmer. I tried to get him interested in the great work that I was handling, but without success until I showed him the chapter on drowning; then I saw that I had him. There was a small lake near where the boys went in swimming, and the old man lived in fear that some one would get drowned. Well, when I showed him how fully the book treated the subject I made a sale. It was a hot day, so I accepted an invitation from the old man's sons to go in swimming with them. I was hardly in the water when I was seized with a cramp. I shipped a good deal of water, but I managed to reach the shore without much trouble, although I was greatly exhausted. While I was gasping for breath the old man came running up with the book that I had sold him. Finding the chapter on drowning, he read the directions to his sons and told them to go ahead. Before I knew what was going to happen I was seized by two of his husky sons and hung up by the heels and pounded on the back until all the breath I had was knocked out of me. Then I was rolled over a barrel and pounded again; then a bellows was jammed down my throat and I was pumped so full of wind that I thought I would burst. They tried every fool idea that was in the book, and it was only owing to a sound constitution that I lived through it. I'm through! I can't afford to take the chances that are in the business."—Detroit Free Press.

Mrs. Creighton's Apt Story.

At the mass-meeting of women at the great church congress in London Mrs. Creighton, in the course of an excellent speech, said that one of the great faults of the day was to allow children to have their own way too much, says the London Standard. The speaker pointed out that it was frequently laziness that made a mother give in; "yet," added Mrs. Creighton, "if we cannot save our children from temptation we can at least make them strong against it," and pointed her moral by adorning it with a tale. "I remember," she said, "hearing of a lady who was giving a large dinner party and went downstairs to see how the table looked just before the dinner hour. The room was not properly lighted, and she stood in the gloom. Suddenly she heard a pair of pattering feet coming downstairs and a small child in a nightgown came in. It climbed up a chair and took down the topmost peach and departed. The watcher stood wondering what to do, when she heard the steps again. The little one had returned and, placing the peach back in its place, departed once more, remarking: 'Sold again, old devil!'"

DAY IN THE VATICAN GARDENS

A Souvenir Which the Girl Has Had Framed.

During the stay of the Olympia in the Mediterranean a couple of St. Louis girls happened to be in Rome. In their party was also a pretty Ohio girl, and the three young Americans were quite the rage with the Dewey men who came to the Holy City, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Quite as popular with them was the kind priest of the Olympia, who, as one of the girls expressed it, was "as much up for fun" as any of the gallant and handsome officers whom they met. One day the young ladies and their escorts went to inspect the gardens of the Vatican. The holy father is very fond of pink geraniums and there is in the garden an immense parterre of every known variety of his favorite flower. Naturally the girls coveted just one tiny flower of the many thousands, but everywhere they turned there stood the tall Roman guard, who would, no doubt, have taken pleasure to thrust them into the catacombs, or wherever they thrust those guilty of the crime of stealing in the Eternal City. "If I could only have one of them," said the Ohio girl, but the two St. Louis girls grew cold at the suggestion and implored her to keep still. "There is your shoe untied again!" exclaimed Father Reaney, who was walking with the Buckeye, and then in a low aside, "Can't you take a hint?" She could not only take a hint, but the implied dare as well, and she quickly stooped to the level of her pretty foot, which she first placed as close to the geraniums as possible. "What shall I do with it?" she asked, in an agonized stage whisper, while the other girls and their escorts began an enthusiastic conversation about Jefferson barracks. "Let me assist you," said the priest; and he also stooped and the little sprig of geranium was instantly concealed under the edge of his coat. The flower is now artistically framed, but the girls don't think any more of it than of the passes signed "George Dewey," which the sailors and the priest gave them as souvenirs of that day in the Vatican gardens.

Improving His Golf.

A man who had been arduously practicing golf, and who was making fair progress, was very fond of playing with women—especially in foursomes. One day in starting on a round with a woman he said to his caddie, who happened to be a good player: "Now, caddie, I want to improve my game. If you see me doing anything wrong correct me, and give me any hints you think necessary." The caddie said he would, and after two or three holes had been played (in which the women had not distinguished themselves) he called his employer aside and whispered: "Mr. A., if you want to improve your golf, dinna play wi' wimmen."—London Tit-Bits.

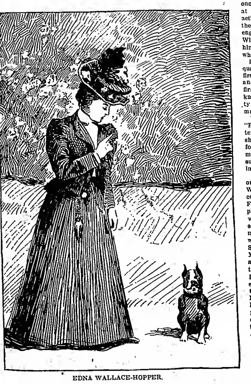
STORY OF AN ACTRESS



EDNA WALLACE-HOPPER.

Edna Wallace-Hopper, wife of the popular comedian, De Wolf Hopper, made her first appearance on the stage with Roland Reed at the Boston Museum in "The Club's Friend," and two weeks later she appeared in the same play at the Star theater, New York. Probably Mrs. Hopper would never have gone on the stage had she not met Mr. Reed in San Francisco at a social party. Impressed with her vivacity, he laughingly offered her a position in his company, which was accepted at once. During the run of the comedy at the Star theater, New York, her acting and naive methods attracted the attention of Chas. Frohman, who engaged her to create the role of Wilbur's Ann in "The Girl I Left Behind Me" at the Empire theater, in which she scored an emphatic hit.

De Wolf Hopper had become acquainted with Miss Wallace along the first of her New York engagement, and it must have been a case of love at first sight, for in a few weeks the well-known comedian had married the pretty soubrette, who, in three years, had made a name for herself.

While Mr. Hopper was presenting "Panjandrum" at the Broadway theater, Della Fox was taken ill, and when she decided to take a vacation in the form of a trip to Europe, the big comedian was at his wits' end to find a substitute to play the part of Paquita in her absence.

Mr. Frohman was appealed to, and on the following Monday evening Miss Wallace, who had in the meantime become Mr. Hopper's wife, played Miss Fox's part. Mrs. Hopper continued to play the role for sixteen weeks, and when Miss Fox deserted the Hopper standard for stellar honors, she remained in the part until "Dr. Syntax" was produced at the Broadway theater. She then created the character of Merope Mallow in that comic opera, and during the comedian's memorable tour last season, which included San Francisco and all the principal western and southern cities, she alternated the character of Merope with that of Mataya, the Crown Prince, in "Wang." Perhaps the best work of Mrs. Hopper's brief professional career is her clever assumption of the role of Estrelda, the hero-worshiping coquette in John Philip Sousa's "El Capitan."

A Costly Carpet.

It is stated that a British firm has just completed a carpet which has cost in manufacture more than £400. It is intended for some fortunate person's drawing room, and has been entirely handwoven by women. Eighteen women, closely sitting at the loom, took five months to make this splendid carpet.

UTAH'S CAVE OF ICE.

ONE OF THE WORLD'S NATURAL CURIOSITIES.

Located in the Northwestern Part of the State and Bids Fair to Become a Rival of Kentucky's Famous Mammoth Cave.

Utah has produced another wonder. This time it is an ice cave. So remarkable is this ice cave that it bids fair to become a rival of that other subterranean marvel, Mammoth cave. According to the San Francisco Chronicle it is located in northwestern Utah, near Lake Baldy, one of the highest peaks of the Wahsatch range. The cave has been explored a distance of 1,000 feet from its mouth, but there exploration has been stopped by a log jam that has closed the opening into the next underground chamber. The mouth of the cave is twenty feet wide and forty feet high. A few feet from the entrance is a monstrous icicle or ice column eight feet in diameter. It reaches from the floor to the ceiling, a distance of seventy-five feet. The column has been formed by the dripping of the water overhead. It is a clear sapphire-like blue. Passing this great guarding column, the explorer finds a dozen small pools. Some of them are covered with a coat of ice two inches thick, of a solidity to charm a skater. Others are of warm almost hot air. The pools are fed by small streams, some hot, some cold, that ooze from crannies in the wall. All about stand pillars of ice little smaller than the giant guarding the entrance. There are perhaps fifty of these. Stalactites of ice are pendent from the ceiling. The most curious feature of the cave is that a dozen currents of air, varying in temperature from Arctic cold to Sahara heat, play about in it, and make the visitor fancy he is having an attack of ague. Sometimes a fierce flood from Drush creek drives a mass of floating logs through the entrance of the cave, and across its thousand feet of pools of varying temperature to the mouth of the second of the series of caves, effectually barricading it. There is no warning of the wonders beneath until you come to the edge of a precipice in Mount Baldy's rocky environs. Looking over the sixty-foot precipice you see a big dark hole at the left and beneath you. As though nature would guard this wonderful cave from sight of man she has thrown a great wall of lime rock across the entrance. Mormon settlers had heard of this cave of ice from vagrant Indians, but it remained for two snub-nosed, red-haired, freckled urchins of 10 and 12 years to find it while "herdin' cows."

A PRACTICAL TEST.

It Upset Some of the Ideas One Man Was Bent on Propagating.

This citizen of Detroit has a good position with a railroad company. What happened him at home the other evening will explain some things that it would take long to relate. "I don't care what you call it," he said earnestly to his wife. "It may be Christian science, faith cure, magnetism, hypnotism or pure imagination. But it does the business, and that's all I care to know." "What makes you remain baldheaded, then?" she asked, irreverently. "Don't get funny, now. I'm talking about actual pain or sickness, not about creating something like teeth, hair or flesh that you've lost. When I thought I had that bad attack of malaria, I just made up my mind that it was a delusion and that was the end of it. The day that picture dropped down on me I could have sworn at first that my head was broken, but I just said to myself that it wasn't, and it wasn't. Now you have the earache. Let me try, and make yourself just as receptive as you can. That's right, hold my hand. You have no pain; you are thinking of better things." But there ended the experiment. He let out a screech like a panther, grabbed one of his slippered feet in both his hands and went hopping about the room, loudly using the most shocking language. His portly wife had rocked on his toes. Had she been tactful, she would have soothed and petted him, but she mockingly told him he had no pain. He vociferously told her to go to blazes and other remote places. No telling what domestic tragedy was averted by the coming of company, but he submitted to soothing applications, and the next day he carefully replenished the family medicine chest.—Detroit Free Press.

ODD ENGINEERING.

Water, Taken from the Pacific, Sent to Atlantic Ocean.

It is a remarkable fact that water which flows naturally into the Gulf of California and thence into the Pacific ocean has been virtually lifted across the backbone of the Rocky mountains, and now, after being used for irrigation, finds its way into the Gulf of Mexico. A number of small streams on the other side of Long's peak, which flow into Grand lake and thence into the Colorado river, have been diverted by a ditch that finds its way through 10,000 feet high into the headwaters of the Poudre. Some 400 cubic feet per second has thus been diverted from the Pacific to the Atlantic slope, where the water is used for irrigating additional farms in Larimer county. It is not strictly correct to say that this water has been lifted across the range. But a feat of sinuous engineering has diverted it, which amounts to the same thing.

Birthplace of the Cable.

The old house formerly occupied by Cyrus W. Field, in East Twenty-third street, New York, is now being torn down to make room for a more pretentious structure. It was in this house that Mr. Field lived when he first broached the idea of building a cable between Europe and America. He still made the old house his home when, after twelve years of disappointment and struggle, the great dream of his life became an accomplished fact. For some years the building has been used as a boarding-house. Now it is being razed to the ground.

Every ultimate fact is only the first of a new series.

USE OF COCA

In Bolivia and Its Wonderful Tonic Effects Upon Indians.

Sucre (Bolivia) Cor. Chicago Record: The Indians regard the coca with extreme reverence. Von Tschudi, the Austrian scientist, who made a most thorough study of the ancient customs of the Incas, says: "During divine worship the priests chewed coca leaves, and unless they were supplied with them it was believed that the favor of the gods could not be propitiated. It was also deemed necessary that the supplicator for divine grace should approach the priests with an 'acullico' in his mouth. It was believed that any business undertaken without the benediction of coca leaves could not prosper, and to the shrub itself was rendered. During an interval of more than 300 years Christianity has not been able to subdue this deep-rooted idolatry, for everywhere we find traces of belief in the mysterious powers of this plant. The excavators in the mines of Cerro del Pasco throw chewed coca upon the hard veins of metal in the belief that it softens the ore and renders it more easy to work. The Indians even at present time put coca leaves in the mouths of dead persons in order to secure them a favorable reception on their entrance into another world, and when a Peruvian on a journey falls in with a mummy, he, with timid reverence, presents to it some coca leaves as his pious offering." One of the scientific explorers who has been working up in this region told me of his experience with a coca chewer. "A man was employed by me," he said, "in very laborious digging. During the five days and nights he was in my service he never tasted food and took only two hours' sleep each night, but at intervals of two hours and a half or three hours he repeatedly chewed about half an ounce of coca leaves and kept an 'acullico' continually in his mouth. I was constantly beside him, and therefore had the opportunity of closely observing him. The work for which I had engaged him being finished, he accompanied me on a two days' journey across the level ground. Though on foot, he kept the pace of my mule and halted only for the chacar (chewing). On leaving me he declared that he would willingly engage himself again for the same amount of work and that he would go through it without food if I would but allow him a sufficient supply of coca. The village priest assured me that this man was 62 years of age and that he had never known him to be ill in his life."

HEART-HUNGRY WOMEN.

Men Said to Be Splendid Lovers but Heartless Husbands.

Women, perhaps, treasure love in their hearts more than men do. They probably love more deeply, and feel neglect, or fancied neglect, more keenly. There has been a good deal said of the great necessity of "keeping love," but it might be argued that if it has to be preserved or pickled or tied up in a parcel, or looked after like furs in summer and plants in frosty weather, it's not the best kind that there's something artificial about it, and that it doesn't thrive well in the climate it happens to live in. Husbands and wives don't always grow apart by being too reserved. The calamity has been known to come about by the entire absence of reserve and common politeness. Natures differ so. The matter-of-fact woman will drive the sensitive man to the frantic asylum unless the good fairy who gave him his sensitiveness dropped him a lump of common sense at the same time. It is often declared that the man who was a splendid lover proves a neglectful and thoughtless husband. Sometimes he drops into the human habit of understanding the good things of his life directly they are his, sometimes he takes up the natural even tenor of life more quickly than his wife does. Often he is reserved, and sometimes he thinks that the eternal mouthing of the word "love" is silly and sentimental. If he does, it's to be hoped he'll marry a woman who is exactly of his mind. If not there are troubles ahead for them both, and the lion's share will be hers—poor thing! A reticent Scotchman—married for thirty years—knelt beside his wife's deathbed, and with his arms about her, called her "darling" for the first time within the memory of the grown-up son beside him. The young man told me this himself, and told me how strangely the unaccustomed words sounded between them. He said his mother's eyes opened and a smile of half-shy gladness passed over her face, and then she died. Perhaps they needed no tender words along the years. Perhaps they understood each other. But if she had missed them; if she had been heart-hungry, as women often are, what a pity that the sweet old love-word had come so very late.—Montreal Herald.

President Kruger's Father.

The bitter feeling which Paul Kruger cherishes toward the British is certainly not lessened by the memory that his own father was the man who fired the first shot at the English troops at Boomplatz in 1848, and by the further thought that he was one of those who were driven by the English to take part in the great "trek" of 1836. Again, in 1854 when the Boers petitioned the queen to be allowed to remain under the protection of the British flag, the elder Kruger was one of its signers. The answer of the duke of Newcastle, who returned the petition with the remark that it could not be entertained and that England had already extended its rule too far in Africa, has always been remembered by Kruger and his associates as an undying insult.

Fresh French butter seems to be losing its place in the English market, according to a report from Paris. In 1876 the value of all butter exported from France was about $20,000,000. In 1888 the amount had dropped to about $17,000,000, of which about $14,000,000 worth was salted butter. That left about $3,000,000 worth as the value of fresh butter exported. In the year 1898 the entire value of fresh butter exported from France was only about $1,500,000.

The board of health of Rochester, N. Y., has taken up the investigation of milk for bacteria. Perhaps the board understands what it is trying to do, but other people are still waiting for information. They have passed a rule making 100,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter the limit in salable milk. So far as we know the rule does not name the bacteria, but includes all alike. It is presumed that the desirable ferments are objected to as much as those that are undesirable, so far as this rule goes. We do not care to criticise till we know the whole intent of this regulation. But at this distance it seems like a very doubtful expedient. A very dangerous milk might contain only a few thousand bacteria, but they might be of a very harmful sort. Would that kind of milk pass the inspector? On the other hand, it may be possible that a new and valuable idea is being worked out and that we are entering on an era of greater certainty as to the real composition and contents of the product that is sold to us as pure milk.

Reports from the Minnesota State Fair say that the scoring of butter was made especially valuable to the creamery butter-makers this year. After the butter had been judged and prizes awarded the competing butter exhibitors were permitted to go into the exhibit room and rescore the butter for their own information and instruction. Many of them availed themselves of the privilege. It is doubtless true that many of our butter exhibits fail in their purpose for the reason that those that are beaten in the competition have no way of ascertaining by actual comparison of the butters the standard to which each should work. It is barely possible that some expert judges of exhibition butter do not like the idea, as it may expose them to criticism. If a beaten exhibitor does not have a chance to taste all the butters he has little ground on which to impeach the correctness of the judges, but as soon as he is permitted with others to go over the ground it is possible for him to make vigorous objections if he thinks himself aggrieved. In most cases these criticisms are unjust, but in the interest of advancement they should be accepted by the judges.

We wish to commend the good work that is being done by the Illinois Dairy Union. It has been prosecuting the men, or some of them, who have been selling oleomargarine for butter. It finds legal difficulties that it is not easy to surmount. It has now started a movement to have all Illinois butter sold under a trade-mark. Any infringement of the trade-mark will be more easily prosecuted than the mere violation of the oleo laws. The Dairy Union is now furnishing a protected label, which reads as follows:

"Contents of this package guaranteed pure butter. The Illinois Dairy Union, which furnishes this label for use with pure butter only, will cheerfully pay $10 reward for information leading to the detection of any person or firm using it with oleomargarine or adulterated butter. This label is furnished free to all retailers that handle pure butter made from unadulterated milk or cream, no matter from whom purchased, to afford them a convenient method for guaranteeing the purity of such goods, and thus distinguish between pure butter and the enormous quantities of the counterfeit article of a cheap character being fraudulently palmed off as butter. In the interest of honest dealing and the purity of our foods, we earnestly request that you insist upon this guaranty with every purchase of butter. If doubtful of the purity of your butter, write to the undersigned to send you mailable box to return sample in to test free.—Chas. Y. Knight, Secretary, 188 South Water street, Chicago."

On Fattening Turkeys.

From the Farmers' Review:—While this will be too late for use for this Thanksgiving market, the hints given may be used for the Xmas and New Year's market. To begin with our turkeys are not standard bred, but are nice large turkeys of the bronze type. The hens were three years old last spring, the gobbler was a young turkey, decidedly no relation, the eggs all hatched, and the turkeys were healthy from the start and have not been stinted on account of lice, disease or lack of food. They have had free range since they became large enough to fly over a fifteen-inch board.

They were fed bread made of two-thirds corn meal, one-third wheat bran, mixed with milk, salt and soda to taste, added, the whole baked until done; this with milk curds was their feed for the first seven weeks, after that we fed crushed or cracked corn as an evening feed for three or four weeks longer, then all cracked corn for a week or two, then whole corn. It is hard to change the turkey's diet, one must gradually go from one feed to another with them, hence this tapering off. They of course had clean water at all times, milk occasionally, crushed charcoal and grit, but no medicine unless a portion of unleached wood ashes added to their drink could be called medicine. This was put in their drink whenever we noticed one a "little off," and was left to a day or two. Since we've begun feeding whole corn they have had all they would pick up twice per day, before that I should have said, they were never fed quite all they would eat, the idea being to never allow them to lose their appetite which they will do when small on any food we ever tried except milk curds, and of this we never had enough.

We have gobblers now that weigh sixteen pounds and less than six months old. One that we selected as a test case to tell what they were doing with the feed, has gained one pound each week for the last four weeks, and as far as one can judge, he has not gained faster than the others. The last week or ten days before marketing we intend to feed warm corn and meal mash for their breakfast, at least. We think they will increase faster in weight if thus fed, the meal will be mixed crumbly, not soft and mushy. One can feed all the turkeys will pick up, indeed they will go off and leave feed, and in ten minutes go among them and scatter more corn and they will eat as though they had had nothing for quite a while, for a little bit, but soon they will leave. If one had nothing to do but walk among them and scatter corn there is no guessing at what they would gain in a few weeks.

We have never tried confining the turks to fatten them, but do not think it would work. If we ever can, we want to be able to have a five or ten acre plat, preferably meadow, exclusively to fatten our turkeys, and in this plat we would have corn scattered thinly over the ground all the time. This might not prove out well but we would like to give it a trial. Turkeys are lots of bother, they are a trial from the time the hens begin to lay until the young are marketed, but they bring in more money in comparison with the feed consumed than any thing in the poultry line, and turkey raisers are always eager to begin the campaign every spring.

EMMA CLEARWATER.

Making Edam Cheese.

Hollanders have long been known as careful cheese makers, and Edam cheese is a Holland specialty. The northern part of the little country is the seat of the Edam cheese industry and great cleanliness and care is exercised in the making. The cheese is made from fresh cow's milk. As soon as curdled by the rennet, the whey is drawn off and the curd kneaded and pressed into the ball-like molds until quite dry. The ball is then wrapped in a linen cloth and kept for ten days or two weeks until quite solid, when the cloth is removed and the cheese put into salt lye. It is next put into a vessel and washed with whey and scraped to remove the white crust of salt. It is next carried into a cool room and laid on shelves, where it is turned regularly. Ripening Edam cheese takes from two to three months, the round balls assuming their fine yellow or reddish color. Those cheeses intended for export to this country are often more highly colored by vegetable dyes.

Among some of the commission men in Chicago it is believed that the poultry crop of this year is about the same as that of the past year. There is believed to be considerable increase of turkeys, while chickens remain about the same. Ducks and geese are less in numbers. The cold and wet spring is given as the general cause of a not more abundant supply. The supply of turkeys is put at possibly 25 per cent more than last year. The cause for this is doubtless the good prices that have been realized for a few years past for good turkeys. There has been no kind of poultry that has brought the farmer more satisfactory returns. But this condition in former years was brought about by a shortage. Perhaps we may expect to see turkeys moderate in price this season when they really begin to come in. Chickens are not a large crop for the same reason, that is, the moderate prices that have prevailed for some time. The state of the market of past years was the incentive for the change in kind of fowls being prepared for market. The same is true of the shortage in ducks and geese. In fact we may expect to see these changes go on from year to year. The wise course among poultrymen would seem to be to change less and catch the high market oftener.

Diarrhoea in Pigs.—It is an old saying that each litter of pigs must have one spell of diarrhoea just about the time they first begin to eat. The feeder will generally know when the disease is near, as their voidings will be of a dark color and resemble that of sheep. If the sow at that time receives a dose of salts, followed with a teaspoonful of sulphur, for a few days, and if charcoal and ashes are handy, the trouble may be avoided, but if neglected dysentery will follow, which will check growth. Some of them will be quite sure to die, and every litter in the herd is likely to take it. If they do, keep them out of wet pastures and give them a dry bed and a few oats or barley. Two drops of laudanum in a teaspoonful of sweet cream to each pig will help matters.—Dakota Farmer.

Sheep Feed Short in England.—According to the Mark Lane Express the sheep breeders on the English farms have raised but small supply of feed stuffs. The renters have made but little and their landlords are themselves too poor to give assistance to their tenants. Farm labor is so high as to absorb profits. The turnip crop, so important a sheep feed in that country, has been cut short by drouth, pasturage is poor, and in many cases water supply is defective. As a result the farmers, or many of them, will be unable to properly winter their flocks, and the deficiency in feed and water supply, the Express thinks will cause a heavy falling off to the lamb crop.

Shipping Advice.—Don't fail carefully to inspect your shipment before closing the box. Put in the memorandum on your own bill head, or an envelope, showing the count and other data. Keep a duplicate yourself, and thereby save much annoyance and frequently a loss. Don't chase off into a new market with untried people, just because of a possible temporary advantage. Nine times out of ten you will lose. Keep in touch with a good house in several markets, and use judgment to shipping to any of them. Watch the reports and forecasts, and then allow for weather changes.—A Few Hens.

Hogs should be kept in condition for market after they have attained the size desired. Before that time the fattening process may check growth.

MEXICAN THEATERS ARE BETTER THAN OURS

Only One American Singer of Popularity in All the Republic.

The man who crosses the Rio Grande river for the first time is always surprised at the number and magnificence of the theaters he finds in the Mexican republic. Every city of more than 10,000 inhabitants has one, while cities of 26,000 have playhouses that would be a credit to New York, Philadelphia or St. Louis.

Strange to say, however, the most beautiful of Mexico's theaters are not to be found in Mexico City, but in the various state capitals throughout the republic. Perhaps one reason for this is that the theaters of Mexico City are owned by private parties, while those of the state capitals are the property of the several states. Mexico City has but two important theaters, the "Nacional" and the "Principal"—the former generally devoted to opera and the latter to musical farces or "zarzuelas," as they are called in Mexico. These "zarzuelas" are probably the most popular form of stage entertainment in vogue in Mexico. They are generally in one act, and four or five of them constitute an evening's entertainment. One of the queer customs is that admission may be purchased for the entire evening, or for a single "tanda," or act. It's a la carte. You pay for what you get at the rate of 25 cents an act. These little plays are almost always written and acted by Spaniards, and, of course, deal with Spanish life. They are clean enough for a Sunday school to witness, and the music is invariably good. The costumes are picturesque, though not rich, the two costly features of a Spanish actress' wardrobe being her embroidered Manila shawl and her fan, and both of these she uses with the grace possessed by the women of no other race.

The Mexican women are exceedingly fond of opera. Several times a year they have a "season" of from six to eight weeks' duration, during which all the old favorites and some new works are given. "Aida" is very popular, and so are "Carmen" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" and Puccini's "La Boheme," which is almost unknown in this country. Mexico has developed some very good singers of her own, though generally the companies heard there are from Italy. There is a "season" now on in Mexico, the operas being given at Orrin's Circus—a barn of a place wholly unsuited to operatic performances. It is the permanent home of the circus which goes traveling through the country in summer time. The manager of the opera company has floored over the ring—there is still but one ring in Mexico—and this forms the parquet. A circle of boxes is raised about six feet above this and behind the boxes are the balcony and the gallery. You can get a seat at almost any price—50, 60, 70 and 85 cents, with parquet seats at $1.76 and box seats at $2. These prices translated into gold money are not at all unreasonable. In the company now singing at Orrin's is one American, Miss Eleanor Broadfoot, the tall contralto who was at the Century last fall with the international opera company, and who is to join Mr. Grau's forces this year.

Mr. Franklin Fyles in an article in the Ladies' Home Journal says that the largest theater in America is the Boston theater, which can seat 4,000. Instead of "America," Mr. Fyles should have restricted his statement to the United States. The largest theater on this continent is undoubtedly the "Teatro Degollado," at Guadalajara, in the state of Jalisco, Mexico. It has five galleries, where the Boston theater has three, and can seat 4,000 people. I have heard that there is a theater in one of the South American cities larger than this one in Mexico, though Mexicans claim there is not. This Guadalajara theater was begun in 1856—thirty years before the city had a railroad—by the then governor of the state, Don Santos Degollado, and after ten years and a million of dollars had been spent upon it, was opened in 1866, in an unfinished condition. It was completed some years later, and is now very handsomely decorated. Its plan is that of the Metropolitan opera house in New York, the first three balconies being devoted to boxes, and the two above to the gods. This is the plan of all the fine theaters of Mexico.

But while the "Teatro Degollado" is pre-eminent in size, the "Teatro Juarez" at Guanajuata surpasses it and all others that I have ever seen in beauty. It was completed only four years ago after twenty years' labor, and has cost something over $2,000,000. It is constructed of a variegated stone peculiar to Guanajuato—a stone that seems to have all the rainbow's colors, green prevailing. The carved pillars supporting the roof of the portico are magnificent. The roof is ornamented with eight heroic bronzes, and bronze lions guard the entrance. This theater has four balconies, two of them divided into boxes, and there is, in addition, a series of boxes on either side of the auditorium below. The interior decorations are Moorish. The stage is enormous, with splendidly furnished dressing rooms for the actors, and—something we don't have in this country—a "green room." The scenery is all by the best French scenic artists, and the stage furniture is French as well. The theater is owned by the state and is the hobby of the present governor, as it was of his predecessor who projected it.

The "Teatro Calderon" at Zacatecas is probably the most American of the Mexican theaters. It has been completed less than two years, and nearly all of the material used in its furnishings was purchased in the United States. The "Teatro de Doblado" at Leon and the "Teatro de la Paz" at San Luis Potosi are both fine structures, but inferior both in size and furnishings to the "Juarez" and the "Degollado." There has recently been completed at Monterey a theater on the style of that at Zacatecas, the complete equipment of which was purchased in St. Louis. And St. Louis promises to have a hand in the furnishing of the $260,000 theater the state of Chihuahua is erecting at its capital.

Kipling Agreed with Him.

It is related of Rev. George Macdonald, Rudyard Kipling's maternal grandfather, that in the days when he was courting the lady whom he afterward married the father-in-law to be—an aged Methodist with extremely strict notions in regard to the proprieties—was injudicious enough on one occasion to enter the drawing-room without giving any warning of his approach. The consequence was that he found the young lovers occupying a single chair. Deeply shocked by the spectacle the old man solemnly said: "Mr. Macdonald, when I was courting Mrs. Brown she sat on one side of the room and I on the other." Mr. Macdonald's reply was: "That's just what I should have done, sir, if I had been courting Mrs. Brown."

THE ELECTRIC CAT.

A New Instrument of Correction in Use in France and Her Colonies.

Some of the French newspapers have been telling about the new method of whipping men which has just been introduced experimentally into some of the penitentiaries and colonies of France. The instrument bears the pleasing name of "The Electric Cat," and l'Electricien expresses the scientific opinion that it is a great improvement upon the Russian knout and the cat-o'-nine-tails which it says "still unfortunately figure in many penal colonies and in the penitentiaries of so-called civilized states." The method of this new whipping machine is very simple and business-like. The culprit who has been sentenced to undergo the lash is tied to a post in the usual manner. Behind him is a wheel, driven by an electric motor, which goes round and round with a velocity that is unpleasant for the victim. The velocity may be regulated, however, according to the severity of the trouncing to be administered. Attached to one of the spokes is a whip which swings around the circle and the culprit is placed at such an angle with reference to the instrument of flagellation that every time it comes around it nips him squarely on the back. It is claimed for the new invention that it dispenses justice impartially and equally. It has no animus against the prisoner, its blows are given with equal intensity, and it better fulfills the idea of even-handed justice than manual flogging, which is likely to distribute penalties very unevenly.

THE LATEST PRUSSIAN TRIAL.

Officers of the German Army Establish a Regular Gambling Hell.

Berlin is greatly excited over a trial for gambling. It appears that three young men of good family, who had been officers, attracted attention by an expenditure out of all proportion to their means. It was found on inquiry that they had set up a baccarat club which was a regular "hell," frequented by more than 200 persons of their own class. As they made money by their club, and had none to start with, they were suspected of cheating, but this part of the charge has not been proved. What has been proved is that a large number of members of the highest society are accustomed to gamble for large sums—one man lost £2,000 in one night—in company with adventurers and ladies of the demi-monde, to borrow money of the bank, and even of waiters, and to drink in excess. All this is wholly opposed to the tone of the Prussian army, which is severe, and of Prussian society, which abhors wastefulness more than many other vices. It is believed that the socialistic party, which is always denouncing the dissoluteness of the rich, will make great capital out of the trial, and that the emperor will issue an order even sterner than the celebrated one of 1893. He should follow it up with an increase of allowances. A Prussian officer may once have been able to live on £1 2s. 6d. a week, but he certainly cannot now, and the poor noblesse to which most of them belong can spare no allowances.—London Spectator.

Seeking Sunken Treasure.

Soundings and divings are taking place near the Island of Terschelling, in the north of Holland, at the spot where a French warship sunk just 100 years ago. She was loaded with silver and gold to the amount of 40,000,000 francs, or $8,000,000. The captain's log mentions the amount, and as early as 1800 French sailors succeeded in bringing to the surface a box containing 1,500,000 francs' worth of gold and silver ingots. In 1856 and 1860 a private undertaking succeeded in raising another 1,250,000 francs value. The warship sunk in 230 feet of water and divers have great difficulty in working at such a depth. Dynamite is now being used to break up the iron cases.

DODGING THE MANIACS.

Some Experience of the Man Who Is Always in a Hurry.

"If I ever get to congress," said a local politician, "I am going to introduce a bill to authorize the slaying of those blithering idiots who dodge first to one side and then to the other and won't allow you to pass them on the street. Last Saturday afternoon I was hurrying to keep an important engagement and started to cross Canal street at the Henry Clay monument. It was at the very busiest time of the day, and the cars were scooting back and forth in a way that would have rattled old Henry C. himself if he hadn't been safe on a pedestal, but I got over all right until I reached the last track, where I was suddenly confronted by a dodging idiot of the most ferocious type. He grinned with unholy joy as soon as he saw me, and at once began to go through the usual motions—balance to the right, balance to the left—all of which time a trolley car was bearing down on me at the rate of at least 30 miles an hour. At the battle of Gettysburg a mule I was riding balked in front of a smoking shell, and my sensations on both occasions were the same. I heard the motorman yell like mad; and in desperation I bolted squarely into the idiot's waistcoat, carrying us both out of danger. What became of him I don't know. Such folks ought to be killed." "Why, my brother-in-law was telling me of just such an experience of his own the other day, colonel," said one of the group of listeners, "but he adopted a simpler scheme. He met one of the worst kind of dodging maniacs somewhere on the tracks, and after trying vainly to escape he shut his eyes, stood still, and let the confounded chump precipitate himself into his arms. But, of course, you couldn't do that on account of the car." "Has your brother-in-law a heavy red mustache?" asked the colonel, after a pause. "Yes, I suppose you'd call it red—why?" "Oh, nothing," replied the colonel hastily. "I just thought maybe I knew him."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Confinement of Luccheni.

Luccheni, the assassin of the unfortunate empress of Austria, is still in strict solitary confinement—a year after his crime. Ordinary criminals only remain six months in such rigorous imprisonment, but the strictest penalty is meted out to Luccheni. He occupies two cells in the Evecbe prison at Geneva—the ordinary cell for sleeping, and another fitted up as a workshop, where the convict makes cardboard boxes. Twice daily he is allowed half an hour's exercise in a tiny courtyard, but he sees no one except his jailers, the governor of the prison, and the chaplain. He is fed like the other prisoners on soup, bread and vegetables, with a little sugar and wine, and he is allowed plenty of books, novels being sent in by his friends outside. Luccheni has grown stouter and coarser looking since his imprisonment, but he is in capital health, while his conduct is excellent.

DROUGHT IN MAINE.

HAS CAUSED AN UNSIGHTLY BEAST TO APPEAR.

Bangor's "What Is It"—Some Say the Dryness Is Responsible for the Appearance of the So-Called Pickerel Devil.

All Maine has suffered from a drouth this year for which the prohibitory liquor law is in no way responsible. All the rain that has fallen since last spring, if put together in one storm, would not equal one of the heavy falls that usually are experienced in Maine in spring and fall, and, although the summer brought many violent thunderstorms, there was little rain. Now, when the rivers, lakes and wells should be full to the brim, every water course in the state is running remarkably low, the beds of the streams showing bare, like gravelly roads, and the lakes shrunken away from their shoes as though they had leaked through a hole in the center, leaving the pebbly beaches far above water, with wide margins of muddy bottom lands, from which arises a powerful stench, says New York Press.

A remarkable effect of the drouth is seen in the brook which connects Eddington and Holbrook's ponds, a few miles east of Bangor. In ordinary times this brook runs high, and is a noisy little stream, filled with the best and plumpest pickerel, the fattest muskrats and the biggest frogs to be found in all Maine. Now the two ponds have shrunk to half their natural area and the brook is reduced to a sickly rivulet, at best, and in some places is nothing more than a series of disconnected and muddy pools, wherein thousands of big pickerel have been imprisoned helplessly, there to be dipped out by poachers, while at night the muskrats splash and flounder like stranded walruses and the once big frogs wail plaintively on the slimy borders.

A week ago, while tramping along the brook, swearing at the luck, and praying for rain, Uncle Reuben Dix, the hermit fiddler of Peaked mountain, saw something struggling in the mud that attracted his attention. It was not a frog nor yet a muskrat; it was something like a fish, and yet it had legs. If Uncle Reuben had been drinking anything that day or the night before, he would have decided that the stuff wasn't first-class, but none of the Bangor sportsmen had been out that way for some time, and there wasn't even a drink of cider within ten miles, so it was a case of straight seeing, and Uncle Reuben investigated. He got a crooked stick and hauled the thing out of the mud. The creature resented this, and snapped viciously at his captor, who had to dance about lively to keep out of its way.

"Well, I'm dummed!" said Uncle Reuben, "but I didn't think allergaters ever got this fur to the north-ard."

Finally he killed the creature with a stone, and lugged the carcass over to Eddington, where, after being viewed by all the curious, it was sold for fifty cents to George McMunn, a Bangor drummer, who has a fad for collecting curious reptiles, birds, etc., and by him given to his friend, P. H. McNamara of Bangor, who will have it stuffed and placed on exhibition in his place of business. The beast looks something like an alligator and something like a big lizard, and no one in Bangor can name it. It has teeth like a saw and a mouth large enough to hold a loaf of bread, as Joe Jameson, the baker, demonstrated by experiment. Uncle Reuben said it was the pickerel devil, a poisonous reptile, which often has been told of, but seldom if ever seen in Maine. The devil is said to be the direct product of a drouth, and his appearance means that all the pickerel are to die, or have died, for want of water.

Up to the time of the drouth the fishing in Eddington and Holbrook's ponds was excellent. Now there hasn't been as much as a bite in either pond for four weeks. Some say that the pickerel have left the brook and gone to the bottom of the ponds, where they find the water cooler than at the surface, and that they will not bite again till winter. Uncle Dix, however, maintains that all the fish are dead, else the pickerel devil would not have been born.

Hard on the Irish Masters.

The Irish masters of hounds are beginning to feel the pinch of war times as well as others. Some years ago the system of registering horses for government purposes was started and many people laughed at it as a useless scheme, but now it is found to work well. Under it, the owners of horses registered receive a small sum per annum, undertaking to sell each animal at a certain price when called upon to do so. Many of the large tramway, omnibus, and others have numbers of horses so registered, and it appears that masters of hounds have also taken advantage of the scheme, receiving an allowance annually for the hunt horses. The Remount Department of Ireland, of which Prince Francis of Teck is chief, are busy taking up all available registered horses now for South Africa, and the hunt horses of the Ward Stag-hounds, the Meath Hounds, the Tipperary, and other packs have all been requisitioned. It is rather hard on the masters to have to give up the hunt horses just as the season is opening, as it will be very hard to replace them now. The average price fixed on all horses so registered is about £40.

A Remarkable Invention.

From the Atlanta Constitution: The leading author of the settlement sent out the following invitation recently: "Dear Sir: You are respectfully invited to a literary dinner at the old town hall on Tuesday evening next. There will be barbecued cow, sheep and shoat, and 'simmon beer to wash 'em down. Be sure and bring a knife and fork with you, as we are short on them things. There will be a spellin' and a wrestlin' match when we recover from the dinner."

THE LAND OF GRAVES.

Ancient Egyptians Believed In Constant Reminders of Death.

To the Egyptian death was but the beginning of a career of adventures and experiences compared with which the most vivid emotions of this life were tame. He lived with the fear of death before his eyes. Everything around him reminded him of that dreadful initiation into the mysteries of the tremendous after life for which his present existence was but a preparation. His cemeteries were not hidden away in remote suburbs; his dead were not covered with mere grassy mounds or a slab of stone. The whole land was his graveyard; its whole art was of the mortuary. "Are there no graves in Egypt that thou hast brought us into the wilderness to die?" asked the Israelites in derision, and we may believe that Moses winced at the sarcasm.

Egypt is the land of graves, and the whole energy of the people, that could be spared from keeping life together, was devoted to death. The mightiest tombs in the world—the pyramids—were raised upon the deaths of multitudes of toiling slaves. The hills were honeycombed passages and galleries, chambers, pits, all painfully excavated in honor of the illustrious dead, and sculptured and painted with elaborate skill to make them fit habitations for his ghost.

Wherever he looked the Egyptian beheld preparations for the great turning point of existence. The mason was squaring blocks for the tomb chamber; the potter molded images of the gods, or bowls and jars, to be placed in the grave for the protection or refreshment of the Ka, exhausted with the ordeals of the under world; the sculptor and painter were at work upon the walls of the funeral chamber, illustrating the scenes through which the ghost was to pass, or depicting the industrious life of the departed.

The very temples which cluster along the levels beside the Nile were, in a sense, but vestibules to the tombs in the hills behind. The sacred lake, now the weedy, picturesque haunt of waterfowl, was then the scene of solemn ferryings of the dead. The temple walls were covered with the terrors of the judgment to come. The houses of the living, indeed, were built of perishing mud, but the homes of the dead and the shrines where supplication was made to the gods who ruled their fate were made to last forever. On these all the strength, the science and the artistic skill of the ancient Egyptians were cheerfully lavished.—Saturday Review.

THE EXPERT BUTCHER.

One of His Accomplishments the Ability to Cut Off the Right Weight.

It is his business, of course, and he becomes expert at it, as any man might in any work, but the customer who pays any attention to it at all is sure to be interested nevertheless in the accuracy with which the butcher cuts off just the required amount of meat. Whether it is two pounds of steak, or four pounds of chops, or six pounds of corned beef, it's all the same to him. He cuts without long dwelling upon where to set the knife. He slices away sort of casuallike and piles the sow and lays the meat on the scales, and it does not weigh more than a quarter or a half pound from the weight required on even the heaviest pieces, and on the lighter pieces he comes within an ounce or two or hits it right on the nail.

A man, for instance, goes into a butcher shop and asks for three and a half or four pounds of, say, corned beef. The butcher gets a big piece out of the pickle, lays it on a block and picks up a knife, and, without the slightest hesitation, with one strong, smooth sweep cuts off a piece, which he lays on the scales. It weighs three pounds and three-quarters. It is in weight exactly midway between the limits set.

The expert butcher gets his ability to do this, naturally enough, from good judgment, to start with, backed up by long experience, but when he cuts things as close as this even the customer familiar with his skill looks upon him as a wizard.—New York Sun.

Too Hot to Extinguish.

A well known Mississippi farmer will have cause to remember his recent visit to Memphis. He stopped in a well known cafe, and among other things ordered a sirloin steak. A bottle of tabasco sauce was on the table, and mistaking it for catchup he spread it quite lavishly on the steak and settled down to enjoy the meal. He cut off a big piece, but no sooner had it struck his mouth than he began to feel like his tongue was on fire. He twisted and turned, and soon had the eyes of every one in the dining hall fastened on him. The more he twisted and screwed his face the hotter the steak in his mouth got. He didn't know what was the matter. He could stand it no longer and reaching up his hand he jerked out the burning bite, threw it on the floor and in a very dramatic way exclaimed, "Now, hang you, blaze!"—Memphis Scimitar.

Cold Water as a Stimulant.

According to a high authority, cold water is a valuable stimulant to many if not all people. Its action on the heart is more stimulating than brandy. His own experience is that sipping half a wine glass of cold water will raise his pulse from 76 to over 100.

Prejudiced Against the Piano.

"I never thought the time would ever come when I should be delighted to hear that piano going," remarked Fogg as the "instrument" in the next house was being carried down the stairs to the furniture wagon.—Boston Transcript.

MANY USES FOR JUNK

HOW WORNOUT AND DISCARDED METAL IS UTILIZED.

Old Horseshoes May Reappear as Razors, and Battered Kitchen Stoves May Go Up in Skyscrapers—Lucky Finds in the Junkshops.

The other day I wandered into a large yard containing great heaps of scrap iron and old metals of different kinds. Workmen were sorting out the masses of rusty, misshapen and tangled metals, each of which evidently had its particular value in the market. I wondered what became of all the castoway metal and what peculiar transformations it underwent. In seeking some information on the point from the proprietor of the place he said:

"This business doesn't look as if it possessed any elements of interest, educational or romantic, and yet it has something of both of these. Now, here's an old horseshoe. It may shave a Mongolian in China, though what a Mongolian has to shave I don't clearly see. Of course it will be converted first into a razor. I ship large quantities of these wornout horseshoes and wagon tires to the Celestial kingdom to be worked up into razors, knives and other useful domestic articles. The Chinaman engaged in this particular industry gets 12 cents a day for his labor. These horseshoes and wagon tires are wrought iron and are preferred to other forms of this metal, because they are the most conveniently handled.

"When you go across the bridge to the borough of Manhattan, you probably notice some of the new 20 or 30 story buildings going up there and the big iron columns and girders used in their construction. You probably think that those columns and girders are all new metal, but it is likely that they are not. They are scrap iron, pure and simple, or may be mixed with some new ore in the melting and recasting of the scrap metal in the foundry or rolling mill where all the scrap goes. Your discarded kitchen stove may reappear in one of the columns or girders of a skyscraper. The owners of these lofty buildings may think they are getting new iron material and may pay for it, but they are probably not getting it. Perhaps there isn't much difference in the durability of the recast metal and the new.

"When you are riding in a trolley car, you may reflect that the metal in the axles of the wheels and in the railroad tracks may have formerly served in stove grates. Such are some of the new forms and uses which scrap metal assumes.

"We dealers alight upon some strange finds among the old metal which we gather. I have at home six solid bronze plaques, as one of this class of finds, which I wouldn't take $75 for. I've also got at home an iron and bronze aquarium, another of these peculiar discoveries, which I wouldn't part with for $50.

"It is curious to think how such valuable articles get into such poor company as scrap iron. Perhaps the original owners carelessly permit them to get mixed up with some old junk which they disposed of to the junkman who brings his collection of stock to us, or perhaps they deliberately throw them away through simple weariness of their possession. Then, again, the articles may possibly be stolen and sold to the junkman.

"There are other interesting finds we meet with in our business. Not only the common but the finer metals, such as jewelry and silverware, fall into our hands. Possibly you've heard your wife remark one day that there was a silver spoon missing, and she might suspect that the servant has stolen it. But the truth is the spoon has accidentally gone astray and passed unnoticed into the ash can or garbage tub and in the course of time, possibly, we pick it up out of the dumps. Many a spoon, knife and fork with Tiffany's or Benedict's stamp on it I have bought at Barren Island after being taken out of these dumps. Other stray waifs in this class which I have gathered from the Barren Island dumps are silver pocketknives and matchboxes, gold and silver thimbles and cuff buttons, gold rings and a ladies' gold purse which I sold for $20 as old gold. Some time ago a ring with a transparent stone was picked out of the dumps. A business rival of mine just got ahead of me in the purchase of the ring, which he got for $10. The stone proved to be a genuine diamond, and the purchaser got $250 for the ring. It looked like a ladies' engagement ring and the sympathetic thought struck me that its possibly fair owner was at that moment suffering unimaginable distress at its loss.

"So you see," continued the dealer, "there are a few interesting and somewhat romantic features associated with our very prosy looking business."—Brooklyn Citizen.

Curing a Cold.

To feed a cold and starve a fever is a dangerous maxim. At the first sign of a cold the patient ought to take a rapid hot bath in a warm, well ventilated room, then remain covered in bed, with hot water at the feet, for several hours. Darken the windows, court sleep, and fast, save only from drinking warm broth or gruel, until unpleasant symptoms subside. Nor should there be mental or physical exertion. Then all the vitality can go to restoring circulation and throwing off that waste material which, retained, is absolute poison. To eat in this condition is to add the proverbial straw to the camel's back.—Good Housekeeping.

Going the rounds of the press are the following interesting and curious waifs sent forth by someone who forgot to attach his name: No century can begin on Wednesday, Friday or Sunday. The same calendars can be used every twenty years. October always begins on the same day of the week as January, April as July, September as December, and February, March and November begin on the same days. May, June and August always begin on different days from each other and every other month in the year. The first and last days of the year are always the same. These rules do not apply to leap year when comparison is made between days before and after February 26th.

SHE WAS YOUNG.

And There Were Many, Many Things She Did Not Know.

"One thing is certain," an affianced maid announced, with decision, on the eve of her wedding—"my husband shall never call me 'mamma.' He may call me Clara or Mrs. Richards or even 'Say,' but I shall never be called 'mamma.' It is a horrid, impersonal name."

We mammas who heard her only smiled and answered nothing at all, for each of us remembered that she was young and that there were many, many things that she did not know.

She did not know that when the sweetheart had changed to the wife and the wife to the mother there comes a wondrous first time. That first time that she feels the downy head nestling under her chin, that first time that she feels the restless pat, pat of little feet as she vainly tries to prison them in her hand, she learns then that her life has burst into a new and wonderful fullness. In her heart there is kindled the fire of love, and the incense that arises from it glorifies the whole atmosphere, and the warmth envelops her and her baby in an everlasting mantle.

Then in the dim light she sees bending over her the one that she loves best of all, and she reaches out her hand to him to draw him near, that he, too, may come within the enchanted circle; that he, too, may breathe the sacred incense and be warmed by the heavenly fire. Laying his hand in hers, they look together into the new little face, but no word comes to express the strange sweet feelings that are surging through them both until, bending close to her, he softly whispers, "Mamma."

It is a baptism. All the sweet, intangible things that have been filling her being have been caught and held in that word. The world may teem with mammas, but the name to her has a new and sacred meaning. Other names have been given her, other promises have been made in the giving and in the taking, but nothing so tender, so strong, so sweet as this, and her whole being goes out in a silent promise to live up to the sacredness of that name.—Woman's Home Companion.

Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

Every one who holds a lease, either as lease or lessor, will do well to look it over and see if it has the revenue stamp upon it that the government requires. It appears that there has been a disposition to avoid the use of revenue stamps on leases. The matter has been settled by the Great Northern and Mr. Knox receives full pay from the company for the damage.—Thief River Falls News.

The Census.

Elmer E. Adams of Fergus Falls, supervisor of the census for the Seventh Minnesota district, has issued the following statement for the information of the people of his district:

The work of taking the census will not be commenced until June 1, 1900. As there are no large cities in the Seventh district, thirty days will be allowed for the enumerators to do the work, but the districts will be so small that they can be completed in fifteen days and the schedules returned to the supervison before July 1. The census bureau at Washington divides the territory into enumerators districts. The first draft of the division has been made but there will be some changes. There will be about 300 enumerators' districts and one enumerator will be appointed for each districts will generally consist of one township unless the township is very sparsely settled or the topography of the country is such that it is desirable to make them larger. When the districts have once been arranged by the director of the census, no changes will be made.

The enumerators are appointed by the supervisor but approved by the director at Washington. They will not be appointed until May, 1900, and the commission will not be issued until about May 20.

The compensation to be paid to enumerators is fixed by Section 16 of the Act of March 3, 1899, and a minimum rate of two cents for each living inhabitant, two cents for each death, fifteen cents for each farm and twenty cents for each establishment of productive industry, is provided for all subdivison where such allowance shall be deemed sufficient.

The townships in this district will nearly all receive the maximum rate and this will make the pay for enumerating a township from $30 to $50.

It is a grand good medicine. For sale by The Imperial Drug Co.

How Girls May See Paris Alone.

A bright American girl is going to tell, in The Ladies' Home Journal, how she and a girl friend went to Paris together, saw its sights, visited all places of interest, lived there and had "the time of our lives," as she explains the experience. In three gossipy articles all the points of interest in and about the French capitol will be treated and briefly described, and how to live well at small cost—in fact, just how girls going alone to Paris can best and cheapest enjoy the trip, will be explained. Of course these experiences are intended to serve as a guide for girls going to the Paris Exposition in 1900.

—If you are troubled with rheumatism take the Imperial Blood and Rheumatism cure. It will positively cure all diseases arising from impure blood, and is sold under an absolute guarantee to benefit or money refunded. Call for free sample at the New Drug Store.

Beginning of Twentieth Century.

Scientific American: When will the twentieth century, begin? Why there should be different answers to this question is a little puzzling to know. A few fundamental facts disposed of, ought easily to settle the controversy. Of, course, the first century begin with the year 1, and closes with the year 100. The second century, then, began with the year 101 and closed with the year 200, Now, following this method to the present time, there can be but one answer to the above question. This nineteenth century closes with the year 1900 and the year 1900 closes December 31. Immediately after midnight, therefore, of December 31, 1900, is when the twentieth century begins. In other words it begins with the first second of the first hour of the first day of January, 1901.

The century will open on Tuesday and close on Sunday. It will have the greatest number of leap years possible for a century—twenty four. The year 1904 will be the first one, then every fourth year after that, to and including the year 2,000. February will three times have five Sundays; in 1920, 1948 and 1976. In 1901 Decoration Day, Fourth of July and Thanksgiving Day will occur on the same day of the week Then, after that, the same thing will happen in 1907, 1918, 1929, 1935, and so on.

Used by British Soldiers in Africa.

Capt. C. G. Dennison is well known all over Africa as commander of the forces that captured the famous rebel Galishe. Under date of Nov. 4, 1897, from Vryburg, Bechuanaland, he writes "Before starting on the last campaign I bought a quantity of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which, I used myself when troubled with bowel complaint, and had given to my men, and in every case it proved most beneficial." For sale by The Imperial Drug Co.

Vice president Hobart was one of the rare men who could be a strong partisan in politics without forfeiting the personal esteem of his opponents. That is why democratic Senators sorrow quite as deeply over his death as do their republican colleagues or the members of the administration of which Mr. Hobart was an important part—a much more important part than is generally known. Senator Frye, of Me., who was elected president protempore of the Senate early in the last Congress will preside over the Senate at the coming session, the only difference made by the death of Mr. Hobart being that Senator Frye will draw $3,000 a year more salary and will have the use of the Vice Presidents room in the Capitol. It will not change his title, and the Vice Presidency will remain vacant until after the next national election, there being no law providing for filling a vacancy in that office.

Dentist.

—Dr. J. H. Thomas, the Crookston dentist will be at Hotel Markham, St. Hilaire, Dec. 5th and 6th prepared to do all kinds of up to date dental work in all branches. All work warranted. Remember the dates 5th and 6th.

One of the proposed features of the Paris Exposition next year is said to be a realistic reproduction of the four seasons of the year in one huge building. In one great room will be the chilling winds and snow and ice covered ground of a Russian winter Russians in fur coats, caps and boots will stroll about and a pond full of merry young Russians of both sexes will be seen skating about. Spring as it is in Italy will be in the next room, separated from winter by heavy doors. A summer day in Cuba with Cuban men and women lounging about in the heat will be exemplified in the next compartment and last of all, an autumn day in old England will be correctly reproduced, with sturdy English farmers ploughing, merry maidens dancing on their way to milk the English kine, while the subdued tinkle of the sheep bells tones the mind to soberer thought such as the tendency is under the chastening influences of an autumn day. If the project is possible it would be a drawing card especially as the national drink of the four nations represented will be on sale in its respective room. A man filled with the drinks of four nations ought to be satisfied for one day.—Hutchinson Independent.

Teacher's Convention.

"DI."

"Here we are at the old willow. What do you say to coming to anchor for a bit?" he remarked, bringing the Canadian close to the bank.

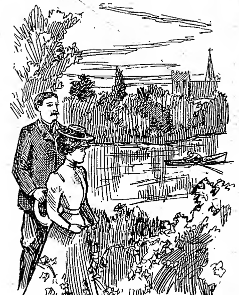
"That is just what one finds so impossible in life—coming to anchor, I mean," she said, dabbling her left hand in the water.

"Look here, Di," he jerked out presently, "what is the good of beating about the bush? There's something wrong, and you are worrying yourself about it, and I am going to make you tell me everything. You used to tell me everything once, Di, without invitation," he added, with an attempt at raillery that was chiefly pathetic.

"Don't be a duffer, Hugh," she observed. "May I not be sententious now and then without being forced to explain that I mean nothing at all? Now, will you please amuse me? It is a shame to waste an afternoon like this."

"Of course it is," he echoed. "You see, dear, all the gods and the fairest of mortals—meaning your delightful self—seem to be conspiring for my happiness, when the gods behave in this odd kind of way we are told to distrust them. First of all, I have you—have had you quite fast, since the days when I robbed orchards, and you, like a second Eve, ate the apples; then I have secured two firsts and a reasonable chance of a fellowship; lastly, a most commendable maiden aunt sees fit to die and endow me with the wealth that perishes. It is too much, you know, Di, not a doubt of it; the stagey thing to happen is for me to lose you, and thereby make dust and ashes of all my other possessions."

"Do you know," he recommenced, presently, "I can't, for the life of me, help feeling sentimental, and gray, and awfully sorry for myself, when I think that Cambridge is over and done with.



"POOR CHAP!" MUTTERED ROBERTS.

Look at that bit of Clare there, gazing out upon King's with such a genial eye; then there is the willow above us, and the bridge from which one used to listen to the nightingales, and—and the Fen sunsets one has seen, and the cheery life. All is gone, Di, forever and forever."

"All gone," she echoed in a voice that was almost tragic by comparison with the half-flippancy of his.

"Staying up here indefinitely as a don is not the same thing," he went on. "The glamor wears thin, and one slips into formula in place of feelings, and acquires uncanny views of women. You have met Roberts often lately, haven't you? He is only just 30, and yet he has settled into his groove as if he were 110. As a coach he is marvelous, and I have every admiration for the way in which he has pulled me through, but—but—I should have liked to exhibit the genuine Roberts to you, Di; you would have been edified, I think. I never met a man who could so effectually turn his blind eye to the good qualities of women."

"Ah!" murmured the girl. "Let us go down the river again," she said after a pause. "I have something to say to you, Hugh, and it will be easier if we are in motion."

"I have often wondered what would happen to Roberts if he met his destiny written large," he mused audibly. "It would knock him clean out of time, I fancy should he lose. That is the worst of these men who go on in smiling indifference to amatory dangers; they are pulled up with a horrid jerk. Don't you think infant.. vaccination with love lymph is to be advocated? You don't take it half as badly in that case."

"Oh, Hugh, why will you be so—so frivolous?" pleaded the girl, something between amusement and desperation in her voice.

"Can't help it, Di, for the life of me; I was born so, you know."

"I am going to tell you a story, Hugh," she went on with more composure, "and you shall give me your verdict on it. Don't stop; I can't bear to remain still. The story is about a woman and a man of whom the woman was very fond—so fond that she had promised, almost before she grew up, that she would marry him. She did not know that love meant something else, until—until she came up to Cambridge one May week. Hugh, please don't look at me in that way; it is only a story. Well, she met some one very often, more often than she had a right to do, during that week; she did not realize the end to which they were drifting—she was merely interested in drawing a grave, book-hardened man out of his shell; being rather willful, she could not be confronted with a solid wall of ice and not wish to thaw it."

The man's face was the color of damp parchment. "Go on," he said as she halted in the telling.

"She succeeded, Hugh. It all came about on the night of a certain college ball, beneath an old willow—the same under which we anchored not long ago. The wall of ice melted suddenly en masse, and the rush of water carried both of them away. It was then that the woman learned the added element which converted fondness into love; it was then that she lost sight of honor and allowed the man to kiss her."

"Good God!"

She had not dreamed that Hugh would take it like this. Sorry, very sorry, she expected him to be, but not anguished. She had grown up with him, and tragedy always seems out of place with people who have become dovetailed into our lives by commonplaces.

"Hugh, you must not think I—gave you up," she said, with the silly struggle of a sheep that sees the slaughter-house door before it. "I told him almost at once that I was bound to you, and I shall not break my promise. Only I had to confess, because it would not have been right to conceal it from you."

They were close in to the left bank of the river, and a step was audible on the pathway. Both looked up. Both turned their eyes from the bank to each other, and a light broke in on Hugh.

"That's Roberts, the man who pulled me through so well," he observed, chaotically. "Would you like to land, Di?"

"No, no!" she cried.

But the canoe was already brought to, and he had leaped on shore. Mechanically she took the hand he held out to her; mechanically she responded to the confused greeting of Eustace Roberts, classical coach and father of unnumbered firsts. One among the last-born of his offspring seemed to be somewhat intoxicated this afternoon—perhaps the heat had been too much for him.

"You're a decent old sort, Roberts," he remarked, hilariously slapping his precentor on the back, "and I—congratulate you. Should never have expected it. Sly dogs, you cynical beggars. Don't mind me—enjoy this kind of thing, you know. Good-by, good-by; I must be off. No good missing Hall, you see, for the sake of being de trop."

Before they could stop him he was well out in the middle of the river and paddling hard in the direction of King's.

"Poor chap!" muttered Roberts.

"Poor chap!" said the girl. "Is that all you can find to say appropriate to the occasion?"

"Yes; the rest is away behind, shut up beyond the reach of words," he responded, gravely.

Explorations in Patagonia.

In the current number of the Geographical Journal Dr. Moreno gives an account of Patagonia, which is a portion of that vast area in South America still unknown to geography, and interesting because of the rich products, which it probably contains, and its charming landscapes. It seems that Patagonia does not merit the bad reputation as regards scenery which it has had since Darwin and Fitzroy received a disagreeable impression from the portion they explored. The plateaus of Arizona find their analogy in the table lands of Patagonia, and "the picturesque fjords and white mountains of Alaska seem to be a copy of the fjords and mountains of Patagonia." The analogy might be pushed even further, for it seems there is a strange similarity between the ancient customs and industries of the Alaskan and Patagonian Indians.

The Story of Eclipses.

In an appendix to Mr. Chambers' new treatise on eclipses an account is given of the best means of taking part in the observation of the eclipse which will occur on the 28th of May of next year. This eclipse will be total in the southeastern states of North America and in southwestern Europe and northern Africa, but will be partial in England. A trip to Spain or Portugal is recommended, and a diagram is given showing the stars which are likely to be visible in the neighborhood of the sun while it is covered by the moon.

HIS ONLY COMFORT.

He Said, Was in Making Up to Resemble His Dead Wife.

From the toes of the dainty boots which peeped from beneath a tailor-made skirt to the stylish bonnet perched upon the head of gray hair, the prisoner arrested recently by Detective Kelly of the Pennsylvania railroad in the big waiting-room at Jersey City appeared a woman, but when taken to the First precinct station-house the supposed woman removed her gray wig and stood revealed a man of 53 years. "I have been almost crazy ever since I lost my wife some years ago, crazy to see her, and the only comfort I have is in dressing and making up as she used to look," was all the explanation the prisoner, who said he was John Jones, 53 years old, of Newark, would give. It was about 11 o'clock when Detective Kelly had his attention attracted to the supposed woman by seeing the latter leave the ladies' parlor. Something in the walk caused the detective to think the supposed woman a make-up and he started to question her. Receiving no answers, he called Policeman Murphy of the First precinct, and they took their prisoner to the station-house. There the latter broke into tears, but still refused to speak. "Take off that wig," ordered Murphy, and when he was obeyed the partially bald head of an old man was revealed. Then it was that the prisoner told of losing his wife, and how, with no children, the idea of seeing her again had so grown on him that time and again he made himself up as she would appear, then donned women's clothing and started away from home. Under further questioning from Inspector Archibald, Jones (which he admitted was not his right name) said he lived in Montclair. He said that he was a bookkeeper and that he was well connected. Every article of clothing worn by him was female apparel. His make-up was excellent. As he refused to give any further information he was held

INDIAN VILLAGE LOST.

Apparent Ruins That Puzzle the Michigan Historians.

Historians are at a loss to account for the apparent ruins of an Indian village in Silver Creek township, this county, about half a mile west of Indian lake, says the Detroit News. In 1843, when William Gilbert, one of the wealthiest farmers in this section, built his house in this locality, he built upon the ruins of what had evidently been a church. In fact, settlers in the twenties claim to have attended church there, the service being conducted by a priest from Bertrand or Notre Dame. Other settlers state that in the early thirties one Slater taught school there, later going to the vicinity of Yankee Springs, and continuing that occupation there. The fact of its being a schoolhouse would not preclude its being used occasionally as a church, and there are in existence in this city records of baptism of Indian children at the "Church of the Indian Village." On the same farm were ruins of nine sugar camps, each about 12 by 16 in size, with holes bored in a log at the back in which sticks had been driven on which to make their beds. Copper kettles were used, and copper knives, nails and hatchets, of poor temper, have been plowed up there. There is not an Indian in the vicinity who knows anything about this church or school, yet the evidence that one did exist is indisputable. Indian lake was named from the fact that this locality was the favorite resort of the Indians in the maple sugar season.

ARTIFICIAL PALMS.

One Place Where the Counterfeit Is Rarely Detected.

A comparatively new business is the making of artificial palms, says the New York Commercial Advertiser. They are made so like the real article nowadays that when you are sitting under one of them it is difficult to tell whether you are in a conservatory or a morgue or in Cuba. It is only when the leaves of the make-believe trees are subjected to severe and continuous heat that the deception is made manifest. The strands then begin to sag and droop and the binding of the shavings, with which the stem of the "tree" is wrapped, is also apt to become a little the worse for wear and to show that in its case, at least, life is a mere pretense. So far the artificial palm has not made its way to the hotel palm garden, but it is a familiar sight in the waiting rooms of dry-goods stores and in bar-rooms. In the latter, of course, the counterfeit is rarely detected. The sham palms pass muster every time with the topers, some of whom, no doubt, could, with a very small stretch of the imagination, see buzzards flying over them.

British Marine Losses.

The British government has prepared a report on the losses sustained by the merchant marine of the world during the year 1898. The total number of vessels lost during the year was 1,141, with a tonnage of 820,725. Of these vessels 322 were steamers with a tonnage of 463,241. So far as causes could be ascertained 524 of the vessels with a tonnage of 356,503, were lost by wreck. Ninety vessels, with a tonnage of 73,204, were lost in collisions, forty-eight being steamers and forty-two sailing vessels. Ninety-six vessels of 52,752 tons, of which eighty-five were sailing vessels, were abandoned at sea, and about an equal number of sailing ships and steamers were burned. Twenty-four steamers and seventy-nine sailing vessels left port and were never heard from, the total tonnage represented being 72,773. The aggregate loss exceeds the average of the preceding seven years by twenty-five vessels of 106,706 tons. Great Britain suffered the lowest rate of loss, her percentage being 2.23; the next on the list was Germany, with 2.33 per cent; the United States fifth, with 4.14 per cent.—Railway and Engineering Review.

ITEMS OF INTEREST FOR MAIDS AND MATRONS.

French Gown in Royal Blue Broadcloth—Flannel Dressing Gown—The Care of the Bedroom—Age and Marriage—Our Cooking School.

The Way of the World.

A youth would marry a maiden,
For fair and fond was she;
But she was rich, and he was poor,
And so it might not be.

A lady never could wear—
Her mother held it firm—
A gown that came of an Indian plant,
Instead of an Indian worm!
And so the cruel word was spoken;
And so it was two hearts were broken.

A youth would marry a maiden,
For fair and fond was she;
But he was high, and she was low,
And so it might not be.

A man who had worn a spur,
In ancient battle won,
Had sent it down with great renown
To good his future son!
And so the cruel word was spoken;
And so it was two hearts were broken.

A youth would marry a maiden,
For fair and fond was she;
But their sires disputed about the Mass,
And so it might not be.

A couple of wicked kings,
Three hundred years agone,
Had played at a royal game of chess,
And the church had been a pawn!
And so the cruel word was spoken;
And so it was two hearts were broken.
—J. G. Saxe.

The Care of the Bedroom.

The bedroom is often neglected, especially in winter, yet next to the kitchen it is the most important room in the house, for a large part of one's life is passed there. The bed should first have all the coverings stripped off onto two chairs set at the foot. The mattress should be doubled so the air may get to all parts. With the windows open the room should be left for an hour at least, except in severe weather. Each piece of bedclothing should be well shaken before it is returned to the bed, and the pillows beaten and patted into shape. The white spread, which should have been removed and folded when the bed was prepared for use the night before is now fresh and smooth. If pillow shams are not used the creased slips may be exchanged for fresh day cases and the former laid aside for evening use again. The bed is not all that needs close care in the sleeping room. The dusting is far more important than most people suspect. The fluff and dust that accumulate everywhere are favorite resting places for disease germs, and for this reason the bits of pretty drapery, the bric-a-brac and all other ornaments are not to be commended in a bed chamber. Every piece of furniture should be carefully wiped off each day with a soft cloth, which should be shaken out the window. Once a week the room should receive a thorough sweeping, when every article should be moved and no nook or corner left unbrushed. The receptacles for waste water should be washed and scalded every day in summer; also sunning when possible. The wash clothes, too, should be washed and scalded to keep them from souring. Soiled clothes should never be left in a sleeping room; they will so soon contaminate the atmosphere. Shoes and other articles of apparel will soon gather dust and look very untidy. When these precautions have been closely followed there will never be found in a bedroom the close, unpleasant odor so often noticed even in handsome but stuffy sleeping rooms. These malodors are not only disagreeable, but positively unhealthy, especially for delicate persons and children. The plainer and simpler the furnishing the easier it is to keep in order.

Age and Marriage.

A woman's prospect of marriage is distinctly affected by age. The statistics of all countries show that the great majority of women marry between the ages of 20 and 30. Before reaching 20 a woman has, of course, a chance of matrimony, but the objections raised by parents or friends to marriage at a tender age frequently outweigh the desire of the young woman to acquire a husband, and lead her to defer the wedding day. All the statistics that have been gathered bear out the statement that a woman's best chance to marry is at the age of 25, that over six-tenths of the marriages take place between 20 and 30, and consequently that a woman's chance increases up to 25, and steadily decreases after that age until it reaches the vanishing point somewhere about 60. Out of 1,000 married women 149 marry before the age of 20, 680 between 20 and 30, 111 between 30 and 40, the woman in the thirties having not so good a chance as the girl in her teens; between the ages of 40 and 50 the falling off is enormous, only 41 in 1,000 contracting an alliance in that decade, while past 50 the chances still further diminish, for the woman who has celebrated the semi-centennial of her birth has only nineteen chances in a thousand.

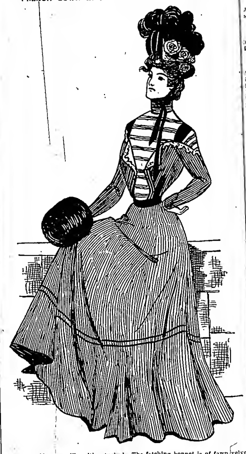
Girlhood's Charm.

The woman who keeps the simplicity of her girlhood, its generous impulses and quick sympathies, and who adds to her gifts the enlargement of study and the crown of experience, is always at her best and never past it. When the exterior attractions of form and color diminish and depart, as they mostly do, the radiance of our inner illumination will more than compensate their departure. But, in order that this should be so her moral must equal her intellectual gain. She must be willing to learn not only her own powers, but her own defects also, and to court the good influences which can help her to escape from the delusions of sense and the fatal tyranny of self-consciousness. She must discard the petty measures of vanity and self-seeking, and learn to love her race, her country, and the humanity which she should help to adorn.

Points for Home-Made Nurses.

A good nurse has both mental and physical strength well developed, and withal is honest and faithful. Those who would be handy and hence useful in the sick room should know how to prepare drinks and nourishment for the sick in variety, and above all how to administer these as well as medicine. It is very important that a nurse should never put her judgment in opposition to that of the attending physician, for such a course is not only discourteous, but the life of the patient is endangered thereby. The nurse is out of place as a critic in the sick room, her duty being to be true to the patient and the patient's physician, disregarding all temptations from meddlesome friends to be otherwise. A nurse should be careful to enforce all directions of the physician, even though they seem unimportant. She should be gentle and quiet of demeanor.

FRENCH GOWN IN ROYAL BLUE BROADCLOTH



Over emerald-green silk, with a tucked vest of pale fawn cloth. The straps on the shoulders are of blue velvet, which also forms the belt. The top of the corsage is edged with ecru guipure. The fetching bonnet is of fawn velvet faced with black velvet, and trimmed with black feathers and huge pink roses.

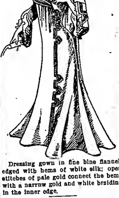
Toilet Lore.

Glycerine, borax and rose water for chapped hands. Proportions: One-third glycerine to two-thirds rose water and added to this a pinch of powdered borax. Drop over hands before drying.

Toilet cream for nightly massage: Lanoline, two ounces, cocoa butter, two ounces; glycerine, two ounces; rose water, two and a half ounces; elder flower water, two and a half ounces. Melt lanoline and cocoa butter in double boiler. Add glycerine and when cooling both toilet water.

Perspiration that annoys may be greatly helped by the use of saleratus. The part affected rub with this ingredient after the skin has been wet. Leave on until chemical action takes place, say until after the bath. It can be applied when bath is not to be taken.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Flannel Dressing Gown.



Dressing gown in fine blue flannel, edged with hems of white silk; open stitches of pale gold connect the hems with a narrow gold and white braiding in the inner edge.

Household Hints.

When washing dishes be careful that hand-painted china and china with gilt ornamentation is not left to stand in hot water, as it will injure the decoration sooner or later.

When rubbing up the stoves at fall cleaning, don't forget that the isinglass windows may be most quickly and thoroughly brightened by using vinegar and water. Rub them quickly with a soft rag dipped in the vinegar and water, being careful to go well into the corners. This will keep the windows clean for a long time.

A little powdered borax added to cold starch, it is said, will give extra stiffness to linen.

When washing ivory or pearl handled knives never put the handles in the water. Clean the knife blade and quickly dry each knife, never letting the handle get wet, else they will surely be discolored.

The house broom cannot have too much care exercised in keeping it clean. It is a fertile breeding place for the germs of grip, scarlet fever and other diseases.

To clean wall paper brush it in straight lines with a broom, over which a soft, clean cloth has first been fastened; then wipe downwards lightly with slices of stale bread.

Silk Petticoats.

A novel combination made with handsome silk petticoats consists in cutting them out in the form of a princess dress, the corsage being decollete and the corsage cover also, so that it shall match the petticoat, thus doing away with everything that tends to encumber and increase the figure. The material which plays the most prominent part is cloth—cloth everywhere, but in almost endless variety. The new shades are the struensee, a soft bluish gray; the sous marin, a similar but darker shade; the snob, a pretty drab; the gendarme, a rather dark blue; the marchand, a fine pink red, and many other new shades among them being holly green and teuf-teuf, something akin to garnet.—Le Mode de Style.

The Pink Tipped Ear.

There seems to have come the craze for earrings and with it women are beginning to discover that a small and delicately shaped ear, pink tipped, is one essential element of beauty. A pink-tipped ear is as becoming as a rosy cheek. I think it was Mrs. Kendall who set us this lesson, upon the occasion of her first visit. Many a girl is remembering the lesson now and, while she may scorn powder, she cannot resist touching the tips of her ears with a bit of rouge. A woman with pale ears may be safely set down as one whose heart is hard to reach it is said, while she whose ears are pink along the curled rime and downy lobes is a creature of sympathetic and responsive temperament.

OUR COOKING SCHOOL.

Beef Roll.

Take 1 lb. beef steak (or pieces of inferior beef), ½ lb. lean ham or bacon ¼ lb. bread crumbs, a little more than half a grated nutmeg, pepper and salt to taste. Mince and mix well together, adding two beaten eggs; make in the shape of a sausage roll; tie very tightly in a cloth, and boil for three hours. Glaze and serve cold.

Scrapple.

Boil any kind of meat until tender. Then separate from bones and chop. Sprinkle with pepper and sage if desired, and salt the liquor in which you boil the meat. Put the chopped meat back in the liquor, and while boiling stir in meal until of the consistency of mush. Pour in milk crock and when cold slice and fry. It is very nice for breakfast.

Collared Fowl.

Boil the fowl in sufficient water to cover it until the meat comes off the bones easily. The head and feet and any other bones may be boiled with it to improve the stock, also a large onion stuck with 3 or 4 cloves and a bunch of herbs. Oil a mould, place round it slices of ham or bacon cooked, and three hard boiled eggs cut into slices, fill the mould with the fowl cut up in pieces after removed from the bones. Have soaked in readiness 1 oz. of isinglass, or gelatine in a little water for an hour. Add it to 1½ pints of the stock, but, with a little sauce, pepper, salt to taste, and pour over the meat; fill quite full, and when cold turn out into a dish. This is a delicious dish for breakfast or supper. Rabbit may be done in the same way, and is excellent.

Still More Counterfeiting.

WARS FROM TRIFLING CAUSES.

Petty Quarrels Have Brought on Bloody Conflicts in the Past.

Many wars have had trifling causes. A dispatch altered in one or two points by Bismarck, brought on the Franco-German conflict. Palmerston said facetiously that only three men in Europe ever knew what the Schleswig-Holstein troubles which led to the wars were about, and two of them died before the conflict began, while he, the third man, had forgotten. A slighting reference by Frederick the Great of Prussia to Mme. Pompadour of France was said to have been one of the causes of the seven years' war, sometimes called the "war of the three petticoats" from the fact that France of Pompadour and the Russia of Catherine II. joined the Austria of Maria Theresa against Frederick.

According to John Bright, England and her allies drifted into the Crimean war without realizing it until after they got in, and they did not know what they were fighting for, even after they started; while it is certain that everything which was supposed to have been fixed by the results of a quarter of a century of war, beginning with the commencement of the French revolution and ending with Waterloo, "pleased nobody and settled nothing," according to Sheridan. The average person who lived in those days knew as little about the causes of the slaughter as old Kaspar did about the battle of Blenheim when questioned by little Peterkin.—Leslie's Weekly.

LAKE IN AFRICAN MOUNTAIN

English Explorer Circumnavigates the Entire Sheet of Water.

At a meeting of the Royal Geographical society in London an interesting report by Poulett Weatherby on Lake Bangweulu, in Central Africa, was read. The explorer circumnavigated the entire sheet of water. His party reached the lake in August, 1896, and established a camp at the southwestern corner, 3,765 feet above sea level. The shores of the lake are absolutely free from shells and the water has no depth. He sounded in many places, but never found more than fifteen feet. Its surface was usually still, a very strong wind raising the smallest sea. It appears to be nothing but a flooded district. Mr. Weathersby thinks it was formed by the water from the great watershed of the Tanganyika plateau. The overflow is checked to the west and southwest by a rim of rock, but the east and southeast has no barrier, and in that direction there is a vast swamp from twenty to forty miles in breadth. The Liposochi and Luena to the north and the Chambeze to the east are the chief contributors to the water supply. With twenty-five men he explored the island of M'bawala, about twenty miles long and 1,000 yards from the shore, and proceeded toward the outlet of the Luapula, ultimately landing at Kirui island. After a stay of some time on this island, which they found low, beautifully wooded, well peopled and cultivated, they passed on to Kisi island. This they found not a bit like the island depicted on the maps. It presented a most peaceful, prosperous sight, and in common with the other two islands, Kirui and M'bawala, it reared a good number of sheep—the broad tailed kind—and goats. The people appeared to live a life of complete peace and contentment. Proceeding in a northerly direction the party reached the extreme north-northwest corner of the lake. Continuing their journey along the coast they discovered a narrow peninsula stretching north and south, leaving on the west a sheet of water about three miles in width which extends the whole length of Bangweulu north and south, but is always separated from the lake by the isthmus. There was cotton everywhere, but not in large quantities, and the bark-cloth tree abounded.—New York Post.

My Mother Had Consumption

"My mother was troubled with consumption for many years. At last she was given up to die. A neighbor told her not to give up but try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. She did so and was speedily cured, and is now in the enjoyment of good health." D. P. Jolly, Feb. 2, 1899. Avoca, N. Y.

Cures Hard Coughs

No matter how hard your cough is or how long you have had it, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the best thing you could possibly take. But it's too risky to wait until you have consumption, for sometimes it's impossible to cure this disease. If you are coughing today, don't wait until tomorrow, but get a bottle of Cherry Pectoral at once and be relieved. It strengthens weak lungs.

OBEDIENT TO FATE.

Their friendship was rather the result of a forced mutual dependence than anything else, and they drifted into it before either realized the turn events were taking. At first it had been nothing more than the interchange of a few remarks on leaving the hotel dining-room in the morning and an occasional chat on the piazza after supper. From this it became a regular thing to saunter together down to the boat landing for a pull across the lake before the sun made outdoor exercise impossible.

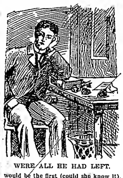
Then, because the mail came at 12, it suited them both to linger under the shade trees on the lawn until the distribution of letters began. It was on these occasions that they compared notes upon the subject of summer resorts in general and Fairview Springs in particular.

They were there for the same reason—rest and a change of air. Both were eager to exchange the quiet of the place for the rush of their everyday life. It was not easy for him to shake off the thought of his neglected law practice, and it was equally hard for her to forget the half-finished manuscripts calling for attention in her desk at home. With a frankness which was not flattering, and which would have surprised either under other circumstances, they openly discussed their dismay over the prospect of remaining two months or longer at Fairview, and bestowed their most ardent pity on all newcomers to the springs.

If, in the beginning, he had accepted the situation blindly, he was the first to realize it in its full significance, for, argue with himself as he might, there was at last no overcoming the disagreeable truth that he had given his promise to one woman and his love to another. In his inmost soul he knew he had no right to feel that perfect sense of happiness which had lately come to him, for perfect happiness it was when she was near him. It was only when he was alone that conflicting emotions took possession of him.

When he looked into her steadfast eyes he was conscious that she had moved him as no other woman had done. He did not tell himself that he had never loved until now; but he knew that it was because of her he wished he could undo the past, and this had never been the case before.

He needed her always, he would reason with himself, but whenever he used this argument he felt that she would be the first (could she know it), to assure him that he was striving after the shadow and not the substance. He was a weakling, trying to depend on her strength.



WERE ALL HE HAD LEFT.

A telegram calling her home—her sudden departure early one morning—these were things to recall her to the reality of life.

A formal little note of farewell, two or three faded roses—and a memory were all he had left to tell of the summer.

Rudely awakened from his dream of happiness, he was like a man groping in the dark. "The right way!" he said to himself. "Which is right?" With his face buried in his hands, he thought the matter out. The spell of her presence was gone, but its fragrance remained.

She also was fighting out the battle alone. It is strange that, actuated by the same feeling, and arguing along the same lines, they should have arrived at such widely different conclusions."

The letter that she wrote was not to him—but to another man.

"Forgive me," it said, "for the pain I am about to cause you, for I can only give you back your promise and ask you to forget me. There was a time when I believed that the calm friendship I had for you was love, but I know that poor human hearts were made for more, and they will have their due. Do not reproach me, for it was not my fault that I learned this too late."

Then she began to turn the pages of one of her manuscripts, wearily trying to collect her thoughts. But a while ago everything had been different. When she was tired there had been some one whose strong arms were ever ready to receive her; and now—but she could not think of it just then.

The letter that he wrote brought tears to the eyes of the girl who read it.

"I have been away a long time," it said, "but I'm coming home tomorrow. As I look through my window I can see the foliage on the mountain side changing to red and purple and yesterday I saw a flock of birds flying to the South. Think of it, the roses were in bloom when I told you good-by! Now I want to ask you to take me 'for better, for worse' before the snow marks the winter time. For better, for worse, such as I am, take me and make what you will of me. Heaven grant it may be 'for better!'"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Good Roads in Egypt.

Twenty years ago Egypt had hardly a single good road. During the last six years over 1,000 miles of good roads have been built.

A TIDAL BORE.

The Famous Wave at the Head of the Bay of Fundy and How to See It.

The bay of Fundy is known to the world chiefly on account of its tides, which rise to an immense height, seventy feet having been recorded. As these tides reach the head of the bay and are forced up the Petticodiac river the conditions are such as to form the front into an almost perpendicular wall of water, termed a "bore." This formation is a grand and exciting spectacle, and interest in the phenomenon is increasing. Large numbers of American tourists, scientific men and others visit the locality to admire its effects and study its causes. About nineteen miles from the mouth of the Petticodiac, at a point commonly known as the "bend," the river takes a turn almost at right angles to its previous course. Immediately above the bend and on a line of the Intercolonial railway is situated Moncton. The run of the rising tide first breaks into a bore at Stony creek, eight miles below Moncton. At first it is scarcely noticeable, but it gradually grows until at the bend it about reaches its maximum height. The wharves of Moncton are thus the most popular position from which to view this interesting phenomenon, says Self-Culture. The average interval from the arrival of one bore to the arrival of the next is about twelve hours and twenty-five minutes, so that the average retardation from day to day is about fifty minutes. But "his boreship" is erratic, and the daily retardation may be anywhere from forty minutes to an hour. The best time to see the bore is during the full moons of August, September or October, and if the visitor would see this natural wonder in its most beautiful aspect let him choose a bright moonlight night, rather than the daytime. Under such favorable circumstances a crowd of 400 or 500 people, one day last fall, witnessed the arrival of the bore. The schedule time for its arrival, given by the local newspapers, was 9:20 o'clock. At 9:12 the expectant crowd on Moncton's wharves heard a noise easily distinguishable as the rush of distant waters. This grew louder and louder as the bore approached and rounded the bend, and at 9:22, two minutes later than the schedule time, there appeared in full view of the spectators an almost perpendicular wall of water, five or six feet in height, rushing madly against the swift current of the stream. In some places along the head of the bore the water, beaten into a foam by its own violence, sparkled in the moonlight, while along the shore the mud plowed from the bank made the water almost black. The contrast was beautiful.

Pretty Heavy.

The duke and duchess of Connaught, on their visit to Egypt, met with several humorous experiences. One of them shows that even the Egyptians are not free from an unhappy weakness for saying just the wrong thing at a critical moment. After an inspection of the troops by the duke, outside of Omdurman, to which the duchess had accompanied him on horseback, the girths of her saddle suddenly gave way. There was no way of repairing them, and to enable her royal highness to get back with the least possible inconvenience a sort of sedan chair was improvised from a gun-carriage. On this she was carried by Egyptian gunners, who were in charge of a native officer. On the way the duchess said: "I hope your men will not be tired carrying me," and was surprised and amused to receive the ungallant reply: "Indeed, no, madame; you are no heavier than the gun they are accustomed to carry!"

Husbands and Wives.

More than one man whose name is a household word has been advanced through the untiring energy of his wife. It is a question whether ex-President Cleveland would have enjoyed as much of a political career had it not been for the popularity of Mrs. Cleveland. Through every phase of the ex-president's political life Mrs. Cleveland held sway in the hearts of the people. The first Mrs. Whitney paved the way for her husband's political success. It was through her wealth and hospitality that the ex-secretary first won his way into public life. Notable among society people is Mrs. Potter Palmer. She has made the name of Palmer famous in this country and abroad. Perhaps no man ever had a more helpful and devoted wife than the late Mr. Gladstone, or ever recognized her aid in a more chivalrous way. He paid many a touching tribute to the care she took of him and the courage with which she inspired him.

Sulphur in Alaska.

At present the annual supply of sulphur for the United States, amounting to something like 300,000 tons, comes almost entirely from Sicily. Only about 2,000 tons are produced in the United States yearly, and that from Utah. This sulphur record is in a fair way to be changed within the next 18 months, and Alaska is to furnish the change. About ten miles from Dutch Harbor stands the great volcanic mountain Makushin, rising 5,500 feet above the Pacific to the west and the Bering sea to the east, and up where the rocks are still hot and the steaming sulphurous smoke rises into the lungs in an inexhaustible deposit of almost pure sulphur. Hundreds of thousands of tons are in sight, and this territory has been taken, and in April next the work of developing will be begun.—New York Sun.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 64,492]

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I think it is my duty to write to you expressing my sincere gratitude for the wonderful relief I have experienced by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I tried different doctors, also different kinds of medicine. I would feel better at times, then would be as bad as ever.

"For eight years I was a great sufferer. I had falling of the womb and was in such misery at my monthly periods I could not work but a little before I would have to lie down. Your medicine has made a new woman of me. I can now work all day and not get tired. I thank you for what you have done for me. I shall always praise your medicine to all suffering women."—MRS. E. E. KUHN, GERMANO, OHIO.

"I have taken eight bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used two packages of your Sanative Wash, also some of the Liver Pills, and I can say that your remedies will do all that you claim for them. Before taking your remedies I was very bad with womb trouble, was nervous, had no ambition, could not sleep, and my food seemed to do me no good. Now I am well, and your medicine has cured me. I will gladly recommend your medicine to every one wherever I go."—MRS. M. L. SHEARS, GUN MARSH, MICH.

I have had rheumatism about eighteen years, but was able to be up most of the time until a year ago last May, when I was taken down and not able to move about. About six weeks ago I saw your advertisement and wrote for a sample bottle. After taking a few doses it did me so much good that I ordered some more for myself and friends, and in every case it has done wonders and given perfect satisfaction.

"Dr. Woodliff, my family physician, who has had rheumatism for fifteen years, is taking the '5 Drops,' and says it is the most efficient rheumatic medicine he has ever used."

THE FINISH OF AGGY

HIS GOVERNMENT NOW ONLY A FICTION.

Troops and Officers Are Scattered and Aguinaldo Is in Hiding—President of the Filipino Congress Surrenders to Gen. MacArthur—He Says the Congress Will Never Reassemble—Filipino Soldiers Will Lay Down Their Arms as Soon as They Learn the Truth—Severe Fight at Pavia.

Manila, Nov. 26.—Bautista, president of the Filipino congress, presented himself to Gen. MacArthur yesterday and formally renounced all further connection with the insurrection. He was one of the influential Filipinos who hesitated at the beginning of the war as to which side on which to cast his lot. He was offered a judgeship of the supreme court, but declined. He now announces that he wishes to accept the position and says that the Filipino congress and cabinet are scattered, never to reassemble. Some of the members, he adds, have returned to their homes, while others are flying for safety. Many of the congressmen have resigned, and he believes the Filipino soldiers will lay down their arms everywhere as soon as they learn the truth.

Aggy's Minister a Prisoner.

Senor Buencamino, a former member of the so-called cabinet of Aguinaldo, has been brought to Gen. Otis, a prisoner on board the transport Brutus. He had sought refuge in a village near San Fabian with Aguinaldo's mother and son. The natives disclosed his identity to Maj. Croula, who captured him. Gen. Young is still in the mountains on the trail of Aguinaldo.

-o-

Washington, Nov. 26—Gen. Otis summarizes the situation in Luzon in a dispatch to the war department in which he says that the insurgent government can no longer claim to exist; that its troops and officers are scattered and Aguinaldo in hiding.

Severe Fight at Pavia.

Washington, Nov. 26.—Fuller details of the sharp engagement between Carpenter's command and the insurgents in Iloilo have reached the department in the following dispatch from Gen. Otis:

In Panay to-day, 21st inst., when Dickman drove enemy in vicinity of Jaro, Carpenter, with two battalions, Eighteenth infantry and Bridgman's battery, had a severe engagement at Pavia, north of Iloilo. His casualties were five killed and twenty wounded; enemy driven north, with reported very heavy loss. Carpenter passed on to insurgents' stronghold, Santa Barbara, which he captured 22d inst., without loss. Nothing received from column under immediate command of Hughes, which is moving rapidly and operating north and west of Santa Barbara. Apparently Visayans friendly, not taking active part. Enemy consists of 2,000 Tagalos.

A later dispatch gives the results of the fighting at Iloilo as follows:

Hughes, Iloilo, reports enemy driven back into the mountains; insurgent capital, Cabatuan, captured. Only serious action that of Carpenter at Pavia; total casualties, five killed or since died of wounds, twenty-seven wounded. Captured ten prisoners, eighteen cannon, six rifles, quantities of ammunition. Enemy's casualties not stated.

Gunboats for Watson.

Washington, Nov. 26.—Admiral Watson's fleet in Philippine waters is about to be augmented by the three gunboats Isla de Luzon, Isla de Cuba and Don Juan de Austria, captured from Spain at the battle of Manila. Commanding officers have heretofore been assigned to the vessels and Admiral Watson has been empowered to complete the list of officers from those with the Asiatic squadron. The new acquisitions are about the size of the gunboat Marietta, and they will arrive about the time of the Brooklyn, New Orleans, Nashville and Marietta, making in all quite a large increase in the Asiatic squadron.

OUT OF SIGHT.

The Charleston Has Slipped Into Deep Water and Disappeared.

Washington, Nov. 26.—The navy department has received the following cablegram from Capt. Leutz, commanding the naval station at Cavite, dated Manila, Nov. 24:

"Culgoa reports Charleston disappeared."

The Culgoa was the relief ship sent out from Hongkong. It is believed at the navy department that the Charleston has slipped down into deep water from the steep bank on which she was resting at the bow. This report has dissipated the last hope of saving the ship.

NEWSPAPER WRECKED.

Presses and Type Destroyed in the Night by a Hostile Faction.

Omaha, Nov. 26.—Unknown parties entered the office of the Monroe Mirror during the night, destroyed the presses and dumped the type and other material into the creek. The attack is believed to be the outcome of a bitter town fight. The paper is the state organ of the Liberal party.

Immigration to America.

Washington, Nov. 26.—Reports to the immigration bureau show that the total immigration to the United States during the last four months was 115,276, an increase over that of the corresponding period of last year of 36,544.

Floods in Texas.

San Antonio, Tex., Nov. 26.—Heavy rains have fallen during the past few days in Southwest Texas. In Cotulla two creeks met and the water rushed through a portion of the city so swiftly that several persons had to be assisted out of danger. No lives were lost.

Reinforcing Russian Garrisons.

Odessa, Nov. 26.—It is reported that 10,000 troops will soon leave here to reinforce Russian garrisons in the far East.

England Wants to Buy Steamers.

Washington—Agents of the British government are endeavoring to buy auxiliary vessels of the United States navy. Direct proposals from the British government have not been received, but agents of English shipbuilding firms have made inquiries regarding the vessels for which the United States now have no need.

For a Dry Dock.

Washington—The navy department has awarded the contract for the dry dock at League Island navy yard, Philadelphia, to the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific company for $782,000.

CENSOR IS AT WORK.

Handiwork Seen in the Reports From South Africa.

London, Nov. 26.—Thus far the special dispatches describing the battle of Belmont bear a stereotyped character, proving that the hand of the censor has been at work upon them. They are too incoherent to enable the reader to form an accurate idea of the event or to place a proper estimate upon the value of the victory. All the accounts agree respecting the splendid fighting qualities exhibited on both sides. Nothing could have exceeded the sturdy courage and pluck of the British infantry in the face of terrific fire, while the Boer guns were splendidly served, the gunners standing to them with dogged determination, exposing themselves until the very last moment, and only becoming wild and inaccurate in their aim during the final deadly charge of the British infantry. All admit, however, that the victory could not be properly followed up and utilized owing to the want of sufficient cavalry.

The correspondent of the Times at Belmont says: "After the battle the laager was burned and the ammunition destroyed. Cavalry and mounted infantry on both flanks pursued the enemy but were unable to overtake the retreating Boers, who got away with their transport. The Boer rout was complete and their losses are believed to equal ours. They used some dum-dum bullets. Everything was in their favor. It is rumored that there have been some threats to assassinate recalcitrant burghers who are tired of war and are deserting."

Gen. White's dispatch of Wednesday effectually disposes of all rumors of another sortie from Ladysmith and of the defeat of the Boers. The situation in Natal is unchanged, a sortie from Estcourt to Willow Grove having little effect.

The situation at Mafeking is being regarded with anxiety in view of the impossibility of Lord Methuen being time to come. Throngs of people were waiting at the war office last evening until a late hour for a list of those killed, wounded or missing in the battle of Belmont, but nothing was published in addition to Gen. Methuen's first dispatch.

Situation at Ladysmith.

Durban, Nov. 26—An official message from Gen. White at Ladysmith, dated Nov. 22, says: "Situation unchanged. Troops well and cheerful."

The Natal Advertiser confirms the report of fighting near Willow Grange. It says: "Five thousand British left Estcourt Wednesday afternoon for a reconnoissance. They surprised the Boers at 3 o'clock Thursday morning and occupied the Boer position, bayonetting eighty of the enemy. At daybreak the Boers opened with quick firers. The British artillery was unable to reach the Boers and the British position, therefore, became untenable and was evacuated. Subsequently the artillery was brought into action and the Boers fell back. Their object having been attained the British returned to Estcourt."

Boers Are Tired of War.

London, Nov. 26. — The Daily Mail publishes the following dispatch from Belmont describing the battle: "The Boers held a position which the British troops would hold against almost any force. The British victory was complete. My estimate of the Boer losses is 300 killed and 150 wounded. The Boer prisoners are ignorant, dirty and wretched. They say that half their command, tired of the war, will refuse further service. The whole force of the fearful fight was borne by the infantry, who were obliged to climb 500 feet straight into a terrific stream of missiles. The Ninth Lancers pursued the enemy with great vigor, but the Boers, well mounted and familiar with the hills, melted before them. Possibly our victory would have been more decisive had we had more cavalry."

Washington, Nov. 26.—Mr. Marcum, the United States consul at Pretoria, has been instructed by cable to impress upon President Kruger that in the view of this government the usages of all civilized nations sanction the ministration of a neutral representative in the interest of the citizens and captives of one of the parties to a war, and he must further insist upon performing the sacred duties imposed by all considerations of humanity. This is practically an announcement of the insistance of our government upon the execution of the trust it assumed to look after the interests of British citizens in the South African republics.

D., Nov. 28.—It was expected that the town of Tabor would be the chief beneficiary of the Milwaukee railroad extension into Charles Mix county, but it is now stated that the railroad company will locate its depot one mile west of that place. If this proves true it will work considerable inconvenience to the residents, as it would virtually compel them to move their buildings and other property to the railroad, otherwise a new town would naturally spring up around the railroad depot and utterly ruin the present town of Tabor.

MINNESOTA NEWS

FROM CAPE NOME.

Fergus Falls and Pelican Rapids Men Return Home.

D. M. Taylor returned to Fergus Falls from Cape Nome recently, bringing with him substantial evidences of the wealth of that now-famous region. Mr. Taylor went to Alaska about two years ago, and was fortunate in being within a short distance of the cape when the gold discoveries there first attracted attention. He secured an interest in a number of valuable claims, worked them successfully during the summer months, refusing an offer of $40,000 for four of the best of them. About six weeks ago it was discovered that the sea shore was rich in dust at a depth of only a few feet, and their claims were quickly abandoned for this more promising field. The government refuses to give title to lands within a certain distance of the water line, and the beach is common property.

Mr. Taylor believes that at the time the winter set in, which was only a few weeks ago, fully ten thousand men were at work along the sea shore, and many of them were making an average of several hundred dollars daily. Each shoveled out his pile of pay dirt during the day and washed out the gold dust in the evening. Mr. Taylor will return to the coast in January and take the first boat for Cape Nome in the spring. He anticipates a great rush to that section at that time. Will Harris of Pelican Rapids who went north via the Edmonton route and has spent the last few months in Washington, recuperating after his terrible journey, accompanied Mr. Taylor home.

FOR THE JUDGE ALONE.

Efforts to Try a County Seat War by Jury Abandoned.

The Renville county seat contest case has been continued until Dec. 28, at Renville, when Judge Powers will hear all of the evidence, as well as determine the law, as to whether Henry Kelsey, of the Olivia Times, purposely omitted the notice calling a meeting of the county commissioners on the Bird Island petition from his paper the week that the notice was handed to him for publication, the notice having been handed to him at 7 o'clock on the morning of publication day. The placing of this case in the hands of the court was arrived at after a great deal of discussion on the part of the attorneys representing the Olivia and Bird Island sides of the contest. It was admitted by both sides that it would be next to impossible for them to secure unprejudiced jurors in Renville county, and even if such a jury were secured, the probabilities were that the members would never agree on a verdict, and hence they decided to make Judge Powers sole judge of the law and facts of the case.

The temporary injunction restraining the Renville county commissioners from calling a meeting on the petition presented by the Olivia boomers, immediately after the commissioners threw the petition out of court, was held to be in effect until the court disposed of the Kelsey case, and the continuance of this injunction will depend on the decision in that case.

DROWNED AT GRANITE FALLS.

Montevideo Merchant Walks Into Deep Water and Drowns.

Henry M. Borgen, who has been a merchant at Montevideo for a number of years, came to Granite Falls recently to consult a doctor for nervous prostration. He intended to go home on the 5 o'clock freight, but missed it. At about 12 o'clock, in company with Elias Jacobson of Myers, he started across the foot bridge to catch the passenger train for home. Jacobson was ahead, when he suddenly heard a splash in the water, and, turning, saw Borgen standing in the water, which was not deep there. He called to him to take hold of the bridge. Jacobson then ran back to the end of the bridge and called for help. The first man there saw Borgen going down stream, away from the bridge, paying no attention to what was said to him. He soon sank out of sight. It looks very much like a case of suicide. He leaves a wife and six children.

Last season a few farmers around Langdon experimented in threshing a part of their corn, and as the result was satisfactory a large number have this year threshed from 50 to 125 acres each, the result meeting with general approval, and it is thought the project will eventually take the place of the long, tedious task of husking by hand, as fully 800 bushels of shelled corn can easily be cribbed in a day, and the fodder is left in better shape at much less labor and expense.

Three buildings on Main street at Glyndon, known as "Saloon Row," burned recently with all the contents. He was immediately sentenced to ten years and six months' hard labor at Stillwater. A man by the name of Henry Borgen was drowned at Granite Falls in the Minnesota river. He was standing on the foot bridge and in some unknown manner fell into the river. Search for the body was kept up all night, and continued the following day, but as yet the searchers have been unable to discover it. He was a middle-aged man in the grocery business at Montevideo, Minn.

GEN. JOUBERT'S PLAN.

Will Attempt to Defeat the British Relieving Column.

London, Nov. 24.—Although it is evident that the situation in Natal is again becoming sufficiently alarming, nothing can be officially ascertained to allay public anxiety or the curiosity felt regarding the disposition of the reinforcements recently landed at Durban. The war office dispatches are confined to a mere recital of a few casualties at Mooi River, which confirm the report of skirmishes there but give no details as to how the engagements happened. Special correspondents are only permitted to describe Maj. Barton's camp at Mooi River as "large," or "ample." One correspondent says that 7,000 Boers are within twenty-five miles of Howick Falls, near Pietermaritzburg, and that the inhabitants are fleeing to the capital.

Evidently a considerable force of the enemy is now within thirty or forty miles of Pietermaritzburg, but it is officially announced from there that no anxiety prevails, the garrison numbering 1,000 men with six guns.

Gen. Joubert's plan, apparently, is a daring attempt to defeat the British relieving column from Durban in detail, while still attempting the reduction of Ladysmith. A serious attack on Mooi River camp is now hourly expected with the object of destroying the bridge at Weston. Should this be accomplished the Boers would be free to turn their attention again to Estcourt, while, if it failed, the enemy would retire again on Weenen or rejoin the investing forces around Ladysmith.

The Boer report that Gen. Hildyard's messenger asking Gen. White for assistance was captured causes some uneasiness, but it is argued that if Gen. Hildyard had not been strong enough to hold out he would some time ago have been obliged to retire on Pietermaritzburg. Therefore small credence is given to the story.

Nothing is known regarding the food supplies of the garrisons thus isolated. It is believed Estcourt is well provided, but there is less confidence in the case of Mooi River. There is no further news from the Western frontier except the list of casualties.

Firing at Mafeking.

Pretoria, Nov. 24. — Gen. Snyman, who is outside of Mafeking, reports heavy fighting Monday afternoon. The British briskly fired upon the French cannon and Boer trenches from the forts. The Boers briskly replied with a bombardment. The loss of the British is unknown. One Boer was wounded.

London, Nov. 24—The Daily Mail has the following from Pietermaritzburg under Wednesday's date:

"Your correspondent managed to escape from the Mooi river district yesterday before the arrival of 6,000 Boers, who are looting the farmsteads in all directions. The native Boers, encouraged by the success of the Transvaalers, join in the looting. The main body of Boers made a rapid advance from Ulundi southwest to Estcourt, to a point near Fort Nottingham, south of the railway, in a single day. They are within forty miles of Pietermaritzburg at the farthest, and it is said that they intend to attack the town."

DESECRATING CHURCHES.

Insurgents and Chinese Were Guilty and Not the American Soldiers.

San Francisco, Nov. 24.—Rev. Father McKinnon, chaplain in the United States army, defends Gen. Funston and Col. Metcalf from the charges of desecrating churches. He says churches in the Philippines were not desecrated by American troops, but by insurgents and Chinamen. The priest is positive that Col. Metcalf did not shoot a prisoner in cold blood, as has been alleged.

In reply to Gen. Funston's challenge to prove the truth of his assertions regarding the looting of Caloocan churches the San Francisco Monitor, in a card from the editor, T. A. Connolly, invites the general to bring a libel suit, promising to donate $2,000 to the Red Cross society if he wins it.

THE CLOVEN FOOT

NO LONGER CONCEALED UNDER REPUBLICAN FINANCIERING.

The McKinley Currency Bill Calls For Gold Standard, Gold Bonds, Greenback Retirement and Entire Surrender of Money Issuing Functions to the National Banks—Uncle Sam Out, the Money Power In—Reform Forces Accept Anew the Gauge of Battle—Early Conventions May Result—The January Banquet—Persistent Talk of Towne For Vice President—State Political Points—Inspector Reishus' Retrenchment Balked By Anti-Reform Commissioners—The Week's Round-Up.

Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, Dec. 4, 1899.

The financial cloven foot of the McKinley administration is out from under the folds of false pretense which have concealed the wretched member since the St. Louis convention. From this on, just exactly what the administration, and that portion of his party which will support the money power to the last, intend, will be clear to the American people. Of course this has been discounted very largely by the guessing at what the proposed currency bill contains, but the bill as now ready to go to congress with the full sanction of McKinley and the Republican majority, is a clean cut and unequivocal surrender to the money power. The salient features are:

The gold standard, the present gold dollar as the unit of value, and all forms of money redeemable in gold.

The power to issue interest bearing bonds at will to obtain gold, and all existing bonds payable in gold.

Retirement of the non-interest bearing greenbacks from circulation by redemption in gold whenever presented.

Extension of the powers and special privileges of national banks, authorizing increase of circulation to par value of bonds and providing for branch banks with as low as $25,000 circulation.

Reducing the tax on national bank circulation to one-tenth of 1 per cent—one-tenth of present tax.

No further coinage of any silver except the fractional coins, and recoining of worn and mutilated coins.

The above are the provisions of the bill bearing on political issues, and if they do not make the money question at once a live one again, then it will be surprising. In fact from the money question being somewhat relegated to the rear of other issues, this open declaration for all that, nay more, than the money power has ever dared to ask, will bring the financial issues into the campaign with more vehemence than ever. All who stood pat on it before will be re-inforced by that large number of Republicans who have refused to believe that their party would ever become the single gold standard party. They were buncoed by international agreement in 1896, and will refuse to be gold-bricked in 1900.

It chanced opportunely that the Silver Republican executive committee was in session at Chicago when the currency bill was promulgated. They accepted the new gauge of battle, and will organize for a fight of co-operation with the Democratic and Peoples parties, and this time not alone on the financial question, but will be as open and courageous on other issues as they were vigorous and effective on free coinage in '96. All preliminary arrangements were made for a great convention, and a specially important act was the appointment of Hon. E. S. Corser to head a special committee charged with the co-operative work of the organization. Mr. Corser is thus called to what will practically be the working head of the national free coinage forces. Minnesota well knows that this means results.

There are increasing indications that early conventions of the reform forces and allies may be held, possibly in April, at least ahead of the Republicans.

The Chicago meeting showed absolute harmony and absolutely unbroken ranks in all parts of the country. Not a name is spoken of for president but Bryan, and there was found so pronounced a sentiment for Mr. Towne for Bryan's running mate as to render it impossible for Mr. Towne's closest friends to longer ignore it. These have opposed the suggestion because of their expectations of a greater future and knowledge that as a rule vice presidents and vice presidential candidates have not often been prominent thereafter. There is no retired list for C. A. Towne.

Dairy Commissioner Bowler's deputies swooped down on Duluth oleo dispensers last week and numerous offenders were plucked and, being convicted contributed fines to the state fund. The state inspectors found Duluth a good field, the laws as to oleomargarine being flagrantly violated. Numerous grocerymen, hotel keepers and restaurant-ers are found selling renovated butter, butterine and oleo, without the proper labels. Each violation is assessed at $27.50. A total of several hundred dollars in fines was collected, and the Duluth reports credit the department, which is no respecter of persons, with some very clever work.

Specimen outrageous Republican falsehoods on the grain department have been the Republican statements of the action of Inspector Reishus in attempting to retrench by dropping three officials in the St. Paul department. The Red Wing Republican put this lie more wickedly than most of its contemporaries, actually declaring that "the Democratic majority" of the commissioners refused to confirm the inspector's recommendation for removal, "in order to stop discharges made for partisan purposes," declaring the men were able and trained, and that the commission "could not afford to let them go."

Now, this is the truth. The three were Colonel Becker, brother of Commissioner Becker, drawing $150 per month, who has not done a rap of work since Inspector Reishus has been in Clausen's place, and who, it is officially stated, had not done any work for at least two years, not even to the extent of signing his name, unless in drawing his pay. Another is Deputy Frank Curtis, drawing $115 per month, and the third O. H. Kirke, a helper, drawing $62.50. Inspector Reishus found that the work of the last two could be done by a remaining deputy, Mr. Squires. He therefore recommended the dismissal of all three officials, at a total saving of $327.50 per month. Reform Commissioner Ringdahl voted for the inspector's recommendation. His colleagues agree in letting out Colonel Becker, but made his dismissal Dec. 15, so that he is only cut off 15 days, since he would have gone Jan. 1, anyhow, on which date we shall have an actual Reform and Democratic majority on the board by a successor to Judge Mills. It was clearly understood that the recommendation for removal of the three was because they were no earthly use.

Inspector Clausen had carried these useless men for years.

The Minneapolis Jackson day banquet for Jan. 10 is going along splendidly. Tickets are already on sale and going fast. Hon. William Banquet Baldwin says that it is bound to be the biggest thing ever known in the Northwest. Address him, Minneapolis, for tickets and particulars.

The following was Hon. Erving Winslow's Thanksgiving greeting to William the Filipino conqueror:

"Lovers of liberty, who would rather be the hunted patriot than the blood-guilty usurper today will nevertheless use it to pray that he, who has given America her first Thanksgiving of shame, may be brought to repentance and a better mind."

And the McKinley war is at the women and children stage, Aguinaldo's poor mother in jail, his child dead in the woods, his family scattered, with his brave men, his wife's apparel parcelled among our pursuing regulars.

The Cubans are howling for that "Independence" they were to have. Soon the administration will openly ask them if they were green enough to think independence was ever intended.

And the "Brother Abners" are getting quite as tired as the Cubans. They want those franchise plums. McKinley should get a move on him.

National Democratic Press Bulletin: Here is an object lesson which will not fail to interest a very considerable number of American people:

Nails in 1898—$1 50.
Nails in 1899—$4.35.
Increase in factory wages—10 per cent
Increase in trust profits—180 per cent.
Increase in the cost to consumer—190 per cent.

Professor W. W. Folwell of the university is out in a very strong address against the trusts. Now if the most excellent professor could only get himself out against the party that produces the trusts!

If only Chairman Steele of the Republican state central committee, had his red ink back, with which he endorsed Frank Wright's orgin circular, he would be perfectly satisfied, and agree not to do it again.

The Minnesota congressional delegation is at Washington and all that remains is the mischief wrought for the goppites through Merriam, Byrnes, et al, and the resulting bad taste in the G. O. P. mouth.

And so the scheme, after all, was to do up Bob Evans, and boom Captain Van Sant. It is all right for the captain, but a hard dose for Collins, Clapp, Heatwole and others. Sly Bill Merriam.

And Schoolmaster McCleary's name is not even mentioned in the Republican currency bill. Can such things be, and not overcome us like a summer hailstorm?

The Minneapolis anti-imperialist mass meeting promises to be a hummer. The goppite press worry about the few Democrats participating. Why that's an anti-McKinley show, of those who won the gold brick in '00. The Democrats and Populists will sit in the pews and enjoy the sermon.

The gold standard has wiped out the great house of Harper & Bros. at the same time that fire cleans out the Lippincotts. The Harpers fail for $5,500,000, $2,000,000 of it unsecured, and the Lippincotts lose $3,000,000. But fire is better than the gold standard, for there is insurance, while the gold standard loss benefits nobody. Both houses have the sincere sympathy of all the literati.

That tremendous force in the awakening of 1896, "Coin" Harvey, is writing a book on the newer issues, in the style of Schoolmaster "Coin," which will be circulated by the national Democratic committee. The title will be "Money, Trusts and Imperialism," in elucidating which "Coin" will be shown grown to long trousers, instead of in knickerbockers. The word "Trusts" is spelled out in barb wire letters, and "Imperialism" is covered with frost and ice, and other like unique figures. The work will be ready Jan. 10, and all lovers of the cause are asked to assist in its circulation. Send to the Hon. J. G. Johnson, chairman national executive committee, Chicago, for particulars.

Warden Wolfer is out, and General C. McC. Reeve in. Who said that the world do not move?

TOM REED'S RULES

WILL BE OBSERVED IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Henderson of Iowa Unanimously Nominated for Speaker by the Republican Caucus—Makes a Speech in Which He Urges Republicans to Stick to Their Posts—Grosvenor Re-Elected Chairman of the Caucus—Richardson of Tennessee Nominated by Democrats.

Washington, Dec. 5.—The caucus of the house Republicans which assembled in the hall of the house of representatives Saturday night was both interesting and important. The selection of the candidate for speaker and other house officers was a cut-and-dried affair. Before the adjournment of the caucus, after a discussion lasting almost two hours, the Republican members, without a dissenting vote, decided to re-enact the Reed rules.

The selection of a candidate for speaker by the party in power is usually very animated; but months ago all the other candidates who entered the field after the retirement of Speaker Reed abandoned the contest, leaving Gen. David B. Henderson of Iowa the unopposed candidate. His nomination was therefore a foregone conclusion, and he was nominated by acclamation.

The officers of the last house, except Col. Russell, the sergeant-at-arms, were renominated without opposition, as follows: Clerk, Alexander McDowell of Pennsylvania; doorkeeper, W. J. Glenn of New York; postmaster, J. C. McElroy of Ohio, and chaplain, Rev. Henry Couden of Michigan. Col. Russell was not a candidate for re-election and Col. Henry A. Casson of Wisconsin was nominated in his stead. The caucus was presided over by Gen. Grosvenor of Ohio, who was re-elected chairman of the caucus. Mr. Loudenslager of New York was re-elected secretary.

Gen. Henderson's name was presented by Mr. Payne of New York and seconded by Mr. Hopkins of Illinois, both of whom had been candidates originally. The roll was not called. The nomination was made by acclamation. Gen. Henderson came to the capitol and remained in the speaker's room in the rear of the house lobby until after the house officers had been selected. He was escorted to the rostrum of the house by Messrs. Hopkins of Illinois, Payne of New York and Sherman of New York. Gen. Henderson made a brief speech acknowledging the honor. He dwelt upon the responsibilities of the party, whose narrow majority, he said, required every man to keep at his post.

The Democratic Leader.

The Democrats of the house of representatives at their caucus Saturday afternoon selected Representative J. D. Richardson of Tennessee as their candidate for speaker after a spirited contest which lasted through six ballots. This carries with it the Democratic leadership on the floor. The candidates against Mr. Richardson were Representatives De Armond of Missouri, Bankhead of Alabama and Sulzer of New York. Representative Hay of Virginia was elected chairman of the caucus by a vote of 77 to 62 cast for Mr. McRae of Arkansas.

The first ballot for speaker resulted: Richardson, 43; De Armond, 38; Bankhead, 34; Sulzer, 25. The four following ballots showed little change. At the end of the fifth ballot Mr. Underwood of Alabama withdrew Mr. Bankhead's name, and on the first roll call of the sixth ballot about two-thirds of Mr. Bankhead's supporters went to Richardson. At the end of the first roll call the vote stood: Richardson, 65; De Armond, 45; Sulzer, 20. Before the second roll call began Mr. Sulzer withdrew and asked his friends to vote for Richardson. There was a general stampede to the Tennesseean and he was nominated on the sixth ballot, receiving 90 votes against 47 for De Armond and 2 for Sulzer. The nomination was then made unanimous. Mr. Richardson was escorted to the hall and made a felicitous speech, thanking his colleagues for the honor they had conferred upon him.

SUICIDE OF TWO FARMERS.

Philo Conyes and Lewis G. Merrill, Prosperous Citizens, Kill Themselves Near Belvidere, Ill.

Belvidere, Ill., Dec. 5.—Philo Conyes, a wealthy farmer, committed suicide in Capron with a revolver. He was eighty years old and had lived here for fifty years. Despondency, caused by illness, is given as the cause. He leaves a wife and two sons. One of the latter is mayor of Poplar Grove, this county. Almost at the same hour the lifeless body of Lewis G. Merrill was found hanging in his barn near Kingston. He was a prosperous farmer, but had become insane. He leaves a wife and family.

WILL SUCCEED CONSUL MACRUM.

Adelbert F. Hay, Son of the Secretary of State, to Go to South Africa.

Washington, Dec. 5.—The president has designated Adelbert F. Hay to proceed at once to South Africa as the representative of the state department and take the place of Mr. Macrum, the present United States consul at Pretoria. The state department has yielded to Mr. Macrum's repeated appeals to be relieved, and he will not await the arrival of Mr. Hay before quitting his post. Mr. Hay is the son of the secretary of state.

Contributions From Jamaica.

Kingston, Jam., Dec. 5.—Following the example of Demerara, the mayor of Kingston has launched a popular subscription to contribute to a fund for the families of the British soldiers in South Africa. The Jamaica military men have agreed to contribute one day's pay each.

Marconi's System in Hawaii.

Honolulu, Dec. 5. — Contracts have been made for connecting all the islands of the Hawaiian group by the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy.

BOERS UNDERRATED.

Now Regretfully Admitted on All Sides.

London, Dec. 5. — The week opens without a word of news such as the British public is so anxiously awaiting. With a larger army in the field than the country has ever before mobilized it can be said that the loss of 3,500 men entailed before the enemy's borders have been crossed, is a serious matter, and, while there is no feeling of despondency as to the eventual result of the war, it is regretfully admitted on all sides that the strength of the Boer resistance has been woefully underrated.

It is now seen that the attempt to hold a useless position at Mafeking was a serious tactical mistake as also was the endeavor to keep the large civil population in Kimberley.

Perhaps the brightest spot for English readers to-day is the announcement that President McKinley has designated the son of Secretary Hay to succeed Mr. Macrum in Pretoria. The Daily Telegraph says: "This appointment is a graceful concession on the part of the United States government to British feeling. Our countrymen's interests will be safe in the hands of the new consul."

South African news is now six days in arrears. The censorship does not yet permit details of the Modder River battle to be transmitted. Some vague statements have been published in the Cape Town papers, and, according to these the Boers numbered 8,000 men and were intrenched on both banks of the stream, although mostly on the northern bank. The British, according to these accounts, drove the enemy across the river, compelling them to retreat, and established themselves on both sides of the river. These details, however, are too meager to enable an accurate idea of the engagement to be formed. A dispatch has been received in London that Lord Methuen is again in the field, and it is also said that Count Gleichen, who was wounded in the fighting at Modder River, was struck by a bullet in the neck. Serious news comes from the northern sections of Cape Colony. The whole border district between Colesberg and Burgersdorp has declared for the Boers. In Venterstad alone more than 2,000 have joined the rebellion. The farmers have formed a commandeering company and talk confidently of a triumphal march on Cape Town. Gen. Buller's proclamation has been torn down and trampled upon and the loyalists are bidden to hurry to Cape Town to prepare coffee for the rebels.

British Transport on the Rocks.

London, Dec. 5.—The war office publishes the following dispatch from Cape Town, dated yesterday: "The transport Ismore is ashore on the rocks in St. Helena bay. The troops have been safely landed, but the horses are still on board. H. M. S. Doris and Niobe, with the transport Columbian, have gone to her assistance. Col. Kekewich reports, under date of Thursday, that the Bechuana police captured the Boer laager west of Kimberley on Tuesday. Communication by searchlight with Kimberley has been established from Modder River."

As Told by Boers.

Pretoria, Dec. 5.—Commandant Dutmot (probably Dutoit) sends the following report to the council of war from Kimberley: "Early yesterday morning the British made a sortie, supported by cannon and Maxims. Under cover of darkness they advanced in the direction of Bloemhof. Two hundred burghers encountered them and brought up an additional gun. Nine burghers were killed and seventeen wounded. The British left two on the ground, but an ambulance removed these."

Work of Boer Looters.

Durban, Natal, Dec. 5. —The Natal Mercury publishes the following dispatch from its correspondent at Frere: "The Boers have reconnoitered at their old positions near Colenso, back of Grobler's Klopf, and everything points to a determined attempt to prevent the British crossing the Tugela river. The reports of wanton destruction of property by Boer looters are confirmed.

Boers Were Compelled to Retire.

Pretoria, Dec. 5.—Commandant Delarey has reported to President Kruger that the burghers, in spite of their determined defense at Gras Pan Nov. 25, were completely surrounded by the British and were compelled to retire.

COMPELLED TO FLEE.

Mob of Women and Girls Drive Out Non-Union Men.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Dec. 5.—A week ago 600 miners employed in the mines of the Diamondville Coal and Coke company at Diamondville, Wyo., struck for an increase in wages. Their demands were refused by the company and after a short shut-down operations were resumed with a small force of non-union men. At an early hour yesterday morning a mob of 300 women and girls, armed with guns, knives, clubs and stones, marched to the mines and compelled the operators to flee. The miners at work were dragged from the mines and also driven away. Several were injured by being struck with clubs, and one man was shot at, presumably by one of a number of strikers concealed near the mines. The small force of deputies guarding the property of the company was powerless. To-day it is expected there will be more trouble when the company attempts to resume. The miners have been importing arms and ammunition.

Mrs. A. B. Stickney, wife of the president of the Chicago Great Western railroad, is dead at her home in St. Paul. She has been a sufferer for some time.

Dr. McGlynn's Health Poor.

Newburg, N. Y., Dec. 5.—While Rev. Dr. Edward McGlynn rested quietly yesterday, his condition excites alarm. He suffers from kidney trouble of a probably chronic character, and his heart is probably affected.

Suicide of a Captain.

Washington, Dec. 5. — The war department has received the following from Gen. Otis: "Lieut. Col. Brereton, captain Twenty-fifth infantry, while temporarily insane, committed suicide at Santa Tomasa."

SOME SEVERE FIGHTING.

Mexicans and Yaquis Have Had Several Engagements.

Austin, Tex., Dec. 5. — Information reaching here yesterday from Ortis, State of Sonora, Mex., states that Marshal Terhune, an expert mining engineer who has been in Yaqui country for several months past arrived at Ortis and announced that since Nov. 18 the Yaqui Indians and Mexican military forces have had several severe engagements, attended with loss of life and a number of wounded. The first of these engagements was on Nov. 18, just north of Cochri, and during the engagement there were 48 Indians and five soldiers killed outright. In addition thereto there were 23 soldiers wounded and something over 100 squaws and children captured by the military forces. These prisoners will be sent to Guaymas by the military authorities to be held as hostages. The battle was between the main bodies of both factions. The Indians were finally put to flight. In addition to this engagement there were several others of minor importance during the week following that date, but no information as to the results of the latter engagements is forthcoming.

HOSTILE TO ZELAYA.

Growing Feeling Against the Nicaraguan Government.

Kingston, Jam., Dec. 5.—Passengers by yesterday's steamer from Nicaraguan ports say that there is a growing feeling of hostility toward President Zelaya on account of his recent decree expelling Mgr. Pereira, bishop of Nicaragua, in reply to the latter's protest against the law passed by the Nicaraguan congress on Oct. 14 declaring that all donations by the people of lands, cattle or other property to the church should be subject to the civil government and be sold and applied to the purposes designated by the donors by the municipal governments instead, as before, by the ecclesiastical authorities. Although President Zelaya is very popular with the Nicaraguan masses the edict of expulsion is regarded as harsh in the extreme, and the president's political opponents are improving the present occasion to bring about a revulsion of popular feeling by taking advantage of the powerful undercurrents of clerical influence.

FRENCH AMBASSADOR DEPARTS.

Leaves London, It Is Said, as a Protest Against the Speech of Secretary Chamberlain.

London, Dec. 5. — The French ambassador has returned to Paris. A report comes from Paris that the British ambassador has applied for two months' leave of absence. The departure of the French ambassador, it is believed, is intended as a protest against Secretary Chamberlain's speech. It is said he will remain away until some explanation or qualification of Mr. Chamberlain's language has been publicly offered by Lord Salisbury. The feeling here is that the relations of the two countries are in a critical. At the French embassy it was said that M. Cambon had left on private business.

Seconds Gen. Otis.

San Francisco, Dec. 5—United States Consul General Haywood has returned from Manila, China and Japan. The consul expects to be recalled by next February, as it is expected that American laws will have been extended to the islands by that time. Mr. Haywood is a supporter of the policy of Gen. Otis in the Philippines, where he thinks good work that will soon be completed successfully is being done.

Harry H. Charles, of Quincy, Ill., has submitted a novel plan to the postoffice plan for a C. O. D. department in connection with the proposed parcel post delivery. His plan would make the postoffice the agent of the merchant. Parcels mailed at any postoffice in the country could be delivered and collected for in any other part of the country. The same rule would apply to the whole country. The postmaster general is greatly taken up with the plan and it may be adopted in the near future, particularly as the attorney general sees no constitutional hindrance in its way.

There is now much contention in the navy department over the large bills for pilotage sent in by captains of nearly every warship in the service, and the authorities frankly admit that naval officers, great as is their skill in battle and in the accurate use of heavy guns, know almost nothing of harbors, charts or the art of steering vessels in the most open channels. This admission, perhaps, explains why the American navy, acknowledged invincible in actual fight, manned by the finest crews and cleverest officers, has nevertheless been a standing joke in time of peace and why so many American ships have run aground or collided with rocks and snags.

It is reported that the United States department of agriculture is actively engaged in originating an orange that will bear a greater degree of frost than any now grown. At first sight this feat might appear difficult to accomplish, but when we remember that we have apples that will not stand severe climatic conditions, and that apples have been produced that will stand such conditions, we see that there is hope. To illustrate: The best apples of the eastern states, such as the Baldwin, will not grow at all in some western states. It has taken years to develop apples like the Wealthy that will stand. We might also mention the Ben Davis, which grows abundantly all over the west and resists all kinds of hard conditions. So the government may succeed in its undertaking.

Carbolic acid poisoning cases have become so common in every community as to suggest an investigation of drug-store practice in this direction. It should not be easy to obtain so deadly an article. But Ella Hyland, a 14 year old Chicago school girl, died from the effects of this poison, which she had little difficulty in obtaining. Such a case is a striking comment on the indiscriminate sale of this dangerous drug. In the face of the law prohibiting the sale of poisons without due precaution, it seems astonishing that a young girl should have purchased a quantity of this acid sufficient to destroy life. The unfortunate child stated that the acid was to be used for removing stains from a floor. Though cognizant that it could be needed for no such purpose the drug clerk, with a commonplace warning, handed the child the means of destroying her life.

Miss Helen Gould is again proving herself "the soldiers' friend." She is supplying the men at the front with traveling libraries. The United States transport Thomas, which recently sailed for Manila, carried two of these libraries for the troops in the Philippines. Within the next few days similar libraries will be sent to the troops in Cuba and Porto Rico. The men at Forts Hamilton and Slocum have already received their boxes of books. The libraries are put up in oak cases with room for a hundred or more volumes in each case. When the men at one army post have read the books in their library the case is sent to another post, thus forming a circulating library in America, Cuba, Porto Rico, the Hawaiian Islands, Guam and the Philippines. The books consist of works of travel, biographies, novels, a few hymn books, and Bibles. Altogether Miss Gould has given more than a thousand new books.

No item of lame wrists and bandages, rubber and cotton wrappings, sleep famine or weakened pulse, was omitted from the published reports of an eight hundred mile bicycle record recently made in ninety-two hours by a woman. Her custom was as ladylike and as worthy of emulation as the motive of the feat itself, which was "to gratify pique and pride and outdo all other women."

Medical journals are calling attention to the fact that unimpaired hearing in railroad employes is essential to the safety of the traveling public as normal eyesight. A recent examination in Europe developed the fact that out of 32 firemen and engine drivers only three possessed normal hearing.

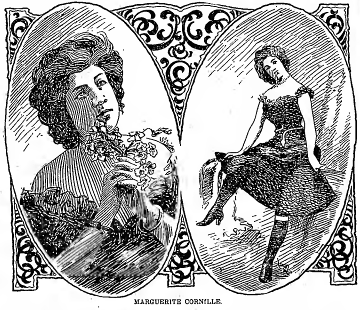
FROM A CONVENT TO FAME

Marguerite Cornille, One of the Greatest of French Comediennes.

(From San Francisco Examiner.)

In the whole history of the stage there is no record of more rapid rise to fame and fortune than in the story of the short career of Marguerite Cornille, the pretty French girl who is at the Orpheum this week. Four years ago she was one of a bevy of girls in a boarding school in the south of France. She was then a little over 13 years of age. She is today acknowledged one of the greatest of French comediennes. She is a fully developed woman of great beauty, and commands a salary which would excite the envy of a bank president.



MARGUERITE CORNILLE.

When Marguerite was at school she took part in all the little entertainments, sang in the school choir and was a general favorite, though she gave no evidence of the talents which have won her fame on two continents. When 15 years of age, during a visit to Paris, the girl's beauty first, her singing and dramatic power next, brought her into prominence.

Her first public appearance was at a charity concert. She sang a few simple songs. She woke up next morning to find the papers full of the story of a marvel who had come, all unheralded, from the south of France. Theatrical managers read the ravings of the excited journalists, and Marguerite found herself a very much sought-after young lady. Her parents were in very moderate circumstances, and when they received from one of the big theatrical managers in Paris an offer of a good salary for the services of their daughter, they lost no time in accepting.

Then Paris heard, and, as far as Paris was concerned, Coralie was queen. Week after week her engagement continued. Then she began to receive offers from London managers. Her employers raised her salary. Two years ago she left France for London, where she repeated her Paris experience. New York was next to capitulate to a six months' engagement.

THE FRENCH MINISTER OF WAR

Has Performed a Great Task Quietly and Gradually.

The task of the minister of war has probably been the greatest ever imposed upon a French statesman, says the New York Times. He had two objects in view, seeming impossible to attain together. He must conciliate. He must enforce republican principles. He made no public announcement of his program. He issued no manifesto of his policy. He accepted the republic and her institutions as self-evident facts. His work was to be performed by actions, not words. With perfect dignity he transferred officers of high rank whose conduct showed they were not in sympathy with the actual republic. He elevated officers whom he knew the people could trust. By a series of actions of great tact he made the army learn the lesson, never before taught it, that it was the servant, not the master of the people. He performed the work unmindful alike of the reproaches of his sometime royalist friends and of the insults heaped upon him by such men as Rochefort and Drumont. And so quietly and gradually has his work been done that it has not attracted the attention of Parisian correspondents, who are evidently at a loss to account for the paucity of sensational news.

This Saxe Throne Went Begging.

(From the Youth's Companion.)

Queen Victoria's sons have inherited from their father, the Prince Consort, a pretty principality and throne in Germany. This is Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, a duchy with a territory of about 750 square miles—three-fourths of the area of Rhode Island—and a population exceeding 200,000. It is not a stronghold of power and influence, but a good deal of money goes with it, and makes it worth while to keep it in the family. The prince of Wales renounced his rights to the duchy because he was heir to the English throne. The duke of Edinburgh accepted the inheritance, but he has no son to succeed him. The duke of Connaught was the next in line, but he and his son have renounced their rights. The heir to the throne is the son of the late duke of Albany, the queen's fourth son. He is a schoolboy, in his fifteenth year, and has no prospects in England. He will now go to Germany to finish his education, and will cease to be an English prince. He will owe allegiance to the German emperor, and will probably serve his time in the army. The inheritance has been arranged by Queen Victoria, whose will is law in the English royal family. She has provided for one of her favorite grandsons a snug and comfortable little throne on the continent, where he will have little to do, and where his income will be large.

MUST WORK TOGETHER.

Parents Should Be Careful Not to Question Each Other's Decisions.

Before giving a command a mother should ask herself if it is necessary, and also whether she is prepared to enforce it in case of disobedience; if she is not, the command had better not be given, says the Ladies' Home Journal. The authority of one parent must be upheld by the other if the best results are to be secured in the government of their children. Whatever their private differences of opinion may be, neither should ever, by word or look, question the decisions of the other in the presence of the children. The word of either should be law in the household, and this cannot be if the partner who should be the most loyal in upholding it is an opposing power. The line of conduct to be followed should be decided between them, and in unexpected emergencies the private judgment of one should give way to the expressed wish of the other. "Your father wishes it," or "Your mother thinks it best," should bring at least outward agreement. "If a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand," and if the parents are pitted one against the other the effect on the children will be disastrous to any sort of discipline. The fullest liberty is found within the limits of law, and children who are trained to obedience can be permitted far more freedom than those who can not be trusted out of sight for fear the liberty permitted them will degenerate into license. The child whom experience has convinced that his parents' prohibitions are not arbitrary, but are founded on kindness and justice, will not often disregard them. Lapses there may be, as no human beings are perfect. But the lapses will not be many, and from the nature of the case they will bring their own punishment, convincing the offender, as nothing else will do, that the path of obedience is not only the safest, but the pleasantest to walk in.

Insect Pests of Spruce and Pine.

In a bulletin recently published by the West Virginia Agricultural Experiment station an account is given of investigations to determine the cause of the unhealthy conditions of the spruce and pine. Prof. Hopkins gives a list of 197 species of insects which infest these trees, about one-half being injurious, while the remainder are merely parasitic upon the pests, and are therefore either beneficial or indifferent. Most of the harm, however, seems to be done by wood-boring beetles, and many illustrations are given of their curious burrows. The destruction caused by these insect pests has resulted in the loss of many hundred thousand dollars' worth of the finest timber in the state of Virginia.

Dad's Trousers.

A poet writes: "When dad has worn his trousers out, they pass to brother John, then mother trims them round about and William puts them on. When William's legs too long have grown, the trousers fail to hide 'em, so Walter claims them for his own, and hides himself inside 'em. Next Sam's fat legs they close invest, and when they won't stretch tighter, they're turned and shortened up for me—the writer. A DOOR OF REFUGE

This thing, which is not at all pretty, has the distinction of having been perhaps the loveliest and most beautiful sight that many men ever saw—at the time. The time referred to was when they were racing for life. Then the sight of this ugly piece of metal was finer than anything else in the world could have been to them, because it was the knocker on the door of the sanctuary of St. Cuthbert in Durham cathedral. In the old times criminals who could reach the sanctuary before their pursuers got them, were housed, fed and protected for thirty-seven days, during which time not even the king might harm them. If this old knocker could speak, there would come from it thrilling and rare and sorrowful stories. The hands of nobles and of beggars, of vile murderers and of persecuted women, of swaggering duelists and of gentlemen of the road, all have wielded it lustily and anxiously. The last one to touch it and to claim sanctuary was admitted on Sept. 10, 1524. No record remains of who he was. He and his crime have been forgotten long ago.

REGINALD'S BRIDE.

Marion Grey was the child of wealthy parents, having been brought up in luxury and given a good education. Her mother died when she was 12 years of age, leaving her father to rear his motherless child as best he could.

His business did not prosper after his wife's death, and through the dishonesty of his partner he became almost reduced to bankruptcy. He went to work with the men that he had formerly employed, working night and day, straining his eyes to their uttermost, and finally causing total blindness. At this he sold his property and Marion was obliged to go to work.

She engaged a small tenement and searched daily for work, but to no avail. On returning home one day, tired and disheartened, her father said to her: "Marion, Mrs. Young called here today, and is going abroad with her husband, and would like to find a trustworthy person to take the care of her little boy, Harold. She heard of our circumstances, and thought that you might take this position as governess, and yet be near your old father. What do you think about it, my dear?"

"Well, father," said Marion in a cheerful tone, for she never allowed her father to see her downhearted, "do you think that you could stand the annoyance of this child, for he is but five years of age and has been indulged greatly?"

"My daughter," said her father, "it does seem as if this is a plan by which you can meet the expenses and yet be near me during the day."

Nothing more was said, and the following day Marion called on Mrs. Young and everything was settled satisfactorily. She brought Harold home with her, for he had been attracted to Marion at once, and Mr. and Mrs. Young were to sail the following day. The Youngs were people of wealth and attended the same church as Marion had done from childhood, and they felt well pleased at being able to find such a trustworthy person with whom to leave Harold.

Marion was in the habit of taking Harold for a stroll during the latter part of the day, and it was during one of these strolls that Harold exclaimed: "Why, Auntie, we meet that gentleman every day."

The gentleman, hearing the remark, turned and said: "Good afternoon."

"Good afternoon, sir," said Marion.

"Pardon me, but the child called you 'Auntie.' May I ask if he is your nephew?" said the gentleman.

"O, no, sir! I am Miss Grey, and have charge of him for a few months while his parents are abroad," said Marion.

"I am fond of children, and I should judge that this lad is about the same age as my young brother, whom I have not seen since a babe." After saying a few words to Harold, he wished them good afternoon and passed on.

SUDDENLY THE DOOR OPENED.

Marion called Harold and walked leisurely home, little knowing what an impression she had made on this new acquaintance. Upon entering the house, Harold exclaimed: "O, grandpa, we met a real nice gentleman, and he talked with auntie!"

Mr. Grey made no reply, but during the evening asked Marion who the gentleman was. Marion replied that it was one that they had met frequently in their strolls, and Harold had opened the conversation by his childish remarks. "His name is Mr. Reginald Stacey, and he lives next door," she said.

"Stacey!" repeated Mr. Grey. "That sounds familiar. I once had dealings with one by that name, but he has passed away."

As time passed the meetings between Marion and her friend became more frequent and what was at first a mere acquaintance soon ripened into a deep affection, until one day Reginald said: "Marion, I am going away to complete my education, but there is something that I wish to tell you before going."

"Marion, I have loved you from the first sight, my dear," said Reginald.

"But, Reginald, what of my father? I love you, but I cannot leave him," said Marion.

"You and your father shall never be separated," he answered.

After spending some time in making promises and endearing words, he bade her a fond good-by.

That evening Marion told her father the whole story.

A little later on she received letters from Reginald, and often wondered why he did not speak about his people in them, but, thinking that the year would soon pass and having her time taken up with Harold and her father, she decided that on his return she would ask him about them. As time passed away rapidly, Mr. and Mrs. Young returned from abroad and took Harold home, paying Marion well. On her next visit to Marion and her father, Mrs. Young stated that she wished her to come with her a few days to help prepare for her older son's homecoming and that she was to bring her father also.

Marion was downhearted, for she had not heard from Reginald for some time. In his last letter he had said that he had graduated and his parents had returned home, and that he would soon join her.

Marion took up her new work, trying to be satisfied, and on the day of the arrival of the expected one, this being Mrs. Young's older son, Marion was in the sitting-room, and suddenly the door opened and in came Harold, saying: "My big brother has come," and Marion, looking up, exclaimed: "O, Reginald;" and he clasped her to him in a fond embrace. At this moment Marion's father and Mr. and Mrs. Young entered the room, and Marion demanded an explanation from them, which Mrs. Young laughingly gave.

"I was once Mrs. Stacey, and my son and I were separated soon after his father's death. I then married Mr. Young, whose son you have had the care of during the last year and one half. Reginald had not seen Harold since a baby, and, as I had not told him the name of the person with whom I had left Harold, he did not know he was the child in your care, although he felt strongly attracted to him. After he came abroad to us and told us of you, we decided to keep things hidden from you until his return, wishing to surprise you and your father. We will be happy to see you and Reginald and you father settled in a home of your own." After a few words with Reginald and his mother, Mr. Grey found out why the name Stacey had sounded so familiar to him, for Reginald's father had been the one with whom Mr. Grey had had dealings in the past.—Boston Post

COOKING A HUSBAND.

A Few Simple Rules for Making Them Tender and Digestible.

In selecting your husband you should not be guided by the silvery appearance as in buying mackerel, or by the golden tint, as if you wanted salmon. Be sure to select him yourself, as tastes differ. Don't go shopping for him, as the best are always brought to your door. When bought, tie him in the saucepan with a strong cord called Comfort—as the kind called Duty is apt to be weak. Husbands sometimes fly out of the saucepan and become burned and rusty on the edges, since, like lobsters and oysters, you have to cook them alive. Make a clear, strong, steady fire out of Love, Neatness and Cheerfulness. Set him as near this as seems to agree with him. If he sputters and fizzles don't be anxious. Some husbands do this until they are quite done. Add a little sugar in the form of Kisses, but no vinegar or pepper. A little spice improves husbands, but it must be used with judgment. Don't stick any sharp instrument into him to see if he is becoming tender. Stir him gently, watching the while lest he should lie too close to the saucepan and so become tasteless. You cannot fail to know when he is done. If thus treated you will find him very digestible, agreeing nicely with you and the children.

Cycling in France.

The cycle tax in France serves one useful purpose—that of illustrating the growth of the pastime in that country. So great has been the rise of automobilism in France that some diminution might have been expected in the Frenchman's enthusiasm for the cycle. The actual figures, however, speak emphatically to the contrary effect. In 1894, the first year of taxation, the number of machines was 203,306; in 1895 it was 256,084; in 1896, 329,816, and in 1897, 408,869. The figures for last year, however, have just been published and show a total of 483,414, or nearly half a million. It may confidently be expected, however, that the figures for the present year will greatly exceed even this total, far not only is the pastime showing no signs of diminution, but regulations introduced this year with respect to the carrying of a plaque will insure a more widespread payment of the imperial tax, which many riders have previously found it possible to evade.

New "Bob" Evans Story.

The following somewhat irreverent story is going the rounds of the press in relation to "Fighting Bob" Evans. Dressed in a plain suit of clothing, he went to church on a recent Sunday and seated himself in a vacant pew about midway up the aisle. Soon afterward a gentleman and a lady walked in and seated themselves in the same pew. The gentleman stood it as long as he could and then passed his card over to Bob, which read as follows: "I pay $2,200 annually for this pew." Bob glanced at the card and then passed it back with the following written on the other side: "You pay too damned much." The preacher then announced his text: "It is blessed to dwell together in the house of the Lord."—De Kalb Chronicle.

Automobile Weddings.

Betrothed couples who go with the times now drive motor cars to church for the wedding ceremony. The latest of these up-to-date marriages has been celebrated at St. Germain l'Auxerrois. The bridal party drew up to the porch, not in stately equipages, but in a long procession of some twenty horseless vehicles of the newest pattern. A large crowd had gathered to witness the arrival. Cheers went up, mingled with humorous remarks, when the cortege of motors appeared. The bride's and bridegroom's carriages were decked out with white lilac, chrysanthemums and ferns.—Paris Daily Messenger.

Knew the Minister's Talent.

Willie had swallowed a penny and his mother was in a state of alarm. "Helen," she called to her sister in the next room, "send for a doctor; Willie has swallowed a penny." The terrified and frightened boy looked up imploringly. "No, mamma," he interposed, "send for the minister." "The minister?" asked his mother, incredulously. "Did you say the minister?" "Yes; because papa says our minister can get money out of anybody."

800 POUNDS OF CHAIN.

Unique Penances Inflicted Upon Himself by a Hindoo Fakir.

The unique penances inflicted upon themselves by Hindoo fakirs have been the subject of much comment by critics on Indian customs. All sorts of odd punishments devised to mortify the flesh have been described, but the oddest is that devised by Almul Alli, an old Brahmin priest, residing near Okra. This old fellow, he is over 73 years old, carries 800 pounds of heavy chains about him. They are suspended from his neck and waist, his wrist and ankles, and consist of every variety of chains from the small bracelet to the heavy ball and chain. What is his idea of this unique affectation is unknown. Not a word will he say on the subject, except that it is ordained that he should wear them. Four years ago he simply followed the other usages of the Brahmin priests, but suddenly he conceived it his duty to wear the heavy weight about him and since that time he has done so. He is a teacher of the Hindoos for miles around. All of them go to him for spiritual advice and bring to him in payment for his comfort and prayers anything he demands of them. This is invariably the heaviest chain they can find. It is in this way that he has collected his variety. At first he wore but one chain, but gradually he has been increasing his load until he now has the enormous weight upon him. It prevents him from moving about without the most laborious effort. He drags the weight behind, but rarely goes without the hut in which he lives. He can stand erect easily in spite of the weight suspended from his shoulders and waist. This is not greater than a hundred and fifty pounds. Each wrist bears a half hundred pounds. The remainder is all fastened to the ankles and only affects him when he walks. Every hour of the day the chains remain upon him. They are all taken off at night. He sleeps on a hard board couch in which a groove is cut at the waist and neck into these the chains fit. The weight of them is then borne by the stomach and throat. The others, of course, rest on the boards and do not affect him. The punishment would be devilish if it were not self-inflicted. As it is it is the most revolting outgrowth of religious fanaticism that is known of in India or anywhere else.

QUARTERS WERE SCARCE.

The average householder who protests twelve months out of each year that his gas meter is out of order and is trying to make a race with time to bankrupt him, when the end of the month comes around will be interested in the fate that sometimes overtakes the individual who resorts to the drop-a-quarter-in-the-slot meter for relief.

One of the champions of the latter system gave a party to a number of friends the other evening at his flat and the merriment was at its height when suddenly the place was shrouded in darkness. When the alarm, occasioned by the suddenness of the transformation had subsided, the voice of the anxious housewife was heard announcing that the 25-cent allowance of gas had been exhausted and that she had not a piece of money of that denomination in the house. In vain the guests gathered under the gaslight in the hall, fed from another meter, and searched their pockets for a silver 25-cent piece. There was plenty of money in the crowd, but no quarters, and the situation had grown distressing when volunteers offered to go forth and try to secure the coveted piece of silver.

Until one has tried it, the difficulty of securing a specific coin is hard to realize, especially in the evening when the stores are closed. After making a canvass of the neighborhood without result an expedition was formed and two or three of the men made their way to the nearest street-car line, where they boarded a car and secured a stock of quarters from the conductor. Then they returned to the gathering of guests in the hallway and, after feeding the hungry slot, succeeded in securing light for the balance of the evening. But the popularity of the ever-present slot device had sunk twenty points in as many minutes.

Wrapping Up the Coin in Paper.

One of the lesser, but established newer customs of the city is that of wrapping up in paper coins thrown to the organ grinder, says the Sun. There are no monkeys now to climb up and take the money; they are not permitted to be carried in the city, and if they were they could not climb to the upper stories of the tall flats and tenements. The money from them must be thrown down. The organ-grinder cannot leave his organ—he carries about nowadays a big organ on wheels—to pick up or to hunt for the money, that work is now attended to by somebody else who goes about with the organ-grinder, to help, if necessary, to pull the organ and to look after and pick up contributions. And even so, with somebody doing nothing else but look for them, some coins would be lost if thrown from windows high in the air to strike upon the pavement below and bound up and away. Hence the common practice in these days of doing up in a piece of paper the coin thrown from a high window. The paper deadens the fall and keeps it from bounding, and it serves also to mark where the coin lies.

To Stop Nose Bleeding.

Bleeding of the nose is often very difficult to stop, but the efficacy of the following method is vouched for by a correspondent of the New York Times. The writer says: "Cut some blotting paper about an inch square, roll it about the size of a lead pencil, and put it up the nostril that is bleeding. The hollow in it will allow the sufferer to breathe; the blood will fill the space between the tube and the nose, and will very soon coagulate and cease to flow."

Love and Death.

Two, from the Heights of Quiet,
Come, one day, to men;
Two, Love and Death, come hither,
Come once, and not again.

I turned, looked every whither,
Nothing could I see;
But as the High God liveth,
One came from Him to me.

She came with touch and odor
Of a summer breath,
Came as shall come the other,
The second angel, Death.

Swiftly my soul unfolded;
Flashed, and reached awide;
It drank the pouring glory
Of Heaven's Summertide.

I reckon not the seasons,
The years that fall and flow'
Life filled her cup and spilled it,
That hour long, long ago.

Since, none has met me seeking
Up and down the ways;
Love comes no more forever
In all the coming days:

And, surely, he shall find me,
Whether I rest or roam,
The other—kindly angel!—
Come to take me home.

—Harper's Magazine.

Why She Is Popular.

"A charming and popular woman is the greatest blessing of humanity," remarked an observing man the other day. "But a popular woman will never disclose the secret of her popularity that others may benefit by it and the world thus be made brighter. Would you object to telling me the secret of your popularity?" said he, turning to a society woman nearby. She replied: "I think the secret is due to the fact that I write notes. When I hear of a young woman's coming marriage or her engagement is announced I write a few lines of congratulation. If a friend is ill I write a note of sympathy. If there is a death in the family I write a letter of condolence. If a woman has any joy or sorrow come to her I remember it with a few words on a sheet of paper. It really takes very little time if kept up properly, and is so heartily appreciated, you know." "Thank you," said the man. "You have explained why you are a favorite with women. Now, will you tell me why men find you so charming?" "A man is a very sensitive creature, but women, as a rule, overlook this fact. A man does not like to be reminded of his shortcomings any more than a woman does. I always try to talk to every man as he talks to me, and I treat young men as if they were old and old men as if they were young. I can think of no other reasons for my popularity," said she.

Cruelty to Daughters.

It would probably astonish the majority of mothers who guard their daughters so zealously from all household "drudgery" to be accused of cruelty, and yet it has been very justly claimed that there can hardly be a more mistaken kindness, in reality a greater cruelty, on the part of a mother toward a daughter than for her to relieve the daughter from all active participation in home duties. To keep their hands fair and delicate, to spare them all care and trouble—this will work very well for a few months or years, but what is the after consequence? asks the conscientious mother. Your silken-haired little girl—what a sweet, attractive little creature she is! And you bring her up like a plaything, as if she were a live doll; but all your fondness and tenderness and devotion will not keep the years back, and she soon grows to be a woman. It is power greater than yours—it is the Creator himself—who has imposed upon her a destiny from which it is impossible for you to withhold her if you would, says the Philadelphia North American. The fairest child cannot always remain a child in age or in stature. Will you have her continue only a child in practical knowledge, ignorant of the labors that inevitably devolve upon a woman? She may be cradled in the lap of luxury and never have known what it was to have a wish unfulfilled that money could gratify; she may marry "just the nicest husband in the world;" her bridal presents may be unsurpassed in costliness and splendor; her tour of Europe and her year of boarding are completed; her housekeeping and her misery, and the misery of her husband and household now begin. And why their misery? Because for this most important function in domestic economy you, in your ill-judged tenderness, have left her wholly uneducated. No hired help can ever make up for the lack of knowledge and qualifications in the mistress of a household. A mother who has allowed her daughter to grow up uninstructed in the mysteries of housekeeping has been guilty of an unkindness toward her own child which will be life lasting in its unhappy influences. Many mothers will be ready to meet this argument, of course, with the excuse that there will be plenty of time "later" for the study of housekeeping; but the "later" is very apt to prove too late for the thorough knowledge that will insure home happiness.

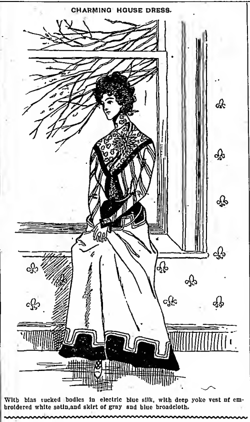
Did You Know This?

Here are some facts the average housewife is unacquainted with: Flour should not be kept in a storeroom or pantry where there is cooked food, as it really absorbs odors. Ignorance of this fact accounts for poor bread oftener than an inferior quality of flour. Articles of food that are made of gelatine or of milk should always be kept covered, as both milk and gelatine are literal scavengers of the air, and absorb not only odors, but germs. Neither cheese, cabbage, fish nor baked beans should ever be put into the refrigerator. They all have an odor of which it is difficult to rid the refrigerator, and they also flavor the food. Butter should be kept in a tightly closed jar. If any is left over on a plate it should be covered.

Fascinating-Room Slippers.

Elegant shops are displaying some very fascinating Turkish slippers just now at "greatly reduced prices." The prettiest and most popular of the selection are those in white and silver, and when they are taken in connection with a dressing gown of cream French flannel, with a silver girdle they are positively bewitching. Another very stylish pair of these slippers was made of heavy gismonda pink satin—a very pale rose—embroidered with cowslips in raised design. The flowers had deep yellow centers capped with the tiniest speck of vermilion. The effect was very pretty indeed. Women who delight in fancy work can decorate their own bedroom slippers, having previously purchased a pair made of plain satin. These elegant bits of footwear also make delightful and appropriate presents.

CHARMING HOUSE DRESS.



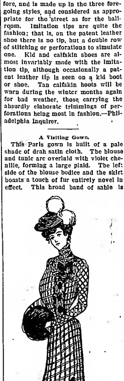
With bias tucked bodice in electric blue silk, with deep yoke vest of embroidered white satin, and skirt of gray and blue broadcloth.

Dainty Footgear.

For full dress wear the very daintiest of footgear is again in fashion—slippers made in all the light shades, and in gold and silver as well. Patent leather will be worn more this winter both by men and women than ever before, and is made up in the three foregoing styles, and considered as appropriate for the street as for the ballroom. Imitation tips are quite the fashion; that is, on the patent leather shoe there is no tip, but a double row of stitching or perforations to simulate one. Kid and calfskin shoes are almost invariably made with the imitation tip, although occasionally a patent leather tip is seen on a kid boot or shoe. Tan calfskin boots will be worn during the winter months again for bad weather, those carrying the absurdly elaborate trimmings of perforations being most in fashion.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Visiting Gown.

This Paris gown is built of a pale shade of drab satin cloth. The blouse and tunic are overlaid with violet chenille, forming a large plaid. The left side of the blouse bodice and the skirt boasts a touch of fur entirely novel in effect. This broad band of sable is slashed at intervals, and a violet velvet ribbon run through and knotted into a bow at the top.



One-Sided Women.

The woman who gives her entire attention to any one pursuit does so at the risk of spiritual loss to herself; no matter if it is homemaking, housekeeping, care of children, business, self-cultivation in any form, religion; her relations with life in general are thrown out of the normal, and her power is weakened. Too great development in any direction, to the exclusion of everything else, makes a one-sided character, usually unlovely and unloving. An all-round experience in life begets love and sympathy for others, and is the very best teacher we can have.

To Avoid Monotony.

With respect to the daily menu there is often a decided outcry, and a just one, against the monotony of food. Because it requires a little trouble and a little forethought and patience, the introduction of new dishes is postponed from day to day, and old dishes prepared in the same way are offered continuously until one gets to know just what to expect on particular days. It is a good plan to experiment on new dishes at luncheon, so that, should failures arise, they shall not make their appearance before a tableful of hungry mortals. It is well also to write down the day's orders in a small book. These books should be kept, as they form a ready reference when one is in a hurry, and also prevent one from repeating the same thing too often.

For an Invalid.

For a delicate child or an invalid there is a simple preparation of meat which contains a great quantity of nourishment and yet is most easily digested. A half pound of round steak is laid on the board and scraped in the way of the grain with a strong silver spoon. The pulp readily comes off from the white stringy muscles, and in a few moments enough has been secured for two cakes. These are salted and laid for an instant in a very hot, deep frying pan. They cook at once, and are most appetizing, and can be digested by the weakest stomach.

OUR COOKING SCHOOL.

Chafing Dish Recipes.

With the advance of cold weather the fad for chafing dish suppers is more popular than ever. Almost every bride of this fall has had a chafing dish among her wedding presents. She can experiment to her heart's content, using the following recipes:

Creamed Chicken.

Two cups cold chicken cut into small pieces, one cup of chicken stock, one cup of milk or cream, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one heaping tablespoonful of flour, salt and pepper. Cook the butter and flour together in the chafing dish. Add the stock and milk, and stir until smooth. Put in the chicken, salt and pepper and cook three minutes longer.

Quail a la Chafing Dish.

Two plump quails, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one gill highly seasoned broth, one gill port or claret, one teaspoonful onion vinegar, celery, salt, white pepper, one tablespoonful mushroom catchup. Cut the birds open down the back. Put the butter into the chafing dish and heat until it begins to brown. Then put in the birds cover and cook five minutes, turn and cook five minutes longer. When nicely browned on both sides add the broth, port or claret, catchup and vinegar; season with the celery, salt and pepper, and serve.

Lobster a la Newberg.

Meat of a boiled lobster cut into large dice, good-sized lump of butter, one gill of sherry, one-pint of cream, yolks of two eggs, glass of sauterne. Put the lobster in the chafing dish with a good-sized lump of butter and stir gently until the butter is melted and the lobster heated through. Mix the sherry with the cream and yolks of eggs, first blending the latter with enough cream to make them as thick as a mayonnaise. Pour the mixture into the dish, over the lobster. Let it simmer a moment, then pour the enuteras over the whole and serve hot.

Practical Sentiment.

"She is very fond of flowers."

"She doesn't look a bit sentimental. She weighs all of 250, doesn't she?"

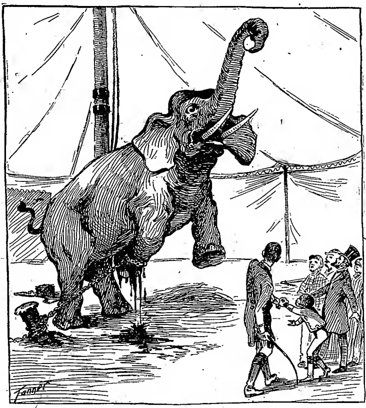
"A little more, I think. But I know a 300-pound woman once who went into rhapsodies over sunrises."

"Indeed?"

"Yes. She knew it would soon be time for breakfast."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

EXECUTING AN ELEPHANT

The Fate of Sapphira, Who Had Killed Her Keeper.



SAPPHIRA TAKES THE POISON TO SAVE LITTLE JOE.

Sapphira was doomed. The largest elephant in captivity had killed her keeper and was to expiate the deed with her own life. It had always been so with elephants who had killed their keepers, but tradition had little to do with the present sentence. Indeed, the man who had been with the show longest, Wells the ringmaster, was the only one who held out against it. Wells was part owner in the circus and had a right to speak. The trial was held in the manager's tent, and though Sapphira's fate had already been settled by a vote of five to one, Wells was still talking.

Yes, he knew that a man-killer was a jonah to any show—that there was constant danger of damage suits—that some towns exacted an extra license fee for a man-killer. He knew that it hurt business—that women and children would be afraid to go where there was a man-killer. But, hang it all, could the show stand a loss of $10,000?, Sapphira was worth every cent of that. Was there no other way of getting rid of the brute? Didn't they remember what a row the newspapers made over the killing of Barnum's man-killer? Wouldn't it hurt business if that happened again? Botched? Of course it was botched. It was no easy matter to kill an elephant. Well, he was never bullheaded. There was five to one against him. But he wouldn't stand to see Sapphira butchered—none of that Barnum business of two years back, when they killed the Sultan after five hours. He would give in, but the job had to be done clean.

And so Sapphira's fate was settled. Since she had crushed out the keeper's life and flung his broken body against the tiger cage, the great beast had been isolated from the rest of the herd, chained fore and hind, and kept in a tent alone. Alone? Well, Joe was with her—little Nigger Joe, who had been with the circus since he was no bigger than a monkey. His father had ridden Sapphira before him. For his sake she let them put the chain on her foreleg, a disgrace she had never before suffered. But why shouldn't she obey little Joe? Many and many a time he had soothed the throbbing sore on her trunk when it was opened by fresh cruelties of the keeper's hook. Oh, that hook!

The doctor had to poison Sapphira. It was a nasty job and it didn't make him feel a bit better to see the little nigger leaning against her trunk half asleep. Sapphira saw him and wondered why he pulled back in that odd way. Still she knew what was coming. She had heard the voices in the manager's tent—she had heard Well's voice, too. Wells, who was her oldest friend and next to little Joe, her best.

Sapphira knows her fate. The isolation, the chains and stakes, the lowered voices and furtive looks, all are omens of death. She had seen it all before and it was the same. They came crowding in after the show just as they were now, Charioteers, lion tamers, bare-back riders, jugglers, canvas men and all. There was a good sprinkling of women among them. Some still wore the trappings of the show. They were in a hurry to see her die.

They are gathering around her great front in a vari-colored crescent—over a hundred of them. But they keep a good distance. Now Murrello comes in, talking angrily with the doctor. Well, he will do it himself—give him the bran balls and the candy. Now he pushes his way through the crowd with the basket containing the poisoned dainties. Now Murrello walks near Sapphira; imprudently near, they think who are in the horns of the crescent and see the glitter of the elephant's eyes. Now he speaks to her. His voice is intended to be soothing. Now he tosses her a bran ball. Oh, how seductively! Sapphira does not touch it. She is hungry, too, but she knows there is death in that morsel. What, another? Whiff! She has picked it up and tossed it disdainfully into the crowd. Some one laughs and then a general titter goes up.

"Joe! Nigger Joe! She'll take the poison from him," some one shouted. The little black, who had been sitting on a pile of stakes apart from the crowd mutely nursing his misery, now jumps up. It is not bad enough to see Sapphira die—he must kill her. The shiny face turns a dull drab and he edges toward the back of the tent. There is a break in the crowd and two or three start after him. Ah, he has dived under the canvas. Too late! The lion tamer has him by the leg and pulls him back.

Now the queen talks to him, kindly at first, then angrily. Here Murrello comes in with his big bullying voice. The stubborn little nigger, he'd take the shines out of him. He grabs the lion tamer's whip. Sapphira tries the chains again, this time in a mightier effort—Murrello has struck little Joe. The elephant's great foreleg is lacerated by the chain, and the blood runs. No use—no use. Again Murrello applied the whip.

Sapphira pauses in her mighty struggle, and, raising her great trunk majestically, she trumpets a fierce protest. Oh, if she only had articulate voice! How proudly she would have spoken. She would take the poison, but they must not beat little Joe. She would end it all for her little friend's sake. She drops her trunk again—there was the candy Murrello had thrown to her.

Now the crowd is shouting wildly at Murrello, and, releasing little Joe, he turns around. Sapphira is holding the poisoned candy aloft with something in her aspect that makes him understand. The queen of the circus throws her knife into the sawdust and Murrello lifts Joe to his arms like a father.

Sapphira has taken the poison. It is her requittal of "Nigger Joe's" love and loyalty.

CHRIS. HAWTHORNE.

Still at Large.

A former governor of New York was noted for the quickness of his wit, which seldom left a chance for repartee unappropriated. An Englishman who had been visiting different parts of the country spoke with special fervor of a sight he had seen in a western state. "I attended a Sunday service for the inmates of the state prison," said he, "and I learned that of the 170 persons now confined there, all but four voluntarily attend religious services held in the prison chapel twice on each Sunday. That is a wonderful thing!" "It is," said the governor, thoughtfully, "I am sorry to say it is not so with us; but then," he added, soberly, "in New York, you see, most of the respectable people do not come to prison."

Massage Treatment of Rheumatism.

Dr. Fiquet, in the Archives Generales de Medecine, describes observations made on himself to determine the effects of the massage system practiced at Aix-les-Bains. During a douche of ten minutes duration and at a temperature of 94 degrees, F. massage is applied to all the body. Dr. Fiquet took a series of twenty douches on three different occasions, his food being kept constant in quality and quantity. Careful and elaborate analyses showed that the tissue change of the body is increased, and especially that the excretion of inorganic salts is encouraged. This seems to explain why the Aix-les-Bains douche-massage temperee is beneficial in rheumatism and injurious in consumption.

AS JESUS WOULD DO.

What the Immediate Result Would Be of Following His Precepts.

The author of "In His Steps," Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, writing on "Is Christianity Practical in Business Affairs?" in the November Ladies' Home Journal, contends that "the immediate result of applying Christ's teachings to every-day life would, without any question, be the actual loss of almost everything in the way of money, and social position, and political power for vast numbers of persons who are now rich, or successful, or powerful through the exercise of selfish—that is, un-Christian—methods of life. I have not the slightest doubt that if the merchants of Philadelphia, for example, should begin at once to do as Jesus would do in business, the immediate result would be bankruptcy for very many of them, perhaps for the majority. If not bankruptcy, then enormous losses would follow. This fact would not prove that Christianity cannot be applied to modern business; it would simply prove that modern business does not square with the teachings of Christianity. That this is so business men themselves frankly confess. The statement so often made, that the Golden Rule cannot be made to work in business, is not a confession of the foolishness of the Golden Rule, but of the selfishness of the business world."

A WONDERFUL PIANO.

The oddest of all pianos manufactured up to date will shortly start from San Francisco for a long tour of the world. With it will go its inventor and manufacturer, Moritz Rosenthal, the famous pianist, whose ingenuity has produced something really new under the sun. This piano is anti-climatic—that is to say, it is proof against all atmospheric changes that heretofore have assailed perambulating pianos. Tested carefully and thoroughly with all degrees of heat and cold, dryness and moisture, it has demonstrated that none of these conditions can affect its tone quality.

The inventor has "treated" it after prescriptions known only to himself. The piano, which is smaller than a small grand, has had all kinds of experiments tried upon it, until now it is perfected—neither the tropics nor the arctic can disturb its musical serenity. The length of the instrument is five feet, its width three feet. Beautifully polished rosewood will encase its mechanism, and its sounding board was brought from Germany. All of the 7,000 pieces used in its construction were handled by the musician himself during the many months that the piano has been building.

From San Francisco it will go to Australia, and then will tour through England, Germany, France, Italy. It will travel by train and ox team and possibly camel-back for its owner proposes taking it to Africa and all kinds of out of the way places. A traveling overcoat of metal, lined with a layer of felt and one of chamois, flat on the bottom, rounded on the top and hermetically sealed, is provided for this medicated music box. Just how precious such an instrument as this will be to Moritz Rosenthal can be best understood by music lovers. The average piano is a tender instrument, but here is one that can stand any treatment.

HANGED FOR BURNING COAL.

Strange Law Which Was in Force in England in 1300.

There will be an interesting function in London shortly when the coal exchange celebrates its jubilee. The occasion is one for recalling strange reminiscences; for as lately as the fourteenth century a prohibition was issued against the burning of coal, with severe penalties decreed against any person who warmed his house by a coal fire. In the early days of Lord Mayor Whittington the burning of coal was considered so great a public nuisance that it was made a capital offense, and one man was actually hanged for indulging in a coal fire. As a matter of fact, this ordinance was never repealed; but in "Dick" Whittington's third mayoralty it is evident there was a great trade in coal; and the suggestion has been made that as coal was brought to London in boats known as the "cats," this was the real origin of the story of Dick Whittington and his cat. The coal exchange, however, is a modern institution. It is also one of the most important of London's marts. Under the shadow of its domed roof commercial transactions are daily carried through of greater value than in connection with any other mercantile building in the world. Unlike the corn exchange in Mark Lane, it is not a private concern, but is a city market conducted on the same principles as the other markets opened by the city corporation. Opened with much ceremony in October, 1849, by the prince consort, the present building is just about to celebrate its jubilee. But the market itself is older than the building. Up to 1807 it was in the hands of private individuals, but in that year it was purchased by the corporation for £25,000.—London Times.

A GIGANTIC PIE.

How Kansas Honored a Returning Member of the Tenth.

Returning soldiers of the famous Twentieth Kansas, who have just reached home from the Philippines, unanimously agree that one great thing is lacking in army life. The American soldiers would be content were one want satisfied. They want pie—mother's pie—issued as rations. But the army quartermaster knows as little of pie as a Chinaman. While other rations come regularly and tolerably well cooked, these soldiers say that the great aching void for pie grew on apace, until now some of the boys would gladly give a month's pay for a good big pie.

Arthur Phillips, who lives at Mulvane, Kan., was a private in Company H, Tenth Pennsylvania regiment, and is half-back on the W. and J. football team of Washington, Pa., came home recently and was greeted by the townspeople in a unique and fitting manner. He had previously written home in regard to pie. When the neighbors learned he was nearing home they determined to arrange a satisfactory welcome. Accordingly they baked a pie four feet wide and six feet long and filled it with apple mince meat and everything else that goes to make up a good pie.

A big reception was held in the opera house, and the pie laid on a large table on the stage. No one else was allowed to eat the pie, and, be it said to the soldier's credit, he devoured the pie during the night, and actually called for more. This should be a warning to friends who desire to please heroes of the Philippine campaign.—Leslie's Weekly.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 94,378]

"I am so grateful to you for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me that I feel as though I must tell about it. A year ago I was taken very sick. Doctors could do me no good only to deaden the pain which I had almost constantly. I got some of your Compound and took one bottle and received benefit from it at once. I have taken it ever since and now have no backache, no pain in my side and my stomach and bowels are perfectly well. I can honestly say that there is nothing like it. If I could only tell every woman how much good your medicine has done me, they would surely try it."—MARTHA M. KING, NORTH ATTLEBORO, MASS.

Women Would Surely Try Mrs. Pinkham's Medicine If They Only Knew, Says Mrs. King

The way women trifle with health shows a degree of indifference that is past understanding. Happiness and usefulness depend on physical health; so does a good disposition. Disease makes women nervous, irritable and snappish. The very effort of ailing women to be good-natured makes them nervous. Write to Mrs. Pinkham, she will help you to health and happiness.

It costs nothing to get Mrs. Pinkham's advice. Her address is Lynn, Mass.

THE POET'S WIFE.

She brings her pretty knitting, bless her,
Or mystic threads for making laces
That by and by will serve to dress her
In new and no doubt charming graces.
She sits and rocks, her rocker chiming,
In measured cadence to my rhyming.

Sometimes with eye that proudly glistens
I read a sonnet I have written;
She counts her stitches while she listens
Or pulls a thread to make it fit in,
And, with her gaze intent upon it,
Asks, "What they pay me for a sonnet?"

She little knows of rhyme or meter
And cares still less, but asks me whether Chiffon and roses would look sweeter
To trim her hat than jet and feather.
And while I'm "framing odes to Cupid"
She tells me, "Poetry is stupid!"

But, oh, her eyes—her silken lashes—
Her hair's sweet mutinies—the dimple
In cheek and chin—the outward flashes
Of inward smiles—her tranquil, simple,
Entrancing air! Did she but know it—
She is the reason I'm a poet!

A SPONGE IN HIS BODY.

Queer and Fatal Result of a Surgical Operation.

Dr. Morestin, a Russian surgeon, who had been treating a woman for recurring abscesses, announced the recovery of his patient the other day. He had removed from her a pair of physician's hemostatic forceps, four inches long, which had been accidentally sewed up in her body four years before.

Said a New York physician: "A short time ago an up country doctor came to the city to be operated upon for the removal of the vermiform appendix, although I understand he never had appendicitis. He did not improve after the operation, and one night he died. There was an autopsy, and it was found that a sponge had been sewed up in him. Yet I have known of many forceps, clamps and other metal instruments to be forgotten and left in patients, and the latter get well.

"Sponges are bad. From their very nature they become collecting agents and soon poison the body. The smooth metal objects, on the other hand, are apt to work their way into the alimentary tract, and then they soon pass away. You doubtless have heard of needles which have staid in the human body for years, gradually working their way out of the system or of old soldiers who still carry the bullets shot into them during the civil war. The glass swallowers of the dime museums really perform wonders in the way of resisting foreign substances in the human body.

"The most wonderful case of all was that of an insane man whom I saw in an asylum in Lancaster, Pa. He took to swallowing things in the carpenter shop and before he was stopped he had gulped down 140 nails of all sizes, some buckles, a piece of old iron, some screws and a lot of other things.

"All of this hardware was extracted and the man recovered. He is still living and still a lunatic."—San Francisco Call.

Couldn't Change the Signs.

England is said to be the freest country in the world, but its freedom does not extend to the alteration of a public house sign by a licensed victualer. This was proved at the South Hants Brewster court, where a brewer asked leave to alter the name of an inn from The Duke of York to The Panther. Admiral Field, M. P., who acted as chairman, asked the reason of the proposed transformation, and was informed that the applicant owned another Duke of York, some distance off, a fact which was liable to cause confusion in business. The admiral, however, considered it discourteous to the brave old Duke of York to put a panther in his place. Eventually the application was refused.

A similar fate attended the request to change the name of a house from The Royal Oak to The Radstock. Admiral Field urging that Lord Radstock, as an eminent philanthropist and Christian man, might justifiably object to his name being thus taken in vain, and the justices, perhaps out of regard for French susceptibilities, also rejected an application to change the sign of The Alma tavern to that of The Fashoda.—London Telegraph.

The Food We Need.

Dr. Pavy, one of the most eminent authorities upon diet, says that the average man in a state of absolute rest can live on 16 ounces of food a day, a man doing ordinary light work can live on 23 ounces and a man doing laborious work needs from 26 to 30 ounces. This is food absolutely free from water, and it must be remembered that everything we eat contains more or less water, so that from 48 to 60 ounces of ordinary food are necessary according to the work in which a man is engaged.

A Lively Game.

Get a large sheet or tablecloth and a small feather. Have the company take hold of the edges of the sheet and form a ring. Then some one blows the feather into the air and all must do their part to keep it in the air and not let it touch any one, and so it is blown from one side to another, while the efforts made to keep it floating are very funny. Sometimes, in the excitement of keeping the feather up, some one will forget all about holding the sheet up, and then more excitement and fun follow.

Announcing a Birth.

In some parts of Holland a birth is announced by fastening a silk pincushion on the doorknob. If the pincushion is red, the baby is a boy, and if white a girl.

THE NERVOUS MAN.

He Who Requires the Constant Care of an Attendant.

A crowded car of an up town bound Lexington avenue elevated train, Wednesday afternoon, about 3 o'clock, was deeply interested in a couple that entered it at Reid avenue station. The man was so nervous that he could scarcely stand, and he fairly trembled as his wife supported him to a seat. As soon as he reached it squarely, his eyes closed, and he appeared to be in a deep sleep. The woman carried in her right hand a saw, a hammer and several other sorts of carpenter's tools. She sat stern and erect, and looked as though life to her was a pretty tough experience. The passengers guessed that she was leading her nervous husband home from work, but how on earth he ever used the tools she carried was a puzzle. If you look about you sharply these days it is no uncommon sight to see women careworn of countenance leading along faded men. The other morning a silent woman walked into the barber shop on Evergreen avenue, near Cooper street, followed by her husband, a pale faced, thin individual, who acted as though he was walking on air. He fell into a chair, and the barber rapidly shaved him, while the woman sat in a corner and waited until the process was complete. Then she handed over the price of a shave, with no tip, and walked out, followed by her broken down better half.

"Oh, that's nothing," said the barber, as he looked after the queer couple. "I have had numbers of men come to my place like that. Some of them are so confounded nervous that before you get half finished they want to jump from the chair. I've got six outside customers whom I shave at their homes, and two of them I shave in two days; one side today, the next side tomorrow, because of their excessive excitability. When I was over in the Produce Exchange building, I had men jump from my chair and run out of the shop because they couldn't sit still long enough to be shaved."—Brooklyn Times.

AFRICAN WOLVES.

They Are Very Ferocious, and Even the Lions Fear Them.

The African wolves, when hunting in packs, are very formidable, and M. Foa, the great French explorer, says: Experience has shown me that they attack not only all animals of medium size, but also the lion itself. They wage terrible battles, in which the lion succumbs to numbers, though not without having ripped open some of the enemy. But the survivors in their turn soon tear it. Consequently the large, ravenous beast has a salutary terror of them. In this connection he relates a story of how his servant once scared away some lions who had surrounded them in the darkness away from camp.

"The night was as black as pitch, and we did not distinguish the trees until upon them. Lions prowled around us, and one of them roared within alarming proximity; but we could not see them; we heard them walking in the leaves on all sides. Reaching the tree, we found one of our companions with the rifle cocked, another trying to relight a half extinguished torch. Still the lions walked. We guessed them coming and going in the darkness.

At that moment Tambarika whispered to us the advice to imitate the p'umpis (wolves) in the distance. So we immediately began barking and shouting "Hu, hu, hu!" in an undertone, as though the pack was still at a distance, while the man at the camp made the same well imitated cry. The effect was instantaneous. There was a rapid gallop in the dry leaves; the lions decamped. The more or less well imitated approach of a pack of wolves rid us of them for the whole night. We returned to the camp with our honey, and nothing troubled our tranquillity until morning.

Eating Away Stone Walls.

At first sight it would seem hardly possible for bacteria to be concerned in the breaking down of a stone wall, yet this is the case, according to observations made in studying the cause of the decay of cement. The gradual disintegration of the cement mortar used in water supply reservoirs is one of the serious troubles met with by water engineers and a trouble which so far they have not been able to avoid with any measure of practical success.

Hitherto this action was supposed to be the result of the solvent property of carbonic acid and other mineral substances commonly present in a water supply. The cement gradually disintegrates and becomes a kind of mud which slowly detaches itself. But now it has been found this strange process is due to the action of none other than that bacterium known as the nitrifying organism. An examination of the mud shows it to be teeming with these organisms.

Getting Acquainted.

A Ravenswood man tells this story about a friend of his whose business makes him away from home frequently: For the last month or so he has had a respite, and his neighbors have noticed the unusual length of his visit to his own house. One of them asked him recently if he had got pretty well acquainted with the members of his family.

"I think I am making an impression," he responded. "My little girl went to her mother the other day and said, 'That man who comes here sometimes spanked me today.'"—Chicago News.

NEW YORK WORLD.

THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

Editor Kneppen, of the Pine Tree, Beltrami county, gives vent to his feelings on some unknown person in the following language: "Some pusillanimous pup with no fear of the hereafter in his withered up soul sneaked on our premises in the dead of night and purloined a loin of venison. Any low down whelp who will steal from an editor will never reach that heavenly land where good Elijah went."

Chas. Alexander, an old time St. Hilaire boy writes that he is at Bemidji and is again working for Joe Markham and wants his paper sent to that place. He says that Joe is doing a good business there and the only trouble is that the new hotel is not big enough to accommodate the trade and "is figuring on moving the St. Hilaire house up here in the spring." The cheapest rate there is five dollars per week for board and room and further states that Joe is "strictly in the swim."

A VOLUNTEER SOLDIER.

The Owatonna Peoples' Press publishes the following spirited verses, entitled, "What Do We Need of the Regulars Now," inspired by Governor Lind's speech at the Thirteenth welcome:

BY WALTER KENYON.

Washington's soldiers were volunteers,
They fought the British for seven years.
They made this country grand and free,
And treated its future to you and me.
'Twas the greatest victory since the world begun.
For they carried a conscience as well as gun.

When treason reared its monstrous head,
'They have no army," Old England said.
Then the martyred Lincoln, grand and true,
Called for the boys who wore the blue;
From every station, high and low,
Hundreds of thousands were ready to go.
'Twas the grandest army under the sun.
For they carried a conscience as well as gun.

When the wailing cry from the Cuban isle
Set the American people wild,
President McKinley, without a fear,
Calmly asked for the volunteer.
Once more they rallied to freedom's cause
And marched to victory without a pause.
Beneath the heat of the tropic sun
They carried a conscience as well as gun.

And thus it's been for a hundred years.
We've put our trust in the volunteers;
They always put the foe to flight,
For they fought for freedom, for home and right,
The bravest soldier beneath the sun
Carries a conscience as well as a gun.

They never faltered till freedom won,
And then each soldier stacked his gun:
And, without a sneer for the vanquished foe,
Returned to the shop, to the plow and hoe,
And labored as only brave men can
To make their country strong and grand,
Thus history teaches we've naught to fear
If we put our trust in the volunteer.

Where they wish to crush the people down,
Where the head of the nation wears a crown,
Where might makes right, is the golden rule
A standing army is a handy tool:
For in every country under the sun
The regular carries only a gun.

How long do you think the present concentration of wealth can go on putting untold millions into the hands of the schemers? How long will it be until no small fellow can do business of any kind? If the trusts keep gathering millions will they not at some time have all the wealth and all the other people have none? If the wealth of the nation is 75 billions, and these 600 trusts gather in that amount of wealth where do the other fellows come in? Are they not now gathering at a rate that will not soon amount to that sum total? Is there anything that you can see that indicates that the game they are playing will not continue, gathering force as it goes? What business, except one of these, is prosperous? The Arnewood Mystery

PROLOGUE.

About forty miles southwest of Cooktown, in Northern Queensland, but lying well out of the beaten track to the far-famed Palmer gold fields, is a stony, sandy ravine, known to the few fossickers who have from time to time given it a trial, as "Black Horse Gully." Report had it that gold existed plentifully in that district, though no one, it was said, except one man, a German, had ever found the precious metal there in any considerable quantity. This fortunate digger visited Cooktown to obtain supplies and to bank his gold, and many unsuccessful attempts had been made to track him back to the source of his wealth. Upon one of these periodical visits he died very suddenly, and the secret as to the whereabouts of his claim was believed to have died with him.

Late one afternoon in July, a man, dressed in the usual red flannel shirt and moleskins affected by the digger class, rode into Cooktown upon a lean, jaded horse, and dismounted at an unpretentious little inn known as the Miners' Arms. Having hitched his horse to a veranda post, he entered the bar, nodded to the landlord and a few chance customers, and curtly demanded a bed for the night.

"All right," replied the landlord, referring to the slate. "There are half a dozen for you to pick from."

"I want a room to myself," said the stranger.

"Right you are, mate," was the reply. "If you care to pay for two beds."

The newcomer shrugged his shoulders contemptuously, placed a pound note upon the counter, and, in the usual Australian style, ordered drinks for all those present. He then handed his weary steed over to the care of a stableman and proceeded on foot to the postoffice.

"Any letters for Luke Arnewood?" he inquired, anxiously.

"I'll see," replied the delivery clerk, proceeding to examine the contents of a pigeon hole. "Where from?" he added, a little suspiciously.

"The old country—London," was the answer. "It's all right. I've had letters addressed here before. See here." So saying, he produced several letters in proof of his assertion, and the clerk's doubts vanished.

"All right," he rejoined. "We have to be a bit careful, you know. Here are three letters for you; one from London, right enough. The two others bear the Dublin postmark."

"Very likely," rejoined the applicant, almost clutching at the letters in his eagerness. He placed them carefully in his bosom and retired, muttering some gruff words of thanks. He then returned to the inn, ordered some dinner, and retired to the bedroom he had secured, in order to peruse his correspondence in peace.

For some moments he sat staring at the addresses upon the letters, as though doubtful which to open first, and finally unsealed the one bearing the London postmark. It ran as follows:

"136 Essex Street,
Strand, London, W. C.,
June 2nd, 1893.

"Sir—Your favor of April 2th to hand, wherein you inform us that you are the only son of the Mr. George Arnewood (alias Arnott), for whom we advertised in the 'Queenslander' and other Australian newspapers, and that your father died two years ago. We have forwarded your communication to Messrs. O'Brien and Grudgery, solicitors, Dublin, from whom you will doubtless hear in course of post.

Yours, faithfully,
—Hawkins & Co.,
Per Weston.

Luke Arnewood, Esq.,
Postoffice Cooktown, Queensland."

"That tells me nothing," he muttered, opening a second letter; and, though a strong, healthy-looking man, his hand shook as he did so.

"Re Arnewood's Trust,
18 Harcourt Street,
Dublin, June 4th, 1893.

Dear Sir: Our London agents, Messrs. Hawkins & Co., have forwarded us your reply to their advertisement in the 'Queenslander,' informing them that Mr. George Arnewood is dead and that you are his only son. Assuming your statement to be correct and susceptible of satisfactory proof (as is, we make no doubt, the case), we have to inform you that you are, as your father's heir, entitled in tail-mail, to the extensive and valuable estates owned by your grandfather, the late Mr. Basil Arnewood, D. L., J. P., who died intestate last November.

It will, of course, be necessary for you to establish your claim fully; and to this end, we would direct your attention to the importance of the following: Certificate of your father's marriage; certificate of your birth; certificate of your father's death; any letters or other documents left by him, tending to establish his identity and yours. We would suggest the advisability of your departure for Ireland at as early a date as possible. Should you be in want of funds for the voyage, we shall remit you what you require, upon hearing from you to that effect; and, we would be obliged by your sending us copies, at the same time, of such of the above named certificates as may be in your possession.

Your obedient servants,
O'Brien & Grudgerby,
Luke Arnewood, Esq.,
P. O. Cooktown, N. Queensland."

It was a terse, explicit letter enough, and a look of wild delight came into the digger's eyes as he perused it. "Estates, wealth, position," he muttered, "in return for a hole in the ground; a few ounces of gold dust, hardly earned, and the life of a navvy—not a bad exchange! I wonder whom the other letter is from?"

It proved to be from a gentleman signing himself Richard Blake, and who gave his address as the Kildare Street, Dublin Club. He had, he said, just heard from O'Brien & Grudgery of the discovery in Queensland of the missing heir, and, as a relative, he hastened to send his congratulations. "We shall all be delighted to see a master at the head of the old place once more," he added, "except, perhaps, your cousin, Richard, who, barring you, would, of course, succeed to Arnewood, and who may be a trifle sore at first. I suppose you will keep O'Brien & Grudgery informed as to your movements, and I hope you'll find time to drop me a line, as well."

This epistle might have been meant in the friendliest spirit, but it produced no other effect upon its recipient than to provoke an ejaculation of contempt.

"Pshaw!" he exclaimed, aloud, as though he were addressing the writer in person. "I wonder what sort of a numbskull you take me for, Mr. Richard Blake?"

Nevertheless, the idea that he was thus early being sought out and toaded to, pleased him, in a way; and he went to his dinner in as contented a frame of mind as is possible to a man of naturally morose disposition.

It is a custom, rarely honored in the breach, that when a digger stays over night in a town he shall go the round of certain resorts, chiefly public houses patronized by other gold hunters, and there exchange mining gossip and scraps of news. Our man had proved an exception to this rule, hitherto; and, in all his previous visits to Cooktown, he shunned the society of other diggers—for his own good reasons. Nevertheless, upon this particular evening he so far relaxed this aloofness as to share in the conversation and numerous drinks indulged in by a number of gold hunters who had found their way to the bar of the Miners' Arms. Apparently either he deemed that the good news from Dublin had rendered his wonted caution unnecessary, or, being almost a stranger in the district, he trusted to pass unquestioned.

So he did, until a man, remarkable alike for his well-nigh dwarfish shortness of stature and almost ludicrous breadth of shoulder, pushed his way, good-humoredly, to the somewhat crowded bar.

"Clear the road for the Dutch giant, lads!" he chuckled, hoarsely.

"Hallon, Dirk! What cheer, old man?" chorussed several voices.

"Nigh stony, boys!" replied the newcomer, and with scarcely a trace of foreign accent. "But Dirk Vanstroon's always good for a few drinks, eh, boss? What, you here?" he added, addressing the recipient of the letters.

"Yes," growled the latter. "Can't you see I am? Why shouldn't I be?"

"No reason that I know of, mate," rejoined Dirk, drily, "except that I thought you and your mate were too busy clearing out old Schneider's claim on the 'Black Horse' to waste a night in Cooktown."

It was difficult to define, from the speaker's tone whether he were in joke or in earnest; but, from the chorus of laughter which greeted his words, it was evident that the bystanders regarded the alleged discovery of the old German's fabled claim as an excellent joke. Not so the object of the dwarfish Dutchman's banter, who, shortly afterward, retired, sulkily, for the night. Dirk gazed reflectively, upon his retreating form, but he made no further allusion to Black Horse Gully.

The lean horse had a good spell of rest, for not until 9 o'clock the next morning was he called upon to bear his owner to the local branch of the National Bank. The manager smiled as his red-shirted visitor removed his broad, many-buckled leathern belt and placed it upon the counter. Banks made a good profit upon the purchase of gold, and but little of the precious metal had found its way to Cooktown lately. One by one, and very carefully, he emptied the pockets, fixed upon the inside of the belt, of the gold dust and "shotty nuggets" which they contained. The delicate bullion scales were then called into requisition, and gave the aggregate weight of the gold as 2lbs, 9oz, 6dwt.

"Will you draw the value in cash now?" inquired the manager, suavely.

"No; I'd rather leave it with you for the present," was the reply. "I have more gold besides that lot."

"I'm very glad to hear it," replied the manager. "We'll buy all you care to bring us. I'll just make out a deposit receipt and take your signature."

Hesitatingly and slowly, as though unused to wielding a pen, the new depositor wrote Luke Arnewood in the signature book, received his deposit form and slouched out of the bank. Dirk Vanstan was standing outside the building with, apparently, no more engrossing occupation on hand than to study the anatomy of the lean horse.

"Good-day, mate," was the Dutchman's cordial greeting. "Been putting up some of old Schneider's leavings? He used to bank in the very same crib!"

For all reply, the digger sprang swiftly upon his horse's back and drove home his sharp spurs. With a snort of pain, the poor brute lashed out viciously, and came within an ace of dashing out the Dutchman's brains. Horse and rider then disappeared down the street.

Dirk Vanston's eyes flashed fiercely, as he realized the imminence of the peril he had just escaped; but he quickly regained his wonted good humor.

"All right, my sulky friend," he muttered, chuckling softly to himself. "It is your secret I want to get at, not your life. And I reckon I'll make better use of your brumby's hind shoes than you did just now, anybow!"

Meanwhile, the subject of these comments betook himself to the general store, and gladdened the heart of the storekeeper by a large order for supplies of all sorts, from flour and tinned meats to tea and tobacco.

"You'll have to send the stuff on to Joe Marshall's shanty at Thirty-Mile Creek," he remarked, as he paid the bill. "My pack horse knocked up there on the way in."

"All right was the reply. "To whom shall I consign it?"

The other hesitated a moment. "To Louis Arnott—A-r-n-o-t-t," he said, spelling the name for the storekeeper's guidance. He then turned to leave the store, but, as though struck by an afterthought, returned and announced his intention of taking two bottles of brandy with him. These having been carefully packed in the thick digger's blanket that was strapped to the pommel of the saddle, he mounted and set forth, in a southwesterly direction, at the best pace of which the lean horse was capable.

Some five hours later a man, almost his counterpart in general appearance, and of about the same age, was seated upon a log outside a ramshackle shelter that was half-tent, half-hut, smoking and applying himself with suspicious frequency to a tin pannikin beside him.

"Ought to be back by this time," he muttered, "unless he got on a spree last night and slept it out this morning. That's what I'd have done, most likely. Anyhow, I wish he'd turn up."

Within a few minutes, and as though in answer to his wish, a shrill, prolonged whistle resounded through the glen, upon one side of which the hut had been built.

"There he is, by thunder!" exclaimed the watcher, delightedly. And, placing two fingers in his mouth, his reply rang forth as shrilly as the summons. Then he hastened to a sheltered nook hard by, where a large kettle, hung gipsy-fashion over some smouldering embers, seemed to represent the kitchen of this establishment, patched up the half-extinct fire, and awaited his expected mate's arrival.

"Why, where's the tucker?" he inquired, after a brief, but apparently friendly, greeting had been exchanged.

The newcomer explained: "The stuff won't reach old Joe's till late to-night," he added, "and we must do the best we can without it until to-morrow."

A sigh that was almost a groan greeted this assurance. "Hang it all! You might have brought me a pint to go on, anyhow!"

A faint sneer curled the newcomer's lip. "I did better than that, mate," he said, quietly. "You'll find two bottles of 'Martell' stowed away in my swag."

"Bravo, Nat!" cried the other, joyously. "You're a real brick! We've got plenty of grub left for a day or two."

The preparations for supper were as simple as the meal itself. A couple of handfuls of tea thrown into a gallon of boiling water, tin plates and pannikins, salt beef and doughy damper, pickles, and—for cutlery—jack-knives. Just a digger's ordinary fare, minus a few simple luxuries which had run out.

The nights are chilly, even in Northern Queensland, in July (which there, of course, represents mid-winter), and the two adventurers preferred the shelter of the tent-hut to smoking their interminable pipes in the open. One of the bottles of "Martell" was opened, and, beneath the dim light of a very diminutive swinging lamp, they drank and smoked for some time in almost unbroken silence, as tired men are wont to do after a hearty meal. Looking at them as they lay—each on his rough, blanket-covered bunk—they might easily have been taken for brothers. Both were tall, wiry specimens of the ordinary blue-eyed, brown-haired Anglo-Saxon type. There did not seem to be more than a year or two between them in point of age; they both wore beards, and the resemblance was still further heightened by their similarity in dress.

"How's the water in the shaft?" queried the returned wayfarer, presently. "Gaining?"

"Yes, confound it!" was the reply. "One can get it down by working like a nigger at windlass and bucket for a good long spell, but as soon as ever you knock off, up it rises again. These last rains have put a stopper upon our game, Nat, for the present, at all events."

"Looks like it," assented Nat, gruffly. "What then?"

"Well," replied the other, "I've been thinking all day whether it wouldn't be just as well to chuck up the claim for, say, a couple of months, and start again with the dry weather."

"Pity you didn't think of that before I ordered all that stuff," said Nat. "There's been no more rain since I left."

"No; but I didn't realize how thoroughly soaked the high ground must be until to-day," explained his comrade. "As for the tucker, most of it will keep well enough at Jack Marshall's for a month or two."

"See here Lou Arnot," rejoined Nat, drily. "You're not a bad sort of chap at bottom, and you and I have pulled along well enough so far. But you've an all-fired bad habit of beating around the bush. Why don't you say, straight out, that you've a mind to chuck the claim altogether? That's what it amounts to, because you know very well that this is no one-man show, and that if you go I must take on another mate."

"I suppose so," said the other, half-filling his pannikin by an irritable tilt of the bottle. "That is, if you don't knock off, also; but I don't care a tinker's curse whether you do or not. My share of old Schneider's leavings, added to the bit the poor old dad was able to leave me, will see me through as far as I want to go."

"As far as—Sydney, for instance?" suggested Nat, with a mocking laugh.

The man addressed as Lou Arnott glared fiercely at the speaker. "Well?" he said. "And supposing I do go to Sydney; have you anything to say against it?"

"What! Against your trying your luck again with Ruby Patterson?" cried Nat again, in the same mocking tone. "Not I! Why should I? Do you suppose I'm jealous? I daresay as soon as you show old Patterson the thousand or so you've made out of our claim here, he'll give the girl and a cool million straightaway. You needn't say anything about your recently-acquired taste for P. B., you know."

"Are you looking for a row?" demanded Arnott, savagely.

If looks meant anything, the answer should have been a prompt affirmative. But, by a great effort, the aggressor kept his temper well under control, and quickly changed his tone to one of mild banter.

"Don't be a fool," he said, quietly. "Can't you see I was only chaffing you?"

"I don't like chaff where Ruby is concerned," rejoined Arnott, considerably mollified.

"All right, mate," rejoined Nat, "then I'll drop it. It isn't good enough for us to dissolve partnership by a scrapping-match over old Ready-money Patterson's daughter. So shake hands and have another drink to prove we're pals again."

The proposal was entirely to Arnott's taste, and harmony was quickly restored.

"You're quite right, Nat, he replied. "We've neither of us anything to gain by quarreling, and, although we were once rivals—"

"Yes, yes," interrupted his comrade, airily. "We know all about that. She preferred you to me, and I—took a back seat. But suppose the old man should still prove obdurate, what will your next move be?"

"Can't say, exactly," was the reply. "Ruby's not the sort of a girl to make a bolt of it with a fellow, and it's a mean way of winning a wife, anyhow. Yet I know she's fond of me, and I—well, life don't seem worth living without her, Nat, and that's the truth."

"Have some brandy, old chap," suggested Nat, with a grave irony wholly lost upon the other. "You're feeling a bit down on your luck in that quarter; that's what the matter."

Arnott's application to the bottle had already been so frequent that, though his tempter drank but very sparingly, it soon became necessary to open the door; and, as often happens, the more he drank the more loquacious and sentimental he became. Apparently quite oblivious to the fact that the man he was talking to had been his bitter rival with respect to the girl, he poured forth his hopes and fears as into the ears of a sympathizing elder brother. Had he but seen the look of savage, jealous hate that at times almost distorted his listener's face, he would surely have paused in his egotistical love-chatter. But he did not. Brandy and his semi-maudlin passion for Ruby Patterson had blinded him very effectually.

"You asked me, just now, Nat," he went on, confidentially, "what I'd do if my Sydney mission fails, and I said I didn't know. But I'll tell you what I think I'll do. Rather than lose Ruby, I believe I'd go back upon my half-promise to my poor old dad."

"What do you mean?" queried Nat, with well-feigned indifference.

"Why, you know I promised him, just before he died, that I would, if possible, steer clear of all his people; and, so far as I am personally concerned, I don't wish to have anything to do with them. But it has occurred to me that old Patterson would take a different view of my suit if I could patch up some sort of a truce with my grandfather. After all, there is a wide difference between Louis Arnott, the adventurer, and Luke Arnewood of Arnewood Hall."

"Yes," assented the other, through his set teeth. "A wide difference, as you say."

"Of course, it is on the cards that old Basil Arnewood would have no truck with me at all," continued Arnott, whose utterance was now thick and husky; "but, on the other hand, he might bury the hatchet in my father's grave. It's just a toss-up, I imagine, what a spiteful old man like him will do, and he can't have any personal dislike to me, considering he has never seen me. Of course, if he does the decent thing and receives me properly, I could return to Sydney and have Ruby for the asking. If not, I shall be no worse off than before, bar the expense of the voyage to Ireland, and that won't break me."

Nat puffed hard at his pipe, in silence and with knitted brows, for a full minute. Then, apparently remembering the part he had to play, he once more shook off his ill-humor and affected to regard his companion's plans as more visionary than real.

"I'll be hanged if I can tell whether you are joking or in earnest, Loo," he remarked, "when you're a bit gone in liquor. Come, now, own up! Is not this all brandy-talk? You don't really mean to go to Ireland, do you?"

"Oh, but I do, though!" asserted Arnott, nodding his head with tipsy emphasis. "If Ruby's father still refuses me (as he probably will), it's ten to one I shall book a passage by the first homeward-bound mail steamer."

"Is it?" echoed Nat. And there was such a ring of mingled sneer and menace in his tone that even the drunken man noticed it.

"Yes," he repeated, defiantly, "it is. What d'ye mean by your 'Is it?' I suppose I'm free to go where I please without your permission, Nat Rainsforth?"

"Yes, I suppose you are," was the reply. "Only you see, this new scheme of yours is so totally at variance with your hitherto avowed determination to stick by this claim until you had made your pile, that it takes one aback a bit. Please yourself, of course, but—"

"There's no 'but' in the matter," broke in Arnott, "and I mean to please myself. I'll go to Ireland, make my peace with old Basil Arnewood, marry Ruby, and—ha, ha—you shall come and dance at our wedding, Nat!"

"Ha, ha!" echoed Nat Rainsforth, grimly. "You seem to have the programme mapped out clearly enough; at all events—Drink up, man!"

As he spoke, he filled up his companion's glass and, for the first time, helped himself freely, also. Hitherto he had shirked the brandy while pretending to take his fair share. The time for such caution had now, seemingly, gone by.

Arnott was already so far gone that it needed but little more of the potent spirit to overcome him completely. Yet, even after he had fallen back upon his bunk, hopelessly intoxicated, Nat Rainsforth held up his head and poured brandy down his throat so long as he retained even an unconscious power of swallowing it. Then, for the second time, he mixed himself a stiff nobbler, lit his pipe and sat down and began to think out his plan of action.

THIS CAT HAS FALSE TEETH

After a Little Trouble, She Has Become Quite Used to Them.

This is a story about a remarkable pussy cat. It can boast of what no other feline in the world possesses—a set of false teeth.

Some weeks ago the household pet mewed pitifully, and refused to touch the daily allowance of meat that was given it.

James Dever, her owner, lives in Morristown, Pa. He was much distressed at seeing the poor animal apparently ill and suffering without being able to learn the cause. Finally it occurred to him perhaps the cat had the toothache.

He promptly examined her gums and found they were inflamed. The surgeon recommended a visit to the dentist. The dentist said the decayed teeth must be removed before any relief from pain would be had.

Finally the dentist laughingly suggested that the cat would have to have false teeth or die.

After rubbing pussy's gums well with cocaine-saturated antiseptic cotton, the teeth were pulled.

In a few days the first set of false teeth ever made for a cat was put into her mouth. She was ill at ease for some time, but after a little she grew used to the new molars.

At the present time she is well and happy. She now eats her food regularly and seems to enjoy the same freedom in masticating that she did previous to losing her teeth.—New York Herald.

Must Have Been a Thief Among Them.

The rattle of the musketry increased.

The pirate chief leaped to the mizzen halyards.

He waved his broken sword.

"Scuttle the ship!" he shrieked.

There was a moment of agonizing silence.

Then a quavering voice arose from the guns.

"Master," it screeched, "somebody has stolen the scuttle!"—Stray Stories.

Acetylene Gas.

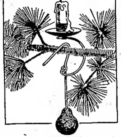
In the estimation of Prof. J. Vertess, the adage, "All is not gold that glitters," applies with special fitness to the attractive gas acetylene. The comments of Prof. Vertess were elicited by an official examination which he made of the acetylene plant which supplies the town of Veszprim, in Hungary. He says the carbide from which the gas is made is never pure, but always contains at least 20 per cent of impurities. The effect of this is to make it most difficult to ascertain with any approach to accuracy what return of gas can be secured from a given quantity of carbide. Furthermore, the carbide is so little homogeneous that several samples must be tested in order to obtain a mean value. Prof. Vertess calls particular attention to a fact which seems little known to many who advocate the use of acetylene for domestic lighting. Carbide contains sulphur, phosphorus and nitrogen and it follows that acetylene will be contaminated with sulphureted hydrogen, phosphureted hydrogen and ammonia. The acetylene must, therefore, be purified to the same extent as is coal gas, for fear that its use in closed places might cause serious accidents. But the greatest drawback of all is that acetylene burns with a smoky flame. At first, the flame is beautifully bright and clean, and altogether captivating, but after 200 or 300 hours smoke begins to be formed. This comes from the burners attaining a temperature higher than that of the decomposition of the acetylene, and thus the gas is decomposed into carbon and hydrogen. A curious phenomenon is noticeable in the gas pipes. Not only do they deposit a finely divided carbon, like soot, but they condense a very remarkable liquid, consisting of carbides of hydrogen. These bodies are also formed in the generators, whence the necessity of using siphons. It is thus seen that the claim that acetylene does not require purifying is a fallacy. Prof. Vertess points out another inconvenient result of the impurities contained in acetylene. When acetylene is burning in a closed place, a sort of fog will often fill the room after a longer or shorter interval. The cause of this is that from the decomposition of the acetylene in the burner the carbon is deposited while the hydrogen burns, inducing the formation of watery vapor, and it is this, in conjunction with the ammonia, the sulphureted hydrogen and the phosphureted hydrogen, which produces the fog and induces the distressing headache and nausea so well known to those who have tried burning acetylene in their own houses.

A Curious Salamander.

Mr. Blackford writes from Washington, D. C., to Nature of Aug. 24, giving an account of some strange discoveries in Texas. The United States fish commission bored an artesian well at its station, near San Marcos, Tex., and soon after the well was opened a number of living animals began coming up with the water. Four kinds of crustacea and a blind salamander, all of them new to science, were obtained. Two living specimens of the blind salamander were shipped by mail to the head office of the fish commission in Washington, where they excited great interest. Mr. Blackford believes that there is some great cavern or subterranean lake communicating with the artesian well.

Christmas Tree Made Safe.

The fatalities and accidents that attend the decoration of Christmas trees with lighted candles can now be in a large measure avoided by the use of the convenient handle-holder just patented. This little device is so designed that the candle is always maintained in an upright position no matter what the position or movement of the limb to which it is attached. This is accomplished by means of a candle holder and accompanying drip cup, provided with a weight suspended on a universal joint. As will be readily observed by an inspection of the illustration, when the candle-holder is placed on the limb of a tree by means of the hook, the weight falls free, and, being heavier than the candle-holder and candle, it keeps the latter in an upright position. Any one who has had experience with the disagreeable melted candle grease all over the floor covering and tree hangings will appreciate the value of this little device, which though effective, is simplicity itself.

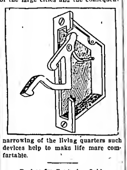


Standard Time in India.

Mr. Oldham, superintendent of the Indian Geological Survey, in a paper printed by the Asiatic society of Bengal, describes the present time system in India, by which every place keeps its own time. A traveler going from one town to another, to keep an appointment has to find out how many minutes difference there is between the times of the two places. Mr. Oldham advocates the adoption of the system used in North America of hour zones, by which the region is divided into belts running north and south, each fifteen degrees of longitude in width. Using Greenwich as the starting point would give only two different times in India, an eastern time exactly six hours later than Greenwich time, in use in Bengal, Assam, and Burmah, and a western time, exactly five hours later than Greenwich, in use in the rest of India. Mr. Oldham states that he had recently to deal with a mass of time records referring to the earthquake of 1897, and he found that a large number had to be rejected because it was impossible to ascertain what standard of time had been used, while in many others it was only after a large mass of calculations had been gone through that the relation of observations from different places to each other could be determined.

Disappearing Coat Hook.

You have doubtless seen those patent sliding door handles that make their appearance on the pressing of a button, but which under ordinary circumstances are flush with the edge of the door. Well, a western inventor has developed this idea to suit a clothes hook or rack, constructed on pretty much the same principle. When the rack is not required it falls back into the door, side of the bureau, wardrobe, desk, or elsewhere, and when required a simple pressure on the spring causes it to make its appearance ready for use. With the continual crowding of the large cities and the consequent narrowing of the living quarters such devices help to make life more comfortable.



Devices for Producing Cold.

From an investigation of new patents and patent applications at Washington it is evident the inventors are turning largely to the attractive field of effort found in devices for the taking the place of ice. So successful are some of these that enthusiastic promoters already predict the passing of the iceman. Devices for producing artificial cold are multiplying with great rapidity and while some of these are of but limited and costly utility, others give promise of being able to meet common wants and necessities in the heated season. Even at present large business concerns have almost abandoned the use of ice for ammonia gas and other chemical devices, and it is predicted that before long it will be possible to moderate the heat of summer just as rapidly as the cold of winter is now regulated in houses by steam heat. In other words, that cold may be turned on at pleasure and a uniform temperature be maintained in city dwellings all the year. As yet, however, these glittering and pleasant promises are not in the way of immediate fulfillment. The expense of cold-generating plants and appliances at present makes them not available except in the case of great manufacturing plants. That ingenuity and invention will yet conquer the difficulties and make it possible to supply cold as gas, heat and electricity are now furnished in the modern house seems entirely probable.

Modern Exploration of Babylon.

The sultan of Turkey has just given permission to a German expedition to explore the ruins of Babylon. This exploring party, sent out by the government of Berlin, will be directed by Dr. Robert Koldewey. The examination of the ruins will last five years, and will doubtless be of immense value historically. The position of the ruins of Babylon was determined for the first time by Mr. Layard, who was later the British Ambassador to Constantinople. It will be remembered that it was he who discovered the ruins of Nineveh, which were afterwards explored by French savants (1815-1854). Some years later Sir Henry Rawlinson went over the same ground. The last explorer was Rassam, a friend of Mr. Layard. But all these researches were only partial, whereas the Germans, with their usual plodding thoroughness, intend to pursue their examination in a methodical and complete manner. Great sand heaps along the banks of the Euphrates, where Babylon once stood, two days' march from Bagdad, show where the most important monuments lie. The greatest of these is called El Kass'r. It is said to cover the ruins of the palace of Nebuchadnezzar, where he spent the greatest part of his reign, and where Alexander the Great died. The Germans intend to begin their explorations by opening this sandhill and so settling the question.

The work of cutting down the grades on the Chicago division of the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road will be begun at once, and most of the heavy work will have been completed by spring.

The Chicago division work includes reductions between Tiffin, O., and Attica, where a 28-foot grade will be reduced to 18 feet, for a distance of 16 miles, the heaviest cut being at Republic.

At Teegarden, Ind., there are 175 000 cubic yards to be removed, to reduce the grade from 28 to 16 feet. Between Garrett and Ripley, Ind., there will be a relocation of the line for seven miles, reducing a 26 foot grade to 16 feet, both east and west bound.

These reductions will cost about $300,000, but will allow an increase of nearly 30 per cent in train loading when they are completed.

Dairy Notes.

At the Kansas Experiment Station they have been testing the milk sent in by dairymen, and complain that in many instances the milk arrives at the college in a half-churned condition and unfit for test. The advice is given to fill all bottles brim full of milk. Then make a small hole in the cork through which milk can run. When the cork is thus pushed in tight the surplus milk will flow out through the hole, which can then be stopped up by a little plug of wood. This will prevent the churning motion and the consequent formation of little grains of butter on the sides of the bottles.

Another fraud in milk selling has been discovered in England and we may expect that in due time it will get to this country. The authorities find that in some of the English coast towns what is called milk extract is being sold to dairymen. This is a chemical possibly, but the reports are not definite enough to indicate the composition of the so-called milk extract. It is used by dairymen to increase say 400 gallons of milk to 500 gallons, hot water being added. Ordinarily the adding of hot water or any other kind of water can be easily detected, but by the use of this powder the milk and water incorporate so thoroughly that the addition is hard to detect.

A "Babcock Shilling Fund" has been started by the dairymen of New South Wales, and the money collected will be forwarded to Professor Babcock of the Wisconsin Experiment Station as a thank-offering. As many of our readers know, Professor Babcock gave his invention to the world, so that no manufacturer will ever be able to have a monopoly of the making and selling of the machines. For that reason many firms make Babcock milk testers and the competition thus brought about keeps the price down to the lowest point that will admit of a profit. Since all that buy machines get them at a greatly reduced cost on account of the generosity of Professor Babcock in not patenting his invention, the thank-offerings that are occasionally sent him meet the approval of every man interested in dairying.

The dairy propaganda seems to be reaching out into all lands. Even Tunis, on the north coast of Africa, is being considered as a field for dairy operations. A large amount of dairy products is being brought into that country, in which reside 110,000 Europeans. Besides that population that is given to the consumption of dairy products there are numerous hotels that entertain tourists by the thousands. Perhaps the dairy may prove as beneficent a factor in that benighted land as it has proved in the more enlighted countries of the world. It was not a generation ago that Denmark took up the question of dairying in earnest and now she has become the leading dairy country of the world, so far as butter exports are concerned. We may in the future have to meet in the London market not only butter from Denmark, France, and Australia, but also butter produced along the shores of the Mediterranean sea.

Corn-Fed Fowls.

Like corn fed cattle and swine, corn fed fowls are all very well for market, if they are marketed when they should be, and not when just ready to die from overcorpulence. But for all practical purposes, the corn fed fowl is a valueless fowl, for she is invariably burdened with fat, says a contributor to Epitomist. The Leghorn will partake quite regularly of a corn diet and will stand up well under this careless way of feeding her, or allowing her to help herself. But the larger, heavier breeds will break down. Would that we could have the corn crib and the swine lots so substantially, thoroughly and closely fenced in, that not a fowl could enter them. Every western farm is dotted over with corn fields and corn cribs, and so vast and common is this farm crop of the west, that everywhere the corn fowls may gorge themselves without taking many steps; and the over fat hen is an almost everyday occurrence, where precautionary measures are not taken to prevent this consumption of corn.

Some of the oldest writers upon poultry topics have been telling us for years of the detrimental qualities of corn as food for hens. For chicks and growing fowls it is excellent fed in moderation, and not to the exclusion of everything else. For laying hens and pullets it is also excellent as an occasional food. But corn three times a day, or so placed that hens can help themselves to it without let or hindrance, will prove harmful almost without exception. We had the lesson to learn, and learned it at great expense. When one has lost a few hens that are readily worth from $5 to $8 a piece, and many times as much more, he begins to count the cost and cry down the cause. When large, plump, beautiful hens will sing to you one day and be dead the next morning, you may almost invariably count upon over fat as the cause. By dissecting the bird the cause will usually be found to be great sheets and layers of rich, yellow fat interlaying the entire body. The liver will be found to be of a pale, pinkish color, whereas to be in a healthy condition, it should be a bright red. But an over fat hen is not in a healthy condition. Unless saved from her own greed, she will soon succumb to the inevitable. Give the over fat hen prompt attention. Place her where she can secure such food as you see fit to give her, and let that be a trifle to begin with. Plenty to drink and nothing to eat will be the most heroic treatment that can well be administered for a "first taking in hand" of a fowl. Let her become desperately hungry, and then feed her lightly, and but seldom, until a very perceptible decrease in her weight has taken place. Give plenty of sharp grit, and Rochelle or Epsom salts in her drinking water occasionally. It is hard to resist the coaxing of hungry fowls. But hunger, and not food, is what is needed in the case of heavy, over fat hens.

The Fleece of the Lamb.

The fleece of a ram should be at least half heavier than that of a ewe of the same breed, partly from additional size, and partly from the fact of his devoting all his food to his own nutriment and adornment, says J. M. McCory in The Farmer. A ewe that is not raising lambs shears much heavier than one that is milking. The same difference makes a corresponding difference in the weight of the fleece as between rams and ewes. Not only with regard to quantity, but with regard to the places bearing wool, should the ram differ from the ewe. The ram should have the wool crowding luxuriantly on every part of the body on which wool may appropriately grow. It is an easily observed fact that in the males of nearly all domestic animals and birds, as well as those in a free state, males are generously adorned as compared with females. This is supposed to be due to surplus nutriment crowded to the exterior of the males, but otherwise used to nourish offspring in the females. It may be safely laid down, then, that a ram light in the fleece has not the appetite and, consequently, vigor and constitution that appropriately belong to him as a male. It should be remarked here that there are great variations in different breeds as to the amount of covering deemed right at the extremities; for example, on the face and legs. The Leicesters, on the one hand, have a bare poll and legs, while the Shrops are wooled to the nose and toes. What has been said with regard to wool at the extremities, then, must be taken with appropriate modifications with regard to different breeds.

Pigs with Croup

F. M. B., Rushville, O.: I have nineteen head of Poland-China shoats a little over four months old, says National Stockman. They have been running on good clover all summer and have been fed a little corn twice a day. They are in good shape, will weigh between 80 and 100 pounds, have plenty of fresh running water, and a good, dry place to sleep in rainy weather. Some of them have been ailing. They are suddenly seized with a terrible wheezing and some cough. They have to keep their mouths open to breathe, and can be heard several rods. When first taken I noticed two of them vomit a little in coughing. They don't seem to be very sick, but can't eat for a day or two on account of hard breathing. There also seems to be a kind of phlegm in the throat. Four have been sick, two got well in about a week, one is better, and the other has just taken sick.

Answer: The symptoms that you give indicate that your pigs are attacked with "croup." Pigs are subject to this as well as children. In bad cases the pig needs treatment similar to the child. A tub of water as hot as can be used without scalding should be provided and the pig put into it for ten or fifteen minutes when there is danger of suffocation. In milder cases, yet severe, give compound syrup of squills every hour until breathing is easy; less frequently in mild cases. Syrup of ipecac given will relieve if taken in time. The dose of either of the syrups is a teaspoonful to pigs one to four months old.

Treating Black-leg in Oklahoma.

A bulletin from the Oklahoma station says: Black-leg is one of the most important diseases among cattle in Oklahoma and is commonly known as black-leg or black-quarter. The disease may assume a number of forms but usually is noticed as a local swelling in either the front or hind limb. This swelling contains gas which causes a crackling sound when the hand is passed over the swelling. The swelling is at first hot and painful, but after the gas begins to form it is not sensitive and the skin becomes dry and parchment-like. The disease is one common to young cattle and is rapidly fatal, death generally occurring in from twelve to thirty-six hours after the first symptoms are noticed.

There is no successful medical treatment for the disease. Vaccination is now recognized as the most successful way to prevent the disease. The necessary apparatus, which consists of a hyperdermic syringe, a small porcelain mortar, glass rod and filter funnel, can be purchased from any instrument dealer for three or four dollars. With this apparatus any careful individual can do the work successfully. The experiment station at Stillwater is prepared to furnish a small amount of vaccine, with full instructions for using, to parties who need it for their own use and who will supply themselves with the necessary instruments for doing the work.

It was hardly to be supposed that the poultry business would come into the sphere of great commercial movements and concentrations. But something of this nature seems to have taken place in Europe. Within a few years there has been a marked tendency to eliminate the small poultry enterprises and supplant them with large ones. Some capitalists have been buying poultry in Italy, taking it to Belgium and parceling it out in lots of from 300 to 500 laying hens each. The birds are kept for two years after purchase, and thus two seasons' egg product is secured, after which the birds are fattened and sold for table poultry. The importation begins in May and continues till August, and sometimes as late as September. They have found by experience that birds imported from October till April do not stand the change well, as the transference from sunny Italy to cold and moist Belgium is too great for them except under the most favorable circumstances. When they are imported in the summer time they become acclimated before winter sets in. The variety of birds mostly purchased in Italy is Brown Leghorns. The change seems to improve their egg producing capacity, and eggs produced in Belgium weigh more on the average than eggs of the same hens produced in Italy.

Do not keep more fowls than can be properly taken care of.

Agricultural Notes.

How deep shall the tile drain be laid in clay soil? This is a question that has been agitating farmers for some years. At first it was believed that a drain in clay soil should be shallow, but more recent investigations seem to indicate that drains should be laid deep in both sandy and clayey soils. The effect of the draining in clay soils is to render the soil above the drain more friable. The ground is also more subject to what is known as the aeration process. This aeration is in dry weather of great importance. The warm air being forced into the ground, or rather drawn in, carries with it much moisture, which is condensed by the colder soil and thus helps to add to the moisture in the soil.

This is a good time of year to find out what kind of work has been done on the roads. When the fall rains come the badly made road soon gets into a condition where it is well nigh impossible. It is not difficult to build a road that will do well in dry times, but to build one that will stand the effects of heavy rains is another matter. The man that will make comparisons between different parts of the same road built under different systems will learn something. The road that has a tile drain on each side of it should show its value at this time if the crown has been put on properly. On the other hand the flat road that is not drained at all except by open ditches will become rutted and form basins to hold the water. There is no time like the present for inspections and for the formulation of plans for the next campaign at road building.

In Holland, and probably in some other foreign countries devoted largely to agriculture, it is not unusual to see manure stored in pits in the ground. A Dutch farmer once told the writer how the manure was stored. He said: "We dug an immense pit, say thirty feet long and ten feed wide and six feet deep. It was in hard soil so that the walls formed a hard, compact surface to keep the manure from leeching out. The bottom was so hard that no manure could escape that way. Then all through the fall and winter the hard manure was thrown into this pit and the liquid manure was run into the pit also, with what bedding it was necessary to throw away. In the spring when we took out the manure we did it by backing a cart down to one end of the pit, for there was a driveway constructed that would allow the wheels of the cart to reach the level of the bottom of the pit. We found the manure packed almost as hard as clay and it was cut and spaded out in fine shape, having lost none of its fertilizing properties through the leaching of water." There are a number of things that we must imagine, but which should have been elucidated at the time of conversation. We imagine, for instance, that there was a covering of some kind over this pit to deflect the rains, and also that it was so protected by shallow drains that water from the surrounding land would not run into it and cause it to overflow, thus carrying the dissolved manure onto the adjoining lands or perhaps into brooks and streams. We also suppose that the cart road that ran down to the end of the pit must have been cut off at the beginning of the pit by boards to keep the manure from flowing out into the road and filling it up.

The Coming Bug.

I talked with a man last week who advanced the singular theory that we are, year by year, breeding a race of potato beetles that are, in one sense, becoming immune to poisons, writes a contributor to Rural New Yorker. He thinks the failure to kill the beetle may not be wholly due to adulterations in Paris green. It actually takes stronger doses to kill the insects. As we well know, there are arsenic eaters who have taken the poison for years gradually increasing the dose until they can safely eat a quantity that would kill an ordinary person. Mountain climbers or guides in hilly countries have become so far immune to the poison that they safely eat it, as it helps their "wind." The theory is that, by means of "natural selection," the beetles best able to stand the poison are left each year for breeders. This, kept on long enough, would result in a breed of beetles that could eat Paris green without a serious stomach ache. Some light, indolent man who has been bred and fed for generations as a "high liver," would be perfectly happy after eating a quantity of rich food that would destroy the happiness of a farmer. These "feeding habits" of living things means much to the man on the farm.

Diseases of Sheep in Germany.

Consul Pitcairn, at Hamburg, reports to the State Department an interesting resume of the sheep and wool industry in Germany. The average loss to German farmers, he says, in the last twelve years, caused by the falling off in sheep breeding, amounted annually to $8,568,000. The number of sheep has decreased 12,000,000 head, causing thereby a meat-value loss of $5,712,000. In 1894 Germany imported 373,890,000 pounds of wool and produced 44,000,000 pounds. In 1898 she imported $30,830,000 of wool, practically none of which was from this country. "Does not this," he concludes, "look like a possible opening for American wool?"

Grape Juice.—A report of the Canada experimental farms gives an account of a series of experiments on the best means of sterilizing grape juice. The conclusion, which probably applies to sweet cider as well as to grape juice, was that "the natural flavor of grape juice may be preserved intact by raising the temperature of the juice gradually to 170 degrees F., keeping it at this point for ten minutes and then quickly bottling it, taking care to use absolutely air-tight and thoroughly sterilized vessels. These vessels should be taken from a tank or kettle of boiling water, immediately filled, and corked or covered with the least possible delay.

The fall of the year is the time to fatten and sell any sheep that do not appear to be thrifty. They are likely to get sick during the winter, and it is better to sell them in the fall than to run the risk of losing them altogether in the winter.

Government harbor work in the Duluth district will close in a few weeks, with the advent of cold weather. More dredges and men have been employed in this harbor this year than in any past season. Considerably over $1,000,000 has been spent by the government and private firms in harbor dredging, and as many as sixteen great steam dredges have been at work and several hundred men employed. Two or three years more will complete the present government contracts for both dredging and pier work. Long before that time the commercial development will be such that large additional government contracts will be required.

While B. F. Carr of Sauk Center was surveying at Raymond, a country district ten miles from Sauk Center, he came across a small chunk of iron which has proved to be a genuine meteor. It was analyzed by Prof. Staton of the public schools, and was found to contain several metals, iron being predominant. The meteor plowed a furrow about five feet long before being imbedded in the ground, where it was found about eighteen inches below the surface. It was not covered up, the dirt being scattered away from the hole that was made. The meteor, just before striking the earth, separated into three pieces, and was observed by a few people. This is the first meteor that has ever been discovered in that part of the country.

The owners of the Peerless have a suit in the United States court to recover $20,000 damages on account of the collision, against the tugs Industry, Buffalo and Mystic.

HUSBAND CHARGED WITH MURDER

Death of a Beautiful Young Woman Causes a Sensation.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 3.—The sudden death of Mrs. John D. Williams, a well known and beautiful young woman of this city, and the arrest yesterday of her husband on the charge of murder, has caused a tremendous sensation here. Yesterday after all arrangements had been made for Mrs. Williams' funeral an order came from the coroner to hold the body as an autopsy would be held. This action was taken by reason of certain suspicious circumstances connected with the death of Mrs. Williams that had been brought to the attention of the state's attorney, Mr. Hartridge. Shortly afterward a warrant was issued for the arrest of John D. Williams, the young woman's husband, and he was soon placed in the county jail, charged with the murder of his wife. The autopsy developed that Mrs. Williams came to her death by a violent blow in the stomach, bursting the bladder and rupturing other vessels. The woman died in great agony but made no charges against any one. The husband is said to have quarreled with his wife about a week ago. He refuses to talk except to deny the murder.

TRUSTS QUIT ILLINOIS.

Corporations Representing $500,000,000 Capital Will Move East.

Chicago, Dec. 3.—Corporations with an aggregate capital of $500,000,000 are preparing to move out of the State of Illinois and establish their headquarters in the East, mainly in New York city. The chief reason assigned for the radical change of base of operations is that the legislature and courts of Illinois have assumed so distinctly an anti-trust complexion in legislation and decisions that the corporations have decided to retaliate by withdrawing their interests to other fields. The principal corporations that are getting ready to quit their headquarters in this city are the Federal Steel company, American Steel and Wire company, American Steel Hoop company, American Tin Plate company and the Glucose Sugar Refining company.

WILL PROSECUTE SOLDIERS.

For Shooting a Deserter While Resisting Arrest.

Lincoln, Neb., Dec. 3.—Attorney General Smyth has notified Gov. Poynter that he will prosecute the Fort Crook soldiers who shot and killed a deserter who was resisting arrest. A court-martial has already acquitted the soldiers, and the county attorney of Sarpy county dismissed a complaint on the ground that civil authorities have no jurisdiction. The attorney general says that while soldiers are subject to punishment or discharge by the militia, the offense is nevertheless committed against the peace of the state and cannot be punished except by the civil courts of Nebraska.

DEATH OF THE KHALIFA.

Details of the Recent Engagement of Anglo-Egyptian Forces.

Cairo, Dec. 3.—Officers from the Soudan who have arrived here say that when Gen. Wingate's force overtook the khalifa, the latter tried to outflank the Anglo-Egyptians, but failed. Seeing his position was hopeless the khalifa told his emirs to stay with him and die. He then spread a sheepskin on the ground and sat down on it with the emirs on either side of him. The khalifa was found shot through the head, heart, arms and legs, and the emirs were lying dead beside him. The members of his body guard were all dead in front of them. Gen. Wingate's force swept over them without recognizing the khalifa and his emirs, but they were identified later. The khalifa is described as of medium height, strong and stout, of light brown color and wearing a long, gray beard.

WILL STUDY THE WAR.

Assistant Secretary Webster Davis Will Go to South Africa.

Kansas City, Dec. 3.—A dispatch to the Times from Washington says: Assistant Secretary Webster Davis, of the interior department, will sail from New York next Tuesday for Cape Town, South Africa. He expects to be gone at least three months. It is his intention to see something of the Boer war. He will be the guest while in Cape Town of Col J. G. Stowe of Kansas City, consul general at that port. Mr. Davis expects later to get into the Transvaal later as the guest of President Kruger. There he will compile material for a series of lectures on the different aspects of the war, and will try to reach the United States before the struggle is ended.

Physicians Will Go to Paris.

Chicago, Dec. 3.—The Tribune says: Western physicians are planning to visit Paris next year by the shiptoad. Over 400 doctors from Illinois, Iowa and Missouri are arranging to sail from New York on the steamship City of Rome on June 20, 1900. With the medical men, besides their families and friends, will go Askalon commandery, Knights of Pythias, of Pittsburg, Pa. The main object of this trip is to attend the congress of medical men to attend the exposition next year, but sightseeing will not be overlooked.

Kankakee, Ill., Dec. 3.—William Willey, colored, a patient in the Kankakee insane asylum, was found in bed in the dormitory yesterday stabbed to the heart. There were no signs of a struggle. Fifteen other patients sleep in the dormitory. The night watch was in the room half an hour before the murder was discovered but noted nothing unusual.

Faith in Nicaragua Canal.

Washington.—"An effort will be made by the house to pass some Nicaragua canal legislation," said Representative Mercer of Nebraska. "It will not wait for the commission now at work on the surveys, but will go right ahead, using former reports as guides. I believe the Nicaraguan canal will be chosen."

London.—Truth announces that Emperor William has achieved one of the objects of his visit to England, in having induced Queen Victoria to give a conditional promise to visit the Prussian court during the last week of April.

IS LOSING PATIENCE.

British Public Murmurs at the Absence of News.

London, Dec. 3.—Absolute silence has fallen over affairs in South Africa. The war office has not yet received Lord Methuen's casualty list. The public and press, hitherto patient, are beginning to murmur at the apparently needless delay which keeps many families in a state of painful suspense. It is regarded as practically certain that Lord Methuen has been reinforced by half a battalion of the Gordon Highlanders, a regiment of cavalry and a battery of artillery, and that De Aar is being daily reinforced by troops to hold the lines of communication. It is supposed that the Natal advance has been delayed by the necessity of getting supplies to Pietermaritzburg, but not a word emanates from any of the various commands.

Kimberley Relieved.

London, Dec. 3.—While rumors of the relief of Kimberley, current on the stock exchange yesterday, may be premature in their literal sense, there seems no doubt that the pressure on the garrison has been much lightened by Gen. Methuen's successes, and the actual relief of the place is likely to be a fact very soon. A clue to the urgent reasons which dictated Gen. Methuen's hurried march may be found in Gov. Milner's hint to the relief committee at Cape Town to prepare for the reception of 10,000 refugees, indicating that the garrison must have had reason to fear the reduction of Kimberley by starvation and disease. The most recent news from Kimberley comes by way of Pretoria, and almost seems to show that Kimberley and Mafeking are acting in concert with Gen. Methuen, for, at the time the battle was raging at Gras Pan both Col. Kekewich and Col. Baden-Powell made sorties and assailed beleaguerers. The result of the Mafeking sorties is not known, but, according to a dispatch from Pretoria, Col. Kekewich inflicted considerable loss on the Boers, two shells killing nine and wounding seventeen in one group. It is reported that Gen. Methuen resumed his march northward on Wednesday and expected to form a junction with the Kimberley forces Saturday or Sunday.

Is Joubert Dead?

Chicago, Dec. 3.—A cablegram to the Record from Cape Town says: "An Englishman who was commandeered for service with the Orange Free State burghers, and who has since escaped, inform a Cape Town paper that Gen. Joubert is undoubtedly dead. OBJECT TO ROBERTS.

He Will Not Be Permitted to Take the Oath.

Washington, Dec. 3. — At a conference of about twenty-five prominent house Republicans held at the capitol last night it was decided that the eligibility of Representative-elect Roberts of Utah to occupy a seat in the house of representatives should be investigated and determined, and that pending the decision he should not be permitted to take the oath of office. This decision was arrived at by those present without a dissenting voice. Representative Taylor of Ohio, who will have charge of the matter in the house, explained after the conference had been adjourned, that this proceeding does not involve a "prejudging" of the case, but, irrespective of party, will afford the members an opportunity to vote after a thorough investigation and complete presentation of the case for their consideration. Mr. Taylor offered a plan of procedure which was agreed to after an exchange of views. The procedure is to be as follows:

When Mr. Roberts appears at the bar of the house to take the oath, objection is to be made upon the ground that he is ineligible. He will then step aside, and after the other members are sworn in the member making the objection—who will probably be Mr. Taylor—will recite the objections and offer a resolution for their investigation by a special committee. This will give the house an opportunity to vote in the first instance upon the question of postponing the administration of the administration of the oath until after the allegations have been investigated. The resolutions have not been formulated yet, but they will include the investigation of the charge that Mr. Roberts' alleged conviction of the violation of the Edmunds act in 1889 renders him ineligible by the terms of the act, whether the fact that he is an avowed polygamist renders him ineligible and whether the State of Utah in electing him has not violated the compact by which she obtained statehood.

Lake Superior Navigation Again Opened Up.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Dec. 3.—The blockade of Lake Superior navigation caused by the stranding of the steamer Siemens and North Star across the channel at Little Rapids was raised last night by the floating of the Siemens. The channel had been blocked since Tuesday morning, and since that time over 150 boats have accumulated in the passage waiting to get through. News of the Northwest

FIGHT WITH FLAMES.

St. Paul Firemen Engage in a Heroic Battle.

St. Paul, Dec. 2—One-third of Griggs, Cooper & Co.'s wholesale grocery house, on Third street, was burned last night with a loss of about $150,000. A desperate battle by the firemen kept the fire from passing the barrier of the fire wall that saved the western portion of the building. The fire was discovered at 10 o'clock, and by midnight there was nothing left of the east third of the building but the roofless shell.

The fire started in the second story of the building in a part used by the firm for making crackers in connection with its manufacturing department. The alarm was given by a policeman. The night-watchman of the building had been in the vicinity of the origin of the fire shortly before it was discovered and everything was then all right. The fire had gained considerable headway before it was discovered and when the fire department arrived flames were bursting from the windows of the second floor. A general alarm was sent in and soon all the apparatus in the city was engaged in the fierce battle with the flames.

The floor upon which the fire originated and the two stories above it were filled with light, inflammable material, and the flames spread with remarkable rapidity. The whole interior was a raging furnace and flames shot up in the air to a great height. The firemen realized the futility of attempting to quench this seething cauldron and devoted their greatest efforts to preventing the fire from eating through the fire wall to the other parts of the building. Within an hour from the time the fire was discovered the east third of the building was completely gutted and the roof and part of one of the walls fell, fortunately without injuring any one.

The heroic and ably directed efforts of the firemen alone saved the remainder of the building from destruction. It was one of the hardest-fought battles against the fiery element that St. Paul has witnessed for many years. The firemen continued until morning to pour streams of water into the burning ruins.

It is estimated that the loss on the stock and building will reach approximately $150,000, about $35,000 on the building and from $115,000 to $120,000 on the contents. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

Almost eight years ago the same firm suffered the loss of their entire stock and the total destruction of the building, their loss at that time being $350,000.

Mr. Payne says that Mr. Hanna told him that he would serve out his term but would not accept another. His term expires after the next Republican national convention, which will be held in June. Electric Spark Causes a Loss of Nearly $2,000,000 in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Dec. 2.—Nearly $2,000,000 worth of property was destroyed by two fires in the heart of the business portion of the city. The greater of the two fires started in the big department store of Partridge & Richardson, at the southeast corner of Eighth and Filbert streets, the center of the shopping district, and before the flames were under control they spread to adjoining property and caused a loss of about $1,700,000. While this fire was in progress and spreading every moment another fire broke out four blocks away on the fourth floor of 419 Market street. The loss of this fire is estimated at $110,000. The losses of the two fires are more than covered by insurance.

The fire started in the basement of Partridge & Richardson's store from an electric spark, and soon the entire building was a mass of flames. The two stores to the south were soon gutted, and then the flames attacked the big building of the J. B. Lippincott Publishing company on Filbert street, east of the burning department store. The building was completely ruined. Dewey and the President Will Look Out for Him.

Washington, Dec. 2.—J. P. V. Gridley, a son of the late Capt. Charles V. Gridley, who commanded Admiral Dewey's flagship at the battle of Manila bay, has been designated for appointment as a lieutenant in the marine corps by President McKinley. Young Gridley is too old to enter Annapolis and the only opening for him to the navy lay in an appointment in the marine corps. But he lacked the necessary education, and worse than all the money to study. The boy was too modest to tell any one of his situation, but Admiral Dewey, who loved his father, suspected it and decided to act. He determined to pay the boy's expenses while studying for the lieutenancy. He met young Gridley at the White House and presented him to the president. Admiral Dewey started to explain the situation when the president interrupted and said:

"You and I, admiral, will pay his expenses in preparing for examination. If he fails in the first examination, I will give him another chance, but I am sure he will be ready when the time comes."

FIGHTING THE INDIAN DECISION.

Secretary of the Interior May Have to Settle a Disputed Question in Oklahoma.

Guthrie, O. T., Dec. 2. — The attorneys of the Choctaw Indian tribe again attacked the judgment of the United States court at the hearing before the Dawes commission today for admitting claimants to citizenship as a member of only one of the tribes. The attorneys claim that the land of the Chickasaw and Choctaw nations is common property of both tribes, and that citizenship in one necessarily means citizenship in both. If their contention is correct and the judgment of the court is reversed it will affect more than 3,000 persons who have been admitted to citizenship by decrees of the court and involve property rights to the extent of $20,000,000. It is said here that the secretary of the interior will rule on the question.

REVOLUTION SPREADING.

Movement in Colombia Gaining Great Strength.

Kingston, Jam., Dec. 2.—Colombian advices received here by the steamer Louisiana say the revolution is spreading throughout the United republic and gaining much strength. Details as to the movements of the Liberals are lacking, but the stereotyped censorized cable dispatches relating to government success are discredited, the fact being that the main bodies of the insurgents are avoiding action until the revolution is thoroughly organized. Several casual bands of recruits have been dispersed and a few reverses have been suffered on the water, but the insurrection is not fully launched yet, and is apparently awaiting further outside aid presumably Venezuelan, which it is asserted is delayed owing to the outbreak of counter revolution there.

FAITH WELL KEPT

WITH THE PEOPLE OF MINNESOTA BY THE LIND ADMINISTRATION.

The First Annual Report of the Grain Department by Chief Inspector Reishus—In Spite of Efforts to Hamper Reform, a Good Showing Is Made. Echoes of Republican Policies and Administration—Up With the Trusts and Down With the Farmers—Points From the Message and From Secretary Gage—Our English "Relations"—The 16 to 1 Standard in Use by the Boers. Minnesota's Grand State Fair Record. Note and Comment of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau.
St. Paul, Dec. 11, 1899.

The chief event of the week in state administration has been the annual report of the grain inspection department made by Chief Inspector E. S. Reishus, who succeeded A. C. Clausen four months ago. The report has been quite widely given to the state press, and too much attention cannot be given it by the people. It shows a very material increase in the volume of business, nearly 60,000 carloads of grain having been unloaded at the four terminal points, more than during the previous year. The enormous quantity of 217,924 carloads of wheat were received during the year, all but about 1,000 cars being Northwestern spring wheat.

The department collected during the year $188,026.30, an increase in the receipts over the previous year of $35,412. The disbursements for the season were $213,764, showing a net loss for the year, nine months of which was conducted by Mr. Reishus' predecessor, of $24,838.24. This reduces the net surplus of former years to a little more than $21,000, being all that was left of a surplus of $123,268.54 Nov. 30, 1896, when the inspection and weighing fees were reduced from 25 cents a car to 15 cents. Thus, as Inspector Reishus states, on Aug. 31 last, when he had been in office one month, he found that the surplus had shrunk $102,032.44 in 32 months. In other words, during that length of time of the administration of Mr. Clausen, the finances of the department, with a 15-cent fee enforced, ran behind $100,000. This makes clear the necessity for the increase of the fee recently made, and in addition, there had been the establishment of the board of grain appeals, calling for the further expenditure of about $20,000 per year.

The law requiring that the department shall be self-supporting and that grain inspection shall be borne by the shippers of grain without any additional burden upon the general tax payers, Inspector Reishus says: "Therefore, the business-like administration of the department, indeed, the maintenance of the entire state grain and warehouse system, not to mention the support of the new Board of Grain Appeals, demanded the restoration of the fees for inspection and weighing."

An important reform affected has been the turning of samples of grain taken by state inspectors at the Minneapolis and Duluth terminals back to the state by selling and placing the proceeds to the credit of the grain inspection fund. This makes a saving of $3,000 per year, or enough to pay the rental expenses of the Minneapolis and Duluth departments.

The old practice was for the inspecting officials to gobble the samples. It is estimated that in the 14 years of the department this steal may have reached the sum of $75,000. Inspector Reishus rightly denounces the system as wrong and demoralizing. The grain thus taken, of course, is the property of the shippers, but it being impracticable to return it to the owners, the next best thing to do is to sell it and place the proceeds in the fund from which the expense of inspection comes, thus indirectly returning it to the owners, since they pay the inspection expense.

Inspector Reishus was besought most urgently, especially in Duluth, to devote the grain to a public charity, but he found himself unable to do so, since, as he says: "As a public official the law gave me no authority to devote the money or property of the department to private uses or charity."

Inspector Reishus explodes the humbug that only long years can fit men for service in the department. Two or three months' experience, he shows, is ample, for men otherwise qualified. "It requires," says the inspector, "immensely more experience and judgment to grow 50-cent wheat at a profit than to name the grade of the wheat after it is dumped into the elevator or car," and this he gives after 20 years experience in the handling and growing of grain.

The present season's crop is more difficult than usual to grade, by reason of the heavy fall rains which affected a large part of the crop, and the rust and blight in different sections. The inspector has no fear, however, that the outcome will not be satisfactory, for, he says: "Growers and handlers of grain are, as a rule, reasonable and fair-minded men, and will appreciate an honest and industrious effort to give just grades."

The policy that shall govern the department is thus outlined: "It is the aim to establish uniformity and stability of grades, to give to the producer and dealer, the miller and Eastern purchaser the same uniform grade and at all stages of the market and seasons of the year; to give the same grade in the fall, when the grain is in the hands of the producer, as in the winter and spring, when it is largely in the hands of the dealers, miller and elevators; to give the same grade when wheat is depressed as well as when wheat is boomed high; to give the producer a grade as high as the character and condition of the grain will warrant, and give the dealer a grade no lower than the grain demands."

Thus is another department of the administration keeping full faith with the people.

And how it must delight the farmers to learn that it is a matter of official record that proof was offered the interstate industrial investigation at Chicago that five men in that city connected with the transportation combines, daily fix the price of wheat! Such testimony was given by Mr. Countryman, one of the five.

Combines to keep grain down. Trusts to force manufactures up. This is the system brought upon the country by Republican legislation.

Secretary Gage points to the large treasury balance, but fails to remark that it is what we have left after borrowing $200,000,000 a year ago, and paying in over $273,000,000 in war taxes in one year. Imperialism and British financiering come high but we must have them.

Speaking of farm and trust prices, a Milwaukee paper examines a year of McKinley's "best" prosperity, taking wheat, barley, oats and corn, and iron piping, sucker rods, rope, twine, nails and lumber for comparison. For the same days of November, '98 and '99, wheat is 5 cents lower, barley 3½ cents lower, oats 1½ cents lower, and corn 4¼ cents lower. But the iron piping has risen from 5½ to 25 cents, sucker rods from 7½ to 11½, rope and twine from 8 to 17 cents, nails from $1.65 to $3.40, and lumber from $12 to $18.

That is, a year ago it took three bushels of wheat to buy 100 pounds of nails, and now five and one-half bushels; last year, four bushels of barley to pay for the keg of nails, and now seven bushels; last year seven bushels of oats for the keg of nails, now 14. For a thousand feet of lumber it takes 10 bushels more of wheat, 15 more of barley, 28 more of oats and 18 more of corn to pay for it than a year ago.

"How do you like it, Mr. Farmer?" asks the Milwaukee Advance. "And don't you know that it was your vote that did it? Don't you know that you voted for prosperity—for the trusts?"

And the small dealer, the ordinary merchant, gets it the same way—in the neck. We have just seen the notice of the plug tobacco trust to its customers, notifying them arbitrarily of the discontinuance of their chief margin of profit, 10 per cent on sales. From Dec. 1 on, all that each dealer can possibly make is 2 per cent, on cash purchases. All unfilled orders are cancelled and everything subject to change without notice.

A student notes in Burke's speech at the trial of Warren Hastings the following complete definition of the McKinley "benevolent assimilation:"

"Conquest may cover its baldness with its own laurels, and the ambitions of the conqueror may be hid in the secrets of his own heart, under a veil of benevolence, and make him imagine he is bringing temporary desolation upon a country only to promote its ultimate advantage and his own glory." "There never was a man," said Burke, "who thought he had no law but his own will, who did not soon find he had no end but his own profit."

And still more directly applicable, Burke said, against coercing America:

"America, gentlemen say, is a noble object. It is an object well worth fighting for. Certainty it is, if fighting a people is the best way of gaining them."

And that was the English "traitor," Edmund Burke.

McKinley subscribed himself to the trusts, in his message, as the blushing, yielding maiden closed her letter, "Your friend and more."

It should be a matter of pride to Secretary Randall and officials of the agricultural society that in the number and variety of exhibits, in attendance and in receipts the Minnesota State Fair ranked first in the United States this year. Not only is this a matter of pride to our citizens, but the knowledge of so great a success is valuable to the state in many ways. It has made the securing of the National Hereford exhibition and sale for 1900 an accomplished fact, and has caused the spread of the conviction among live stock men, farmers and others of the country that Minnesota is a good state, and that her people are imbued with a spirit of enterprise, energy and progress.

Congress is at it, and the recognition of Minnesota's distinguished delegation to date, is to make Tawney a British "whip," Morris a judge of polygamy in the Roberts case, to permit McCleary to read the financial bill, and a "mention" of Fletcher.

A question before the congressional house is, will Congressman Heatwole open his mouth, this session, enough to disclose his nationality to a wondering nation.

There seems a good deal of 16 to 1, in the South African campaign—16 British killed to 1 Boer, and the Boers approve the standard!

Hon. Charles A. Towne is in Washington, where he may remain until after the opening of the new year. It is already certain that there will be the closest co-operation of the party of which he is the official head, with the Democratic and Peoples party organizations. When the same is extended, as it will surely be, to the powerful allies of the American anti-imperialists and anti-trusters, the whole will make an invincible army, and their vote is morally certain to be thrown for the same candidate next November. Then down will go the Republican imperialists and monopolists.

"Mr. McKinley," remarks the Minneapolis Journal correspondent, "has now burned the bridge behind him on the financial question, and can no longer pose in the role of a bi-metallist." This is not news, but fact. All but the dullest found it out long ago.

DEFEAT FOR BRITISH

SERIOUS REVERSE IN THE ATTACK ON STORMBERG.

Gen. Gatacre's Repulse Regarded as the Most Serious Defeat British Arms Has Sustained in the Whole Campaign—Two Men Killed, Nine Officers and Seventeen Men Wounded and Nine Officers and 596 Men Missing—Gen. Gatacre Evidently the Victim of Treacherous Guides.

London, Dec. 12.—The war office publishes the following dispatch from Gen. Forestier-Walker at Cape Town:

"Gatacre reports: Deeply regret to inform you that I met with serious reverse in attack on Stromberg. I was misled as to the enemy's position by the guides and found impracticable ground."

It is hardly too much to regard Gen. Gatacre's repulse near Stormberg as the most serious defeat British arms have yet sustained in the whole campaign. Already the official advice show that two men were killed and nine officers and seventeen men were wounded and nine officers and 596 men are missing. But it is evident the worst is not yet known. The proportion of wounded and killed is so small when compared with the missing, who are undoubtedly prisoners in the hands of the Boers, that the supplementary list of casualties is awaited with serious misgivings. It is also feared there were serious losses of guns and equipment. The most serious aspect of the affair is the effect it is likely to have on the Dutch in Cape Colony who have been wavering whether to throw their lot with the Boers. The Dutch farmers are now likely to join the rebellion.

The disclosure of such a strong force about Stormberg was quite unexpected. Doubtless Gen. Gatacre was the victim of treacherous guides. But the movement points also to the absence of proper cavalry scouting.

Story of the Disaster.

Molteno, Cape Colony, Dec. 12.—Gen. Gatacre left Putter's kraal by train for Molteno and then proceeded by forced march twelve miles toward Stormberg. He had 2,000 men, including the Northumberland fusileers, the Royal Irish rifles and two batteries of field artillery. The British were unmolested by the Boers until the Boer position was reached, when a hot fire was unexpectedly opened upon the advancing column. The engagement began at 4:15 a. m. At 7 a. m., after a sharp artillery duel, the British retired. They are now marching toward Molteno. Gen. Gatacre found the enemy's position impregnable. It was impossible for the British infantry to get at the Boers. Gen. Gatacre's movement may be termed a reconnaissance in force. Its object was to ascertain the strength of the position of the Boers, who were strongly intrenched along the Stormberg range. The column arrived safely within a couple of miles of its destination, the only incidents of the march being an occasional sudden call of "halt" under the belief that the Boers were near. Suddenly a terrific fire opened simultaneously on the British front and right flank. The Royal Irish rifles, which formed the advance, behind a neighboring kopje and were speedily joined by the remainder of the column. It was soon found, however, that this position was also covered by Boer guns, which were more powerful than had been supposed. The troops, therefore, found a safer position about half a mile away, two batteries in the meantime engaging the Boers and covering the troops in their withdrawal. The action now became general at long range and a detachment of mounted infantry moved northward with a view of using Gatlings on the enemy's right flank. Suddenly a strong commando was seen moving from the north and the Royal Irish rifles and the Northumberland regiment were sent out to meet it. It was soon discovered, however, that the Boers had machine guns well placed and the British were compelled to face a terrible fire. Finding it impossible to hold the position in the face of an enemy apparently superior in position in numbers and in artillery, the British retired on Molteno, the Boers following up the retirement closely and firing two big guns to bear on the retiring column. It is believed here that the British casualties were not serious.

Communication With Ladysmith.

Frere Camp, Natal, Dec. 12.—Heliographic communication with Ladysmith continues daily. Gen. Schalkberger and Commandant Louis Botha are in command of the Boer forces investing Ladysmith. Their horses are said to be in poor condition. A heavy report was heard in the direction of Colenso yesterday. The sound was followed by a big cloud of smoke. The supposition is that the enemy had blown up the highway bridge.

Victory for the British.

Ladysmith, Dec. 12.—The British troops made a sortie between 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning. They crawled up a ravine and stormed and carried Lombardskop, which was held by the Boers and on which were placed a Creusot gun and a Howitzer. These guns were destroyed with dynamite. The British captured a Maxim gun and then retired. The Lancers, Hussars and Guards made a sortie west of Ladysmith at daybreak under cover of a heavy artillery fire, which the Boers returned briskly. The British afterward returned to Ladysmith. The Boer losses are reported to have been slight. A strong burgher column has crossed the Tugela river at Colenso with the object of attacking the British and the court column.

Boers Repulsed at Kimberley.

Cape Town, Dec. 12.—It is rumored here that the Boers attacked Kimberley at close quarters last night but were repulsed with heavy loss.

LOSS OF THE NIAGARA.

Now Certain That She Went Down With All on Board.

Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 12.—It is now certain that the Canadian steamer Niagara, Capt. Henry McClory, foundered on Tuesday evening about eight miles east of Long Point, Lake Erie, with all hands, numbering sixteen persons. Tugs sent out from Port Colborne and from Buffalo to search for the missing steamer have returned, bringing with them great quantities of wreckage picked up near where she is supposed to have foundered. The wreckage includes a part of the Niagara's deck, portions of the cabin, deck beams, other material and a quantity of shingles marked "Parry Sound," from which port the Niagara sailed for Buffalo. Judging from the amount of wreckage that has been found the Niagara must have broken up badly in the storm. It is the opinion of lake captains that the boat went down in deep water, about eight miles east of Long Point, as none of her spars has been found, and if she had gone down in shallow water they would be sticking up. The storm which destroyed the Niagara was one of the worst that ever raged over Lake Erie. The wind was blowing a gale of forty-five miles an hour and it was snowing heavily, even the heaviest and strongest boats made for shelter, and it is the opinion of vessel men that Capt. McClory attempted to turn his boat around and run under Long Point, and in doing so encountered the full force of the storm, his craft going to pieces.

OBJECT TO JOE WHEELER

Bailey of Texas Will Protest Against His Taking His Seat in Congress.

New York, Dec. 12.—A special to the World from Washington says: Representative Bailey of Texas is ready to protest against Gen. Joe Wheeler's admission to congress should he return from Manila and present himself to assume his position as representative from Alabama. Mr. Bailey will contend that Gen. Wheeler cannot hold two positions—major general of volunteers and member of congress—at the same time. Mr. Bailey has made a canvass of the Democratic side and received promises of support from nearly 100 members. Mr. Bailey, in the last congress took a strong stand against Wheeler holding a seat in congress and a commission in the United States army at the same time, when, through personal feeling for Gen. Wheeler many of his Democratic colleagues winked at the infraction of the law and voted for Gen. Wheeler retaining his seat. Mr. Bailey then gave notice he resigned the leadership of the minority and would not again be a candidate for the position.

Military in Control.

Corbin, Ky., Dec. 12.—This town is under the protection of the military in consequence of the killing of Deputy Marshal Henry Halford while in pursuit of participants in a saloon fight. It is not known who killed him. Floyd and Ed Chadwell are under arrest. Their young brother is said to have been the ringleader in the fight, and they interfered when the officer attempted to arrest him. There is danger of further violence.

Masked Men Rob a Priest.

Clinton, Ind., Dec. 12.—Four masked men entered the residence of the Rev. Father John F. Stanton and with drawn revolvers, forced the priest to deliver what valuables he had on his person, afterward searching the house. They then forced the priest to build a fire, over which they sat until daylight, when they made their escape. There is no clew to the robbers.

Victim of Christian Science.

Vincennes, Ind., Dec. 12.—Karl, the two-year-old son of Thomas Wilson of Monroe City, this county, died after being sick some time without receiving medical assistance except treatment from Christian Scientists. County Health Officer Becks ordered Coroner Held to investigate the case and he is now holding an inquest. Arrests will follow.

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 12.—Albert Ward, a barber, was killed here by Morris Dalton. The latter and a friend were standing at the corner when Ward approached intoxicated. An argument arose and a fight followed and Dalton struck Ward on the back of the head with a brick, fracturing his skull. He lived but a short time.

May Have Been an Official.

Lansing, Mich., Dec. 12.—The grand jury returned another indictment Saturday and adjourned until to-day. The name of the person indicted is suppressed, but it is surmised that the respondent is a former state official.

Government Bonds.

New York, Dec. 12.—United States government bonds last week touched the highest price of the year. Saturday's quotations were from 1-8 for the 3 per cent to 1 3-4 per cent higher for the 4 per cent bonds than a year ago.

DEL PILAR KILLED.

Aguinaldo's Officer Shot Defending Retreat.

Manila, Dec. 12.—Gen. Gregorio del Pilar, commanding Aguinaldo's bodyguard, was killed by Maj. Peyton March's battalion of the Thirty-third infantry, in a fight eighteen miles northwest of Cervantes on Dec. 3. According to reports which Gen. Young obtained from escaped prisoners at Vigan several days ago, Maj. March left the coast, where he was pursuing Aguinaldo, and encountered Gen. del Pilar on a fortified trail. They fought for four hours, during which time seventy Filipinos were killed or wounded. The American loss was one man killed and six wounded. The Spaniards report that Maj. March is still pursuing the insurgents.

-o-

Manila, Dec. 12.—An expedition headed by the battleship Oregon left Manila for Subig last night. It is reported that the Filipino commander, Gen. Alejandrino, with his staff, has surrendered to Gen. MacArthur, and there is also a rumor that Alejandrino is at Alguor, suffering from a wound received in a fight between insurgents and bandits, and that he will be given an opportunity to surrender and will be properly cared for. Maj. Spence, with a column of the Thirty-second regiment, captured a new insurgent camp, an uncompleted stronghold, in the Tassan district.

Three Americans who, with a commissary sergeant of the Twelfth infantry, were travelling from San Fernando to Angeles, left their escort for a moment and went into the brush. As they did not return speedily a search was made for them, but they could not be found. They were probably captured by the rebels.

A mail orderly disappeared between Angeles and Bamban. He is supposed to have been captured.

A force of 400 insurgents yesterday attacked near Batuga, a wagon train escorted by thirty men of the Sixteenth cavalry. A sharp engagement followed. The Filipinos lost eighteen killed and nine captured. During the recent attack by the insurgents upon Vigan the Filipinos obtained possession of the plaza and of a church in the center of the town from which the Americans dislodged them. It seems the escaped Spaniards obtained guns and fought with the Americans against the insurgents.

WEST INDIES FOR SALE.

Danish Government Would Sell Their Possessions.

Washington, Dec. 12.—The Post says the Danish government has made another effort to sell the Danish West Indies to the United States. The proposition was laid before the state department by approval of the danish government and the matter is now under consideration. The American embassy in London is assisting in the negotiations. The price asked for the islands is $3,000,000.

Demanded by France.

Paris, Dec. 12.—The French government has formally demanded the degradation of the viceroy of Canton because the order to execute the Chinese magistrate who was responsible for the murder of two French officers at Montao has not been carried out. The tsung li yamen will probably refuse.

Unfit Insane Asylums.

Des Moines, Dec. 12.—Official investigation of the twenty insane asylums in Iowa by the board of control is developing some scandals of large magnitude. The board finds that not one of the institutions is fit for the purpose for which it is used.

No Traffic Agreement.

Chicago, Dec. 12.—The Tribune says: There appears to be no foundation of any kind for the report of anything but a traffic agreement between the Union Pacific and Chicago & Northwestern.

France has a new submarine boat and will soon subject the invention to a series of trial tests to prove its superiority to recently constructed American vessels. The chief trouble with the submarine boats built up to date has been their tendency to be entirely too submarine—to stay down and refuse to come up again. If the French have really made a boat which will dive, swim under the surface and arise when due the art of naval warfare may be materially revolutionized.

The omnipresent microbe is making its disturbing influence felt in strange and unexpected quarters. Beards and mustaches are placed under ban as being nesting-places of errant intruders, some of them pathogenic, or, in everyday parlance, having the power to produce disease. Because of this, the London Globe states, on the authority of a French scientific journal, that on motion of the celebrated Br. Hubenck, of Breslau, the leading surgeons of Austria and Germany are considering the adopting of a rule requiring surgeons to be clean-shaved, or to, at least, as a preventive of danger, disinfect the hair of the face before operating. Nothing is said as to the hair of the head, but if this, too, is included in the interdict, bald-headed surgeons will enjoy a gratifying advantage.

The excessive candor which characterizes the criticism of men who hold public offices should not be considered proof that Americans do not respect public officers. Freedom of speech often degenerates into flippancy, but when a public man who holds an important place of authority appears in his official capacity the gathered crowds manifest a respectful deference. The highest illustration is furnished when the president of the United States is greeted at various points on a journey. Partisan violence ceases. No voice, no gesture expresses contempt or disrespect, although in each assembly may be many a political opponent whose private remarks may be uncomplimentary to the verge of savageness. The chief magistrate, who is officially the representative of all the people, moves through throngs which are cordial, appreciative, considerate. Antagonists may not like the man. They do not fail to honor the office. Tested with respect to their opinion of exalted station, Americans are to be judged by their behavior, and not by their talk.

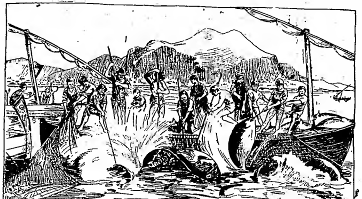
A curious point of copyright law has been decided in England by the High Court of Justice. It appears that a volume of Lord Rosebery's speeches was prepared, in which were addresses, or portions of addresses, that had been reported from his lips for the London Times. As they were first put in literary or written form at the cost of that journal, the court decided that they were the property of the Times, and therefore granted an injunction to restrain his lordship from appropriating the report of his own words.

There is probably no truth in the report that Ambassador Choate in effect slighted ex-President Harrison on the occasion of the latter's visit to London by turning him over to the secretary of the embassy for the latter to arrange for Mr. Harrison's calls upon the prince of Wales and others. An ambassador, however, who disregards the plain instructions of his superiors in office as to speech-making is not likely to be over-punctilious in matters of courtesy, even to an ex-president of the country he was so anxious to represent.

CATCHING THE TUNNY FISH

Driven Into Enormous Nets in the Mediterranean and Slashed to Death.

One of the most thrilling and wonderful sights is that of the tunny fisheries in the Mediterranean sea. The pursuit of these great and swift fish is not a mere tame operation of netting. It is a fight between man and sea creatures such as is duplicated nowhere except in the whale fisheries. The tunny is a huge mackerel. He is a predaceous fish, and his course through the seas is that of a destroyer without parallel. So deadly is the tunny to the schools of herring and similar food fish that he is called the herring hog. In our waters he is known more generally as the horse mackerel. The tunny fisheries are distinctly European, and they are the oldest industry that is known in the Mediterranean sea. To capture them men must band themselves together in large bodies, for fishermen singly could do nothing with these fish, which grow to a length of ten feet and weigh over half a ton sometimes. Therefore there is a system of co-operation on the coasts that are visited by the tunny, a system which dates back to the Phoenicians, who were great tunny catchers in their time. The perfection of this system is due, among other things, to the fact that the big fish have absolutely regular habits. In normal times they can be relied on to make their appearance at certain periods almost to the minute. When they come it is in huge schools that can be seen afar, for they scour the waters like ships of war, and the leapings of their prey and the leapings of their own bulky bodies beat the deep into white foam and lather.



FIGHTING THE TUNNIES

Since they are so exact in their habits, the fishermen prepare for them always before they arrive. At some designated spot are spread enormous nets, exceedingly deep and made of the strongest of line. These are not designed to catch the tunnies. They are spread out merely to force the fish to edge in and in, until they are led to the real prison net, which is a vast contrivance, set in an immense square and powerful enough to defy anything that swims. As soon as the last of the school has entered this box-like enclosure, the sides of the great net are raised at a signal. At first the imprisoned fish do not show any signs of alarm. But as the net rises, inch by inch, from the water depths, gleaming, sword-like backs appear here and there upon the surface darting with incredible swiftness from side to side of the net. Each instant more of these living blades appear above the surface. Then the fish begin to leap. Here one launches himself straight out of the water, 500 pounds of glorious life toward the sky, to crash back into the sea with a flail-like blow of sides and tail that makes the ocean echo. Another and another rises and falls back. Soon the scene is as if the abysses of the sea were spouting their inhabitants, for hundreds of immense silver-flashing fish rise everywhere at once within the net.

But now a new element enters. Long, narrow fishing boats push into the inclosure. In them stand brown men with lances and spears and big knives lashed to poles. Then begins a fight that is terrible to see. The men thrust madly into the struggling masses of fish. The fish leap and roll and dive and leap again, hammering the sea with tails that turn like the screws of steamships, and whiten the waves with foam. Before many minutes boats and men are drenched with bloody water. The surface of the ocean is red. Out of the smoking spray peer faces now and then that are dabbled with blood till they look scarcely human. Now and then a man slips and falls among the harried fish. Then there are loud screams from his companions and cries of supplication from him as he calls to his patron saint, for it is no joke to fall among these mighty bodies that are dashing around in their death throes.

So the fight continues till in inclosed space of sea there is not a fish alive. Every boat is half full of water and loaded down with living silver, where the slim, piratical bodies of the fish lie. The inhabitants of the town near the scene of this fishing make a fete day out of the arrival of the tunny, for it means food and employment for many hundreds of men, women and children. The fish is a favorite article of food, especially when salted, and the roe is a great delicacy, which brings fancy prices. The tunnies that are caught off the Italian coasts have to be passed through the custom house when they are landed, like any other merchandise, and the streets there present a strange appearance then, for on all sides are wheelbarrows full of the shapely, monstrous creatures.

Work of the Baptist Church.

The Baptists of America have a membership in the neighborhood of 4,000,000. They have a Sunday school attendance of nearly 2,000,000. Their church properties run over $75,000,000 in value, and their annual contributions to good works exceed 20 per cent of that vast sum. They have more than 150 institutions of learning, universities, seminaries and academies, covering the educational requirements of both sexes in the church and at the same time making provision for the colored race and native Indians.

GENEROUS BUT UNWISE.

Mrs. Oliphant Supported Her Brother, Nephew and Sons.

Mrs. Oliphant, one of the most popular of English novelists, died lately, and her life—partly written by herself—has just been published, says the Youth's Companion. There can be no indelicacy in commenting on facts which she herself has given to the public. She began to write in early girlhood and wrote continuously through middle life and on into old age, when most women are tenderly protected and cared for by their children. She was paid large sums of money for her books, and with simply ordinary expenditure for herself would have accumulated sufficient for her full support in old age—but she died penniless. The reason was that she maintained not only her own children when they were left fatherless, but her brother and his family. These four men—her brother, her nephew and her sons—when they had reached man's estate, willingly remained pensioners upon her bounty. She was a loving, generous woman. She made for them a full, luxurious home; gave them fine clothes and dainty fare, and the best education which England could provide. As the burden grew heavier she worked the harder, not infrequently writing all night. God had ennobled her with great mental gifts, but she had no time left in which to give her best work to the world. Instead, hastily written novels, biographies and anonymous papers were sold to willing publishers to provide those four men with the necessities and luxuries of life. They were indolent and willing to be idle, and dropped one by one into the grave, leaving not one piece of honest work behind them to justify their lives. Was it altogether their fault? There are countless homes in this country where unselfish men or women are sacrificing themselves to support some unworthy son or brother. The world calls them martyrs, but is it God's work they are doing? If not, whose?

Knew It Was in the Lehigh.

A certain Pennsylvania Sunday school teacher was questioning her class. "Where was Christ born?" she asked Willie. Willie pondered awhile and finally announced, "Mauch Chunk." "Mauch Chunk!" screamed the teacher. "You ought to know better than that. Why, little Georgie knows where Christ was born. Where was Christ born, Georgie?" And the treble of the 4-year-old answered: "Beth-le-hem." "That's right," said the teacher. "Well," said Willie, pouting, "I knew 'twas somewhere on the Lehigh Valley railway."

HIS PLEBEIAN FAMILY.

One of the World's Injustices That Should Be Righted.

Why is the tone in which one says, of a self-made man, "He used to drive a fish cart," distinctly more favorable than that with which one says, "You know, his father was only a fish peddler?" It is considered quite a compliment, among sensible people, to contrast the past depths of a man with his present heights, says the New York Commercial Advertiser. On the other hand, even among, not at all snobbish persons, there is a suspicion of contempt in referring to a man's ancestors when speaking of his present affluence or success. It really ought to be the other way; for it is far easier to change one's self than to change one's family; and similarly to rise from a family is harder than to rise from merely one's own individuality, if both the family and the individuality are equally unprepossessing in the beginning. This is one of those injustices of the world that ought to be righted.

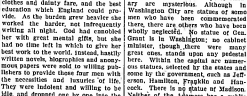
Statues Lacking at the Capital.

The pedestals for the statue of Gen. Sherman in Washington have arisen to their full height to receive the elaborate statuary which public and army subscription have ordered since Gen. Sherman's death. The man above all others who caused this statue to be is the aged Gen. Granville Dodge, a Vermonter, like Dewey, although long resident in Iowa. The ways of statuary are mysterious. Although in Washington City are statues of some men who have been commemorated there, there are others who have been wholly neglected. No statue of Gen. Grant is in Washington; no cabinet minister, though there were many great ones, stands upon any pedestal here. Within the capital are numerous statues, selected by the states and some by the government, such as Jefferson, Hamilton, Franklin and Hancock. There is no statue of Madison. Neither of the Adamses has a public monument. Stanton, Seward, Gallatin, have passed their opportunity.—Kansas City Star.

Fashionable Shoes.

The most fashionable walking shoes this winter will have the medium bulldog toe, heavy, slightly projecting sole and military heel. The uppers will be of soft box calf, and the vamps of patent or enameled leather. On many brass eyelets are being used. The newest walking boots are an inch higher than the ordinary shoe. For house and evening wear shoes and slippers will be made, with rather narrow, rounded toes and extremely high heels.

THE AFTERMATH OF THE DREYFUS AFFAIR



After the storm the calm. If there is one man living who deserves the rest and peace and quiet of a happy home life for the remainder of his years, that man is Capt. Dreyfus. After five long years spent in his heroic struggle for justice Dreyfus is now living peacefully with his family at Carpentras, where the photograph from which the accompanying picture of the long exiled French officer and his family was recently taken. Everyone who has read those touching and pathetic letters written by Dreyfus during his imprisonment on Devil's Island will understand the satisfaction and happiness of this affectionate father and faithful husband on being once more united with that family which he so loved and who proved such a stay and support to him during his many trials and vicissitudes.

MAKING MONEY ON THE SIDE.

How Many English Clergymen Increase Their Incomes.

From the London Mail: As the topic of the remuneration of the clergy is very much to the fore just now, and is even being made the subject of possible legislation, it will doubtless be interesting to mention a few instances in which the reverend gentlemen have not waited for parliamentary interference, but set about increasing their slender incomes in their own way. Of course the most popular form their efforts take is usually that of contributions to various magazines, and it is safe to say that there are dozens, if not hundreds, of the clergy who earn an appreciable amount in this way. The writing and composing of hymns is also a method closely allied to the foregoing. One rector in Norfolk figures as a nurseryman in his spare time, his specialty being roses, and many visitors to the Broads will doubtless remember the sight his garden affords from the river in flowering time. That he finds it yields profit as well as pleasure is evidenced by the fact that he spends nearly £100 per annum simply to advertise his various roses and other plants for sale. Another cleric, whose living is in the country of Nottingham, also lets his supplementary pecuniary efforts run in the direction of horticulture, his particular fancy being zonal pelargoniums and geraniums, which are of first-rate quality. Although not sold under his name, a certain paste for rejuvenating silk hats is the invention of a Church of England minister, who directs a snug little business in it through the medium of a relation who poses as a proprietor. Down in Surrey one of the cloth employs his spare time in rearing prize strains of poultry, to which he has lately added canaries as a source of further profit. In the southwestern counties, which are rich in minerals, small collections of geological specimens are formed, named and sold by clergymen to students who are in want of such things. As much of this business is done through the medium of advertisement, the cleric suffers no loss of prestige if he does not let his name appear. Bee farming was taken up by a clergyman in Essex, but up to the present does not appear to have been a particular success. It will be seen that it is necessary to live in the country to carry out most of these schemes effectively. For the overworked, underpaid city curate there seems to be nothing that he can turn his attention to.

DUSKY JOAN OF ARC.

Said to Be Leading a Brigade of the Filipino Army.

The New York Herald does not vouch for this story, but says it is romantic enough to print—with a string on it. It is reproduced from a Manila newspaper called Freedom, where it appears as part of an interview with a Spanish prisoner escaped from the Filipino lines: "One thing not generally known is that a saddle-colored Joan of Arc is leading a brigade of the ragtag army. She is described as being about 35 years of age, a pure Filipino and very plain looking; she was dressed in trousers, high boots, short khaki jacket and carried a handsome belt with two revolvers attached. She wore one of the United States service hats, and on her shoulders the straps of her rank. The natives gave her every honor and said she was perfectly fearless on the field. Her husband whom she was with when he was killed near Imus, was a major; when he fell she seized his revolver and tried to reform the flying 'gugus,' but in vain. For this she was commissioned in her husband's place and has since been promoted to a brigadier for bravery. There is also a full-blooded Chino in the insurgent army who ranks as a brigadier on Gen. Ricarte's staff. He was with Aguinaldo in Hongkong and served with him against the Spanish. His hair has been cut short and he is noted among the Filipinos for his diamonds and cruelty. He wears gems worth $5,000 on his person; the natives say that prisoners receive the cruelest of treatment at his hands, and his own men are treated with the utmost severity for slight breaches of discipline. There is also a Jap, holding a major's commission, and an Australian, who is a lieutenant-colonel. This man does not speak Tagalo. He is probably the officer heard several times during engagements giving commands in English."

Remarkable Asylum.

A Calcutta paper contains an account of the workhouse or asylum for infirm beasts and birds that was established some thirteen years ago by a society of influential Hindus. It is near the Sodepur station, about ten miles from Calcutta, and is under the control of a manager, with a staff of eighty servants, and an experienced veterinary surgeon. In the place at present there are 973 paupers—129 bulls, 397 cows, 171 calves, 72 horses, 13 water buffaloes, 69 sheep, 16 goats, 141 pigeons, 44 cocks and hens, 4 cats, 3 monkeys and 5 dogs. This remarkable asylum is described as being most systematically and mercifully managed. The cow paupers have especially a good time of it, inasmuch as, on the occasion of the "mela," natives go from far and near to decorate and worship them.

Brides Chosen by Trousseau.

A strange custom prevails among Roumanian peasants. When a young girl is of marriageable age all her trousseau (which has been carefully woven, spun and embroidered by her mother and herself) is placed in a painted wooden box. When a young man thinks of asking to be allowed to pay his attentions to the girl he is at liberty first to open the box, which is always placed conveniently at hand, and examine the trousseau. If the suitor is satisfied with the quantity and quality of the dowry, he makes a formal application for the girl's hand, but if, on the contrary, the trousseau does not please him, he is quite at liberty to retire.

Still Wondering.

"Yes," said the bachelor reflectively, "I offended her in some way, but I don't really know how. You see, her baby was fretful, and she explained that he had been cutting his teeth; whereupon I asked her why she let him play with a knife."

TIBETAN DEATH DANCES.

"Ceremony of the Sacrificial Body of the Dead Year."

Very strange performances are the death dances of the Tibetan mystery-plays, one of which is performed on the last three days of the year and is called "the ceremony of the sacrificial body of the dead year." The effigy of a man made out of dough as lifelike as possible and having inside a distinct heart and all the entrails filled with a red fluid, is placed by four cemetery ghouls in sight of the numerous spectators in the center of the yard, and at once bands of skeleton ghosts rush upon the corpse to attack it. This is the time to display the necromatic power of Lamaism over the evil spirits. Monks and lamas come forth and go through a series of ceremonies, the magic effect of which keeps the fiends away. But a more formidable devil, with great horns and possessed of superior powers, makes his appearance and takes the field. Whereupon a saint or an incarnation of Buddha himself comes to the rescue, sprays flour on the enemy, makes mystic signs and utters incantations. The skeleton-ghosts and the big fiend grovel before him and implore mercy. He graciously yields to their supplications and allows them to partake of a sacramental meal. While they kneel before him he gives to each one of them a little flour to eat and a drink out of a vessel of holy water. This concludes the day's performance. The corpse, however, is not destined to be preserved. On the next day the fight is renewed, and, after a cannonade with blessed mustard seed and other exorcisms, an awful demon appears whose title is "the Holy King of Religion." He wears the head of a bull, a dagger in the right and the effigy of a human heart in the left hand. This strange figure seems to represent the main deity of the ancient Tibetans when they were still in the habit of offering human sacrifices, not in effigy, but in reality. The demon god has been converted by Buddha and becomes a protector of Buddhism. He is now satisfied with human sacrifices in effigy, and the man made of dough, being supposed to be an enemy of Tibet, is surrendered to him. He dances round the figure of the man on the ground, stabs him, binds his feet in a snare, and at last cuts off his limbs, slits open his breast, takes out his bleeding heart, lungs, and other intestines. At this moment a horde of monsters falls upon the remnants of the dismembered dough-man and scatters them in all directions. The pieces are collected again in a silver basin and the holy king of religion, eating a morsel, throws them up in the air. This is the signal for the finale; the pieces are caught and fought for by the demons, and at last the crowd of spectators joins the general scramble for pieces of dough, representing human flesh, which they either eat or treasure up as talismans.—Open Court.

LITTLE MISTAKE.

That Caused a Bashful Young Man to Change His Plans.

New York Tribune: It is always well that the heads of the family know when invitations are given by the sons and daughters of the house and accepted by their friends. In a certain large and hospitable home on Staten Island where visitors are continually coming and going, and the young people are at liberty to give their own invitations, provided a certain number is not exceeded, an awkward incident happened to a shy young man in consequence of this latitude allowed to the juniors of the establishment. The young man having received and accepted a pressing invitation to stop at the aforesaid mansion from Friday until Monday, started with his bag on the boat designated. Seeing his host and hostess (the father and mother of his friend), with whom he had but a slight acquaintance, he went over to join them. To his embarrassment he saw that they did not recognize him, and he was obliged to introduce himself. "Oh, yes, Mr. Smith, of course," said the woman, evidently cudgeling her memory. "How stupid of me! I remember you very well. And where are you going, Mr. Smith? If it is anywhere near us I hope you will come over and see us. Jim is at home, you know, and the girls—I am sure they will be delighted to see you." Here was a situation! The bashful youth who had already felt uncomfortable at their non-recognition, had not the courage to say boldly that he intended accompanying them to their house as a guest, and remembering there was a club in their vicinity, meekly announced that he intended going there, whither he betook himself, bag and baggage, on his arrival at the station. He ordered a lonely dinner, intending to go back to town in the evening. Just as he was taking his place at the table, however, his friend Jim burst into the room. "Well, of all funny mistakes," he cried, "this beats all! Why didn't you tell the mater you were going to us? She is in a great funk about it, and has insisted that they should all wait dinner for you—so come along quick!"

No Wheeled Vehicle.

Eight miles due east, over the mountains from Catores Station, on the Mexican National railway, is a city along whose steep, winding streets no wheeled vehicle has ever been known to pass, although it has a population of 40,000 people. The city takes its name from that once being the stronghold and property of a band of 14 of the most desperate and successful robbers that ever laid tribute on roads in Mexico. They discovered and for many years worked the rich deposits of silver that are about there. Strange to say, every piece of machinery, every pound of freight and every passenger to and from Catores is transported to-day, as for centuries past, either on the backs of men or mules. The streets are all paved, and run up and down hill, many of them at an angle of 45 degrees.

JAPS MEAT EATERS.

VEGETABLE DIET NO LONGER SUFFICES THEM.

National Characteristics Gradually Changing, Since These Quaint Folk Have Become "Oriental Yankees"—Special Commissioner Now in Washington.

The entire Japanese nation is becoming a race of meat eaters, rice and a kindred vegetarian diet not seeming to provide the energy necessary for the western "hustle" adopted by the awakened Orient. Vegetarians and anthropological students are highly interested in the racial changes that must soon result in this almost universal change of diet. Already small changes are perceptible, but a few years hence strongly marked divergencies must inevitably become apparent. Meat eating has developed in Japan within the past 25 years to such an extent that the government is now casting about for a means to bring the supply up to the demand. For the purpose of investigating the methods of stock raising and slaughtering employed in the United States Mr. Inazo Nitobe, a Japanese official of unusual intelligence and education, and a graduate of Johns Hopkins university, has spent the last few months traveling through the different cattle-raising states. He has been sent here as a special commissioner of the Japanese department of agriculture, commerce and industry. Mr. Nitobe has already arrived in Washington, and in regard to the probable effects of meat eating on the Japanese he said: "One thing the change in diet may do is to create a desire for more and stronger stimulants. At present our national drink is 'sake,' a rice beer, quite harmless, comparatively. More meat may mean a desire for liquors stronger than the 'sake.' You know the Japanese have not been meat eaters long and the industry of cattle and stock-raising in Japan is in its infancy. Nature did not, apparently, contemplate that the Japanese should be meat eaters, as neither the horse nor the cow is a native of Japan, or was ever on the island until comparatively recently, as is shown by the absence of their remains from geological researches. Philology says there never was a word expressing a sheep or an animal similar to it in the Japanese language. Animals were imported into Japan many years ago, but came in with the Buddhistic religion, which, as you know, forbids the killing of animals for food. Our native religion, Shintoism, also forbids to a measure the killing of anything, so that partly from the lack of a natural supply of animal food, partly from religious influences and partly from the fact that a vegetarian diet has hitherto amply satisfied the Japanese, they have never been eaters of meat to any extent. Not much stock has been raised in Japan. While horses and cows have been used for agricultural purposes, their use has been limited to certain districts. It is peculiar that, owing to religious tendencies, the country is divided into districts, in one cows being used exclusively for farming purposes, in an adjoining district stallions and in another mares. In the first district no horses whatever are used, and in the other districts no cows are used. These districts are scattered all over the island, and I have been engaged in mapping them out. The beginning of meat-eating in Japan was due to the introduction of western civilization some twenty-five or thirty years ago. At first the common people were very superstitious about it, and it was not until the emperor set the example of that the common people overcame their scruples and began to eat meat. They found it good, and the demand has increased constantly until now, in order to supply the demand, we are killing our cattle at a rate of 12 per cent yearly more than the natural increase. This will soon result in the depletion in the stock of the island unless something is done, and it is to obtain an insight into American methods of stock-raising and slaughtering that I have visited the United States. Japan is well adapted to the raising of cattle and sheep. It has an abundance of grazing land. The low lands, which are principally covered with rice fields, take up but 12 per cent of the island, so that 88 per cent, being mountainous region, may be utilized for grazing purposes. When we first introduced sheep we treated them like gentlemen, feeding them on timothy and other expensive grasses. This did not pay and the sheep were turned out to grass, with the result that while they deteriorated in size, they became much harder animals. The bamboo grass is, however, very hard on the stomach of the sheep. Mutton is now brought from Australia and sold in Japan for 3 cents a pound. During the recent war with China, Japan awoke to the necessity of having a supply of horses. Owing to the swampy character of the rice fields it had never been feasible to use cavalry in Japan, and the horses, while hardy, were of mountain breed and quite small. When the army was fighting in China the lack of horses was felt greatly, and since the war the government has done all it could to encourage the raising of horses by establishing studs, offering premiums, purchasing horses, etc. We want the horses for our agricultural purposes and our cavalry and the cattle for food."

Peculiarity of Snakes.

A snake tamer who had trained a serpent to follow him around the house and even out of doors happened one day to take it with him to a strange place. The snake, unused to the locality, suddenly seemed to forget all his training, and, escaping into the bushes, resisted capture with bites and every indication of wildness. When caught it at once resumed its tame habits. The tendency to become wild immediately upon obtaining their freedom and to again become tame when caught is said to be a peculiarity of snakes.

A Portable Acetylene Gas Lamp—Warranted Not to Bruise—The Scientific Theory of Blushing—Electrical Hair-Cutting.

Scientific Theory of Blushing.

It is just as natural for some persons to blush as it is for others to turn pale. The same laws of nature which govern the one govern the other. The capillaries, or small blood vessels, which connect the arteries and veins in the body, form, particularly over the cheeks, a network so fine that it is necessary to employ a microscope to distinguish them. Ordinarily the blood passes through the vessels in normal quantities, leaving only the natural complexion. But when some sudden emotion acts on the heart, its action increases, and an electric thrill instantly leaps to the cheeks. The thrill is nothing more than the rush of blood through the invisible capillaries just beneath the delicate transparent surface of the skin. The causes that bring this condition in the circulating system are called mental stimuli. They consist of joy, anger, shame and many other emotions. Sudden horror, remorse or fear, on the contrary, influence the nerves which control the blood vessels, and the face becomes white. Blushing and pallor result from the sudden action of the mind on the nervous system. So, if the mind be forewarned and prepared for emotions, both habits can at least be partially overcome. But when the nervous system be highly strung, it would be a lifelong, if not a futile task, to endeavor to effect a perfect cure. It is the sensitive, nervous girl who blushes easily, while the girl stolid of nature, or who by conventional education has her nerves under perfect control, seldom blushes.—Philadelphia Times.

Artificial Sponges.

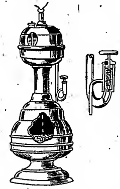
A German technical journal describes a method of manufacturing artificial sponges, recently invented and patented by Dr. Gustav Pum of Graz, Germany. The process consists principally in the action of a solution of chloride of zinc on pure cellulose. The results are products which swell up with water, but turn horny and hard on drying. In order to retain for the product the property of also absorbing water after drying, certain chemicals are employed in treating the cellulose with zinc chloride, and finally the product is subjected to a mechanico-plastic treatment. For example, the cellulose is treated with concentrated zinc chloride solution and sodium chloride (common salt) whereby a pasty viscous mass is obtained which is mixed with coarse-grained rock salt. The plastic mass thus obtained is pierced in a press mould with pins, after whose removal the pressed material appears traversed by small canals in all directions. The excess of salts is removed by washing one or two days with alcohol and water. The product thus obtained can take the place of natural sponge in all its uses, and may especially serve for filtering water for sanitary and industrial purposes. It is also suitable for filling up life preservers, for the production of anchor buoys, as well as in surgery for absorbing secretions, etc.

Colored Glass and Smokeless Powder.

Mr. R. A. Fessenden described at the American Association meeting in August a means by which the location of troops using smokeless powder in battle can be easily discovered. It is simply necessary to survey the landscape through pale red glass. The flash of smokeless powder appears strong in red light, while ordinary objects are dimmed. By furnishing field-glasses with screens of the proper tint, the position of concealed marksmen, like those who picked off our soldiers in Cuba, can be detected.

A Portable Acetylene Gas Lamp.

A new acetylene lamp has been invented by an inventor of Josserand, Tex., which is particularly adapted for use as a table lamp, and which is arranged to insure a uniform, perfect and brilliant light. The lamp comprises a base supporting a bowl forming a generator in which the calcium carbide is contained and in which gas is generated. A cap screws on the generator and terminates in a pipe by which a water reservoir is supported. A tube, provided at its upper end with a burner, extends through the reservoir and serves to conduct the gas. Water is supplied from the reservoir to the generator below by means of a pipe provided with an automatic valve. As shown in the enlarged detail view, this valve has a downwardly extending stem fitting loosely in the end of the waterpipe and an upwardly extending stem receiving the end of a rod screwed in a cap closing the valve chamber. The screw-rod is provided with a collar enlarged at its lower and by a spring coiled around the stem. A tube opening into the valve chamber above the valve conducts the water to the generator. When the screw-rod is screwed down the valve is seated to cut off the water supply, but when the rod is screwed out until the collar abuts against the under side of the cap so as to allow the spring to hold the valve loosely to its seat, then the water rises in the valve chamber and flows, drop by drop, to the generator. When the gas pressure overbalances the water pressure, the valve is seated, thus preventing the further generation of gas. When the gas pressure has diminished, the valve is opened by the water, and generation is resumed. The supply of carbide can be replenished by unscrewing the generator cap and placing the required quantity of the material within the bowl. The water reservoir can be filled by means of a filling cap.

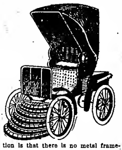


A Remarkable Earthquake.

On July 19 last the city of Rome undulated with the waves of an earthquake for nearly half a minute. The famous monuments of antiquity scattered in and about the city were strongly shaken, but, fortunately, no serious damage was suffered by them. The great columns in the Forum rocked visibly, and a large stone crashed down from the Colosseum. A strange atmospheric effect, which has before been observed during great earthquakes, was very noticeable on this occasion. People who rushed in alarm from their houses were drenched with a torrent of rain that poured from light gray clouds which almost instantaneously gathered in a perfectly clear sky as soon as the earth began to quake.

Warranted Not to Bruise.

A Philadelphia inventor has devised a fender for automobile or trolley cars, the principal of which is shown in the illustration. The fender is made of inflated hose, tied together in the shape of a locomotive cow-catcher. The special advantage claimed for the invention is that there is no metal framework to bruise a person struck by it.



Electrical Hair-Cutting.

A French scientific journal, L'Electricien, describes an electric substitute for the barber's scissors. It consists of a comb, carrying along one side of its row of teeth a platinum wire through which flows an electric current. As the comb passes through the locks to be shorn, the heated wire instantaneously severs the hairs, leaving them of even length, and sealing the cut ends as in the ordinary process of singeing with a taper. A similar device is a curling iron, kept at an even temperature by an electric wire in the interior.

Scientific Jottings.

To prevent the lodgment of obstructions in a conduit a Pennsylvanian has designed a new pattern of tubing, in which the inner wall has ribs formed at angles to the direction of the current of water, causing it to take a zigzag course through the conduit.

The cultivation of fruit trees along the highways of France is being extended each year, the government having adopted this practice as a source of revenue, so that now roadside fruit cultivation has become an important branch of national industry.

Prof. Bergmann, the great surgeon of the Berlin university, states that the healing power of the Roentgen rays is imaginary. The determination of the presence and position of foreign bodies has been extremely successful with the Roentgen rays, as is well known. Their use in connection with broken bones has also been very satisfactory. The hope of discovering, by the aid of the Roentgen rays, the position of gall stones has not been fulfilled.

An account of the application of liquefied carbonic acid gas to extinguish underground fires was given by George Spencer at the recent meeting of the Institution of Mining Engineers, says Nature. At a colliery with which Mr. Spencer was connected a fire occurred in a heading, as the result of a fall of roof and sides on steam pipes. The heading was built off with as little delay as possible, but notwithstanding all efforts to shut out the air, sufficient reached the seat of fire to keep it burning slowly. It was, therefore, decided to apply carbon dioxide, and for this purpose six cylinders of liquefied gas were successfully used. It is not claimed that the method described can be successfully applied in all fires, but there are undoubtedly many cases which might be so treated. In case of fire on shipboard, the use of carbon dioxide would no doubt prove invaluable, as it could be quickly applied and would not cause the same damage to cargoes as water.

Amending It.

Chicago Tribune: "I awsked you," protested the mortified coachman, "for a certificate of good character, and all you say for me in this recommendation is that I 'wouldn't steal a red-hot stove.' Cawn't you make it a little stronger than that, sir?"

"Certainly. Let me have it again."

And the ex-employer took the document, erased the words "red-hot stove," inserted "active volcano," and handed it back.

One Way of Getting It.

Philadelphia Bulletin: "The only trouble with Plimmer is he lacks push."

"Well, he's overcoming that now. I've seen him out with the baby carriage several times lately."

Too Much Profit in It.

Philadelphia Bulletin: "Why do you think postage stamp sellers ought to pay a license?"

"Because they are in the licker business."

If You But Knew.

If you but knew
How all my days seemed filled with dreams of you;
How sometimes in the silent, restless night
Your eyes thrill through me with their tender light;
How oft I hear your voice when others speak,
How you 'mid other forms I vainly seek,
Oh, love more real than though such dreams were true,
If you but knew!

Could but guess
How you alone make all my happiness,
How I am more than willing for your sake
To stand alone, give all and nothing take;
Nor chafe to think you bound while I am free,
Quite free till death, to love you silently,
Could you but guess!

Could you but learn
How when you doubt my truth I sadly yearn
To tell you all, to stand for one brief space
Unfettered, soul to soul, as face to face,
To crown you king, my king,
Till life shall end,
My lover, and, likewise, my truest friend,
Would you love me, dearest, as fondly in return,
Could you but learn?

Olive Oil.

To the well-groomed woman the care of her hair is a subject of paramount importance, and every new recipe to prevent it from falling out, to keep it in the necessary condition of wave, fluffiness and generally well-cared-for appearance is hailed with joy and immediately tested. Some well-meaning persons have sworn by kerosene, and many easily persuaded women have tried it, only to find themselves a nuisance to the family while the "cure" was in process, and in the end obliged, to abandon its use from the very disagreeable after-effects of the treatment. All authorities on the subject of hair doctoring agree that the natural oil of the hair, judiciously augmented by an artificially applied oil, will be of material benefit in producing luxuriant, glossy tresses and prevent the long ends from splitting and the hair from falling out, for the reason that the roots are properly nourished. Another reason why some good oil should be carefully applied to the roots of the hair is the necessity of keeping the scalp loose from the head, and by this means permitting the natural oil of the hair to nourish it as nature intended it should. It has been found that the best, purest olive oil, purchased at some reliable grocery or Italian warehouse, or in small quantities from the drug store, has all the medical qualities of kerosene, without any of its disagreeable after-effects. Use only a very little at a time, dipping the fingers into a saucer containing not more than half a teaspoonful of the very best oil. Then massage the scalp thoroughly (not letting the oil touch the long ends of the hair), until it is worked in so completely that the scalp feels almost dry. This treatment applied once a week with a shampoo the principal ingredient of which is the white of an egg, and then washed with hot water and white castile soap, and afterwards carefully and thoroughly rinsed with hot water once every two weeks, it is said, will prevent the hair from falling out, will keep it fluffy and yet glossy, and those who have tried it say it is one of the best of the many recipes recommended.

The Correct Belt.

At the moment there are three types of belt worn with shirt waists and skirts. Indoors a limousine or liberty satin ribbon, that will circle the body, knots on the left side and lets fall two deeply fringed ends, is smart and approved. Outdoors a four-inch strip of taffeta, heavily corded on either edge, and exactly down the middle, having its ends gather into a pair of Celtic gold or Derby silver clasps, no bigger than two twenty-five cent pieces, is regarded as useful, tidy and becoming.

Again, out of doors is worn, but more especially on golf links and for driving, a belt of soft white Dongola leather, roughly cut on the edges and ornamented down the center by a flat chain of gold, silver or gun metal that ends in a curved metal disk in front, where a padlock in miniature assumes to serve as a latch by means of a small and business-like key. A plain leather or silk buckle belt, belts of filagree, metal with jewel ornaments and jetted belts, all belong to the tribe of "have beens," and are worn no more in the realms where good style reigns.

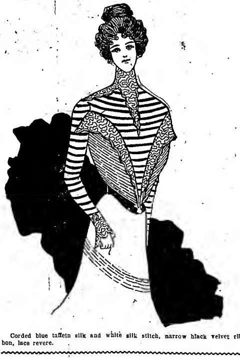
The Golden Key to Happiness.

The woman who knows how to keep silence has in her possession "the golden key that unlocks one of the doors to secret happiness." It is hard sometimes not to speak. You know how it is. You are with a dear friend whose affection and loyalty you do not doubt, and in one of the unguarded moments you are led in the extreme of confidence, telling some thought, some hope, some belief or aspiration which before has been hidden in your soul, scarcely whispered to yourself, yet as vivid and real in you as though it were sentient with the life of its own fulfillment. Your friend does not comprehend, treats it lightly, and goes away onto some topic far removed. You have an instant sense of betrayal, and a sort of resentment inward the friend whom for the moment you think has failed you. It is you who are to blame for expecting more of your friend than she was capable of giving.—Sallie Joy White in October Woman's Home Companion.

Taste in Furnishing.

In selecting house furnishings be very careful not to confound liking with taste. As a rule furnishings that are conspicuous in themselves are seldom a good investment for people who cannot afford to toss them aside at will. Door-hangings should always be of heavy window draperies. The appointments of a dining room are so few that an error in their choice or combination is more obtrusive than a similar error in any other room. The walls of a room that is to be occupied constantly should be hung with plain paper or with that having an all-over interlocked pattern in neutral tints. Insincerity is as surely expressed in a piece of furniture as in one's speech. The artistic and restful effect of almost any room is heightened by the use of home-made fancy articles, provided their coloring tones in or contrasts pleasingly with the dominant one of the room, and they are few in number. Small Oriental rugs make the most effective covering possible for floor cushions. Simply place the cushion in the center of the rug, bring the ends together and blindstitch these and the sides together, using the seamed side next the floor.

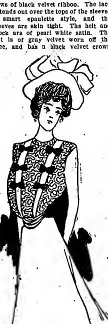
THEATER WAIST.



Corded blue taffeta silk and white silk stitch, narrow black velvet ribbon, lace revere.

With Lace and Black Trimming.

This gown is of slate-colored basket cloth and has the bodice covered with cream lace of a heavy pattern slashed down in front and tied across with bows of black velvet ribbon. The lace extends out over the tops of the sleeves in smart epaulette style, and the sleeves are skin tight. The belt and stock are of pearl white satin. The hat is of gray velvet worn off the face, and has a black velvet crown tied about with deep rose velvet ribbon, five inches wide down through a large dull gold buckle.



Damp Hands and Feet.

Many people are much troubled with damp hands and feet, especially in the winter. To alleviate this trouble mix eau de cologne and tincture of belladonna in the proportion of one ounce of the tincture to rather more than four of eau de cologne. Soak a piece of rag in the mixture, and dab the hands and feet with it three or four times a day. Before putting on gloves soak the hands in powdered alum and water for a few seconds, dry them, then dust them over with powdered club moss, a little of which may also be sprinkled inside the gloves. Thread gloves should be worn in preference to kid. Follow an alum, water and club-moss treatment for the feet, dusting the powdered club moss in the shoes as in the gloves.

Sofa Cushions Are Plain.

The ruffled soft cushion, the puffed-up, the tucked and befrilled sofa cushion, seems to have passed away entirely in the shops and gradually, in obedience to the natural laws of fashion, is disappearing from our homes. A fervent ejaculation of thanks will undoubtedly go up from both man and women at this announcement—from the former because they never cared to rest their heads on a fussy pillow that they declared hurt and "kept a fellow from going to sleep," just as if the primary purpose of those articles wasn't ornament; the latter because the new kind are easier to make and easier to keep unrumpled and fresh. Velvet is used frequently for the pillow of the day, and there are many made of plush, satin, canvas and linen. The poster girl often appears on the latter two kinds, and very attractive she is, too, done in bright colors in her swirling poses. The figured velvets and satins used show conventionalized and tartan designs. Almost all of the cushions are finished with a heavy silk cord, but have no other ornamentation. Just as many will be piled in cosey corners and on couches this winter as ever before and a reduction of trimming on them does not necessarily mean a diminution of expense. I assure you, so a goodly sum must be set aside by the housewife for these very essential furnishings.

OUR COOKING SCHOOL.

Stewed Celery.

Cut parts not suitable for salad in inch pieces. Cook in one cup water till tender. Add one-half cup cream to celery water, bind with white roux and season with salt and pepper. The tender bleached leaves may be stewed with the stalks.

Cranberry Sauce—My Favorite.

Put into your preserving kettle one quart of cranberries, two cups of sugar and one and one-half cups of water; cover closely and cook ten minutes from the time of boiling all over. Do not stir them. It will jelly when cold and the skins will be tender.

Stuffing.

Use light white bread (baker's is usually preferred), crumbed fine, season with salt, pepper, chopped raw liver, onion and very slightly with thyme. Moisten slightly with hot water and generously with melted butter. Sausages, oysters, boiled chestnuts, chopped celery, apple, raisins and parsley may be used for seasoning.

Mince Pie.

One cup of cooked meat chopped fine, two cups of chopped apple, one teaspoon each of salt, allspice and cinnamon, one cup of brown sugar, half a cup each of chopped and small whole raisins, half a cup of currants, moisten with one cup of cider, or one cup of sweet pickle vinegar, or half a cup of water, juice of one lemon, and two or three spoonfuls of any remnants of jelly or preserve. Mix thoroughly and if not to be used immediately, boil it long enough to cook the apple and fruit.

Roast Turkey.

A hen turkey weighing eight pounds. Singe, remove pin feathers, oil bag, tendons, entrails and crop. Wipe, stuff and truss the feet to the tail, the wings close to the side, and the neck skin to the shoulder blade. Rub with salt, pepper, butter and dredge with flour. Put the turkey fat in the pan, lay the turkey on one side and put it in box oven. When the flour is brown, check the heat, baste with butter melted in hot water and bake three hours. Add one pint of water as soon as the fat is brown, baste every twenty minutes and turn over to brown uniformly. It is done when the joints will separate easily, and a fork will pierce the flesh under the thigh.

Would Come Around All Right.

Chicago News: They were seated side by side on the parlor sofa and there wasn't room enough between them for an argument.

"George," murmured the maid, after a blissful silence extending over a period of several minutes, "I'm afraid your arm must be very painful."

"Why do you think so, dearest?" he asked.

"Because," she coyly replied, "it seems to be out of place."

"Oh, well, never mind," said George. "It will come around all right."

SOME GOOD STORIES FOR OUR JUNIOR READERS.

Davie a Hero—Bird Intelligence—A Naturalist Relates a Remarkable Instance of It—Bears and Lightning—Navajo Indian's Belief.

"I Thank You, Dear."

Four little words of love to hear—
Four little words so sweet
They make my work seem, oh, so light,
And put wings to my feet.
I think if folks knew just how nice
They sounded in my ear,
For every little thing I do,
They'd say, "I thank you, dear."

Why, goodness me! I race the stairs,
Run up and down all day
For things my sisters leave around,
Or brothers put away.
And when at last I find them
And bring them with delight,
They only say, "Why, mercy, child,
I thought you'd stay all night!"

Oh, grown-ups, if you only knew!
My heart goes in my boots!
I work so hard for those few words,
But seems like nothing suits.
No matter if my feet were tired,
I would not cry one tear,
But happy be, if folks to me
Would say, "I thank you, dear."

Davie a Hero.

I was touring through Scotland not long ago, says a writer, and while I was staying at a farmhouse in Galloway a very remarkable event occurred which is well worth recording. The neighborhood, as many people know, abounds in precipices, and at some distance down from the summit of one of the steepest and most dangerous, a pair of eagles had built their nest. The competition amongst the young and daring spirits of the village as to who should secure the coveted nest and the eggs it contained was very keen. But the precipice was well-nigh perpendicular, affording the scantiest of footholds, and a slip would have sent the unwary climber crashing to the rocks 600 feet below. One or two attempts were made, however, but never successfully, and the eagles seemed to defy the very boldest of us. Now my host had a son named David, a boy of 15, and this youngster was absolutely determined to secure that nest somehow or other. He confided to me that the subject was a worry to him, that it entered into his dreams at night, and he vowed he would not rest until the eggs were in his possession. One morning he came down very late to breakfast. "Come, Davie," said his father. "What's wrong? Are ye tired?" "Na, na; but I dreamed a dream that tired me." This declaration was received with applause, and the demand that he would relate his dream. "Weel, I dreamed that I climbed the cliff and harried the eagles' nest." "And what did you do with the eggs?" I asked, laughingly. "Weel, I put them in my bonnet and set it on the shelf above the kitchen door." By way of keeping up the joke his father sent him to the kitchen to see if his bonnet was, as he had said, upon the shelf. He went to the place, and there, sure enough, were the cap and the eagles' eggs. In his sleep he had accomplished that would have been an impossibility at any other time, and robbed the precipitous nest. When I came away David was the hero of the hour, but his father had sternly forbidden him to think anything more about eagles' eggs.

Bears and Lightning.

A writer in the Denver Republican tells about some of the Indian superstitions. Of the Navajoes he says: Although there are plenty of bear in parts of the reservation, the Navajo will not kill one if he can avoid it, and never for food. No sum of money would tempt him to touch a dead bear, or, for that matter, a live one. He has the same feeling in regard to the coyote, whose name he uses as a synonym for everything cowardly and despicable, and a coyote skin is an effective tent guard. Another idea no less singular is often encountered in traveling over the reservation. No Navajo will ever make a campfire of wood from a tree that was struck by lightning, or that might have been. If such a fire is made by an irreverent white man, the Indians will retire to a distance, where they cannot feel the heat or smell the smoke, and they will go to sleep in their blankets, fireless and supperless, rather than eat of food prepared on that kind of a fire. The Navajo believes that if he comes within the influence of the flame, he will absorb some of the essence of the lightning, which will thereafter be attracted to him, and sooner or later will kill him. Up in the mountains more than half the great pines are scarred by lightning, but no wood from them is used. Almost any old Navajo can narrate instances where the neglect of this precaution has resulted disastrously, for men are sometimes killed by lightning in a region where thunderstorms are frequent, and it is but a step from the effect to the cause.

Bird Intelligence.

During the early part of the summer of 1835 a pair of water-hens built their nest by the margin of the ornamental pond at Bell's Hill, a piece of water of considerable extent, and ordinarily fed by a spring from the height above, but into which the contents of another large pond can occasionally be admitted. This was done while the female was sitting, and as the nest had been built when the water level stood low, the sudden influx of this large body of water from the second pond caused a rise of several inches, so as to threaten the speedy immersion and consequent destruction of the eggs. This the birds seem to have been aware of, and they immediately took precautions against so imminent a danger, for when the gardener, seeing the sudden rise of the water, went to look after the nest, expecting to find it covered and the eggs destroyed, or at least forsaken by the hen, he observed, while at a distance, both birds busily engaged about the brink where the nest was placed, and when near enough he clearly perceived that they were adding, with all possible dispatch, fresh materials to raise the fabric beyond the level of the increased contents of the pond, and that the eggs had by some means been removed from the nest by the birds, and were then lying upon the grass about a foot or more from the margin of the water. He watched them for some time and saw the nest rapidly increase in height, but I regret to add that he did not remain long enough, fearing he might create alarm, to witness the interesting act of replacing the eggs, which must have been effected shortly after; for, upon his return, in less than an hour, he found the hen quietly sitting upon them in the newly-raised nest. In a few days the young were hatched, and soon quitted the nest and took to the water. The nest was shown to me shortly afterwards, and I could then plainly discern the formation of the new with the older part of the fabric.

An Acorn.

Norna had been sick a long while, and she was so tired of lying in bed that all the family tried to amuse her. Papa bought her a little musical box, and mamma gave her picture books. Tom bought a new game for her, and Dotty a bunch of grapes; even baby offered her an acorn which he picked up under the great oak tree. What a beautiful little thing it was, fitting neatly in its tiny saucer, and what a dainty saucer, too, with row after row of wee brown scales folded so prettily over each other. Mamma tied a string around the acorn, hung it over a glass of water and told Norna that now she could see it grow. "But how can it find its way to the water, mamma?" asked Norna. "Watch and see," said mamma, smiling. The next day Norna thought the acorn looked a little larger, but soon after that, oh, dear! there was a dreadful crack all along its side. "It is spoiled, mamma," sighed Norna. "It will never grow now." "Watch and see," said mamma again. Norna did watch. At last she saw something white and something green coming out of the crack. The white shoot grew down into the water and made a root, but the green shoot grew upward and made two little leaves. And so the acorn turned into a baby oak. And Norna so enjoyed watching it all that she forgot she was sick, and was almost as happy as if she had been outdoors in the sunshine. "Your little girl is much better," said the doctor to mamma. "She is well enough to play in the yard. This new medicine has helped her." And nobody knew that the little acorn had helped her as much as the medicine.—Zoeth Howland.

Antiquities.

A loaf of bread six hundred years old is something of an antiquity. Such a loaf is to be found at Ambaston in Derbyshire, England. It was included in a grant of land from the crown in the reign of King John, and has remained in the Soar family ever since. Almost as great a curiosity as this is a house eleven hundred years of age and yet fit for habitation. This old dwelling, the oldest inhabited house in England, was built in the time of King Offa of Mercia. It is octagonal in shape, the walls of its lower story being of great thickness. The upper part is of oak. At one time the house was fortified and known by the name of St. German's gate. It stands close to the River Ver, and only a few yards from St. Alban's abbey. Old bread and old houses grow juvenile in comparison with a marriage proposal thirty-four hundred years of age, which is in existence in the British museum. It is the oldest marriage proposal of which there is any definite record. It consists of about ninety-eight inches of very fine cuneiform writing, and is on a small clay tablet made of Nile mud. It is a marriage proposal of a Pharaoh for the hand of the daughter of the King of Babylon. It was written about the year 1530 B. C.

What the Spider Said.

"I was spinning a web in the rose vine," said the spider, "and the little girl was sewing patchwork on the door step. Her thread knotted and her needle broke and her eyes were full of tears. 'I can't do it,' she said: 'I can't! I can't!' Then her mother came and bade her look at me. Now, every time I spun a nice silky thread and tried to fasten it from one branch to another the wind blew and tore it away. This happened many times, but at last I made one that did not break, and fastened it close and spun other threads to join it. Then the mother smiled. 'What a patient spider!' she said. The little girl smiled, too, and took up her work. And when the sun went down there was a beautiful web in the rose vine and a square of beautiful patchwork on the step."

Four Odd Experiments.

Here are four interesting experiments with goblets or large tumblers of water: Fill them within an inch of the top. Into one drop very carefully an egg; it will sink to the bottom. Into the other put just enough salt so that the egg will float, and into the other put just enough salt so the egg will stay in the middle. You can have the egg stay just where you wish in the tumbler by varying the quantity of salt. Now fill a tumbler brim full of water, moisten and heat a needle by holding it in your hand; then very carefully place it on the water, and you will see it float.

Eiderdown.

The eider duck lines its nest carefully with its own down. The nest is robbed of the down by the Icelanders and the duck quickly proceeds to reline her nest, supplying the feathers from her own body. The third time the drake gives his down, and this is allowed to remain. Ten thousand pounds of eider down are gathered annually in Iceland, and the natives receive for it about $3 a pound, although the trade is carried on through barter, the natives receiving little or no money.

One More Question.

"I want to ask one more question," said little Frank, as he was being put to bed. "Well," acquiesced the tired mamma. "When holes come in stockings, what becomes of the piece of stocking that was there before the hole came?"

Made Her Father Governor.

Mr. Young and some friends had been discussing the political outlook in Kentucky at Mr. Young's house in Louisville one night, just on the eve of the Democratic state convention, several years ago. When the party broke up, Mr. Young's daughter, then about 18 years old, now married, who had been an interested listener during the discussion, spoke up:

"Why don't you run for governor, pa?"

"Why, my child, they would never think of me for that office. No one cares enough about me for that."

"But, pa, would you accept the nomination if it were offered you?"

"Why, of course I would; nobody would refuse the honor."

Miss Young said no more at the time, but quietly slipped out of the house and started in the direction of The Courier-Journal office. Colonel Henry Watterson being an intimate friend of the family. It happened that she met the veteran editor in the street.

"Ah, Uncle Henry, will you do me a favor?" the young woman asked impulsively.

"Anything in the world that I can do I will."

"Well, I want pa to be governor of Kentucky, and can you get him the nomination?"

Colonel Watterson turned back to the office and sat down and wrote a spirited editorial, demanding in the interests of the Democratic party that John Brown Young be nominated by the convention soon to meet. The result was in accordance with the noted editor's wishes, Mr. Young's election being a foregone conclusion.—Chicago Chronicle.

Good and Bad Eels.

"So you think that little eels are sweet and that big eels are rank and strong, do you?" said a fish dealer. "Well, you're off. It isn't the size of the eel that governs his taste. It is his habitation and way of life. But most people think as you do, and throw away the big eel and cook the little one, and then, if the little fellow is strong, they think it is because he wasn't little enough. Nothing could be further from the truth.

"The eel that inhabits a stream with a hard, clean, sandy bottom is sweet and edible, be he as big as your leg or tiny as your finger, for this eel finds food scarce, and he must exercise and keep sober and hustle—else he will starve—and this active career makes him healthy and wholesome. But the eel that lives in the mud, where provisions are plentiful, is unfit for the table, for his life is sluggish, his habits and organs are bad and his flesh, when cooked, tastes and smells of the muddy element. That is why the Schuylkill eel is worse than carrion for table purposes, while the eel of the upper Delaware makes a dainty dish."—Philadelphia Record.

More Miles Than You Can Count.

Statements as to the distance of the pole star from the earth which have appeared in some of the newspapers lately have been ridiculously inadequate. One of the estimates made is 255,000,000 miles. Now, if one will remember that the sun is 93,000,000 miles away and that its light comes to us in eight minutes, he will see that if the foregoing estimate of the distance of the pole star were right its beams could reach us in about 15 days. It would be only about 2,700 times as far off as the sun.

Light travels 6,000,000,000,000 miles in a year, and even the most modest guesses as to the parallax of Polaris make it 35 light years. Pritchard's estimate in 1887 was 90 light years, but he has since modified his figures. Hence, if one will write 210 and add 12 ciphers thereto he will have the number of miles which the most conservative authorities believe intervene between the earth and the pole star.—New York Tribune.

Shakespeare's Father.

A paper entitled "Shakespeare and Sanitation" was read at the recent provincial meeting of the Incorporated Society of Medical Officers of Health at Stratford-on-Avon. Among other things the author related the following: "It is interesting to find that the name of John Shakespeare, the father of the poet, first appears in the records of the municipality as owing a fine of twopence for having made a dirt heap with his neighbors, Adrien Quiney and Henry Reynolds, in Henly street, and on another occasion he 'stood amerced' in fourpence for failing to keep his gutter clean."

None Better Than All.

Miss Gingham—And I suppose they have bargain days in Glasgow, Mr. McIvor?

McIvor—Ma conscience, no! It wad na do ava!

Miss Gingham—Indeed! Why, I thought bargain days would just suit your people!

McIvor—That's jaist it. It would suit them ower weel. If they had bargain days, naebody wad buy onything on the ither days, ye ken!—London Telegraph.

An Unexpected Answer.

In the course of an address Dr. Conan Doyle told a quaint experience of his in the Sudan. Wishing to find out whether one of the black soldiers was a Mohammedan or a pagan, he asked him, "Whom do you worship?"

"I worship my colonel," came the answer, pat.

The lessons of history would suggest to a Sherlock Holmes that the man was a Mohammedan.

Only One Fault.

"There's only one fault to be found with your comedy work, old man," said the dramatic critic.

"What's that?" asked the aspiring young actor.

"It's tragic."—Chicago Post.

A PATIENT CONVICT.

HOW HE EFFECTED HIS ESCAPE FROM PORTLAND JAIL.

The Only Prisoner Who Ever Managed to Get Out of the Great English Prison Tells How He Accomplished the Difficult Feat.

William Bartlett, a well known English burglar, is the only man who ever effected his escape from Portland prison, an escape which is the original of that described in Hawley Smart's novel, "Broken Bounds." Bartlett told the story of his escape to a reporter as follows:

"The correct details of my escape have never been told," he said. "I'll tell you what actually happened. In 1868 I received a sentence of ten years' penal servitude. From Pentonville I was taken to Portland. It was awful. I made up my mind to escape—a feat never before accomplished. One day I managed to pick up a small piece of hoop iron. That seemed like a godsend. Every time I had the chance I took that iron hooping with me, and worked like a nigger to make it into a saw. I did it in fear and trembling, for the slightest sound would have betrayed me. A stroke of luck awaited me. I found a convict who had got a little bit of a file. He had no ambition and said the file was no good to him. I gave him my dinner for it, and with the file I was able to complete the saw. Then I managed, by working stealthily every evening after I had been locked up for the night, to saw through the wood flooring of my cell. Every night I had to replace the boards, so that the warders should not see what I had done. Then an awful disappointment awaited me. The space beneath my cell was lined with sheet iron; but, nothing daunted, I eventually got through that. Then I got into an airshaft, and after three months' hard work saw my way clear to liberty.

"At last the opportunity came. It was a dark night, and all was still. With my sheets I had made a rope, and, as luck would have it, I had picked up a piece of wood, called a 'dog,' with iron hooks at each end. I put my stool underneath the quilt, to look as much like my body as possible in case the warders should look in, and then went down the passage it had taken me three months' hard labor to make. After lifting an iron grating I found myself in the open air and managed to throw the hooks on my linen ladder over a wall. By this means I got on to the roof of the officers' quarters. There was no one about, and the only sound I could hear was that made by my beating heart. From the roof I had to jump on to the boundary wall, about 10 or 12 feet distant. I dare say it was a bold leap, but you don't stick at trifles when you are escaping from Portland. I made the leap and was successful in reaching the boundary wall. Then I got to the ground by means of my linen ladder.

"Unfortunately the hooks were so secure that I had to leave the ladder where it was, and if it had not been for that I might have been in London in three or four days. As it was, I had an awful experience. While making a desperate tug at the ladder I heard footsteps approaching, and I rushed into the garden of the grove public house. I turned round and saw a guard looking at the ladder. A few minutes afterward shots were fired, and a bell was rung. My escape had been discovered. Guards were running by in all directions; but, unperceived, I got through the window of the Roman Catholic chapel and concealed myself beneath the communion table, which proved to be something very much like a box. I could hear the sound of hurrying footsteps all night, but no one came into the chapel until the next morning, when service was held there.

"It was not a pleasant position to be in, I can assure you. A sneeze or a cough would have betrayed me, but fortunately all went well. But I got very hungry. So at the end of about 33 hours I stole out and broke into the Clifton hotel. I there found some bread and meat, cheese and tobacco. What was of more consequence, I was able to steal a hat and some clothes. With the clothing and the food—the sweetest food I ever tasted—I returned to my hiding place in the chapel. Out of a black coat I made a pair of trousers, and put on another of the stolen coats, which happened to be made of velvet. The food I divided into six portions, and for six days I was concealed beneath that communion table. There were frequent services, and, what was still worse, the priest used to come in at night for private devotions.

"At last I had more than enough of it and broke into the priest's house with the object of obtaining some money. I could find none, however. There was some silver plate, but that was of no use to me. I obtained a white stole, however, and with that made something resembling a shirt. Feeling now fairly confident as to my appearance, I walked down the road and saw a milkman, who I afterward found gave information about me. At a little place 10 miles from Portland I concealed myself in a field. Two men came in blackberrying, and I had to get out. They asked me where I was going. I said to Blandford.

"They volunteered to show me the way, but we had not gone very far before we met two police inspectors. They asked me to go into a public house and give an account of myself. They were particularly anxious to know if I had a mark on my right arm. Seeing the game was almost up, I tried to dash through the public house, but it was no good, and I was collared. I was afterward sentenced to eight years' penal servitude for the burglary at the Clifton hotel."—London Telegraph.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is Improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequaled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

Population—Cattle—Prices.

The estimated population of the United States on Oct. 1 was 76,561,000. This is almost 14,000,000 greater than in 1890. In the mean time the cattle in the country have decreased 7,700,000 head! In other words, in 1890 we had 52,802,000 cattle of all kinds to supply 62,622,000 people with beef and dairy products; we now have only 45,104,000 cattle to supply 76,561,000 people with beef and dairy products! This is a tremendous change in the relation of supply and demand, and ought to make a huge difference in the price of beef and dairy products, and would if conditions were anywhere near normal or natural. But as a matter of fact there has been no improvement in price. The range of top prices for fancy cattle during 1890, in Chicago, was from $5.25 to $6.40, and that is almost identically the range for 1899, while dairy products were actually higher in 1890 than at the present time, butter from 5 to 8 cents higher. It is true that cattle are higher now than during some of the intermediate years between those named but they are lower now that in some of those years. During 1891 the range of top prices for fancy cattle was from $5.55 to $7.15, and in 92 from $5.85 to $7.00 both above the range for 99.

It may be interesting to go back to an earlier date and note a still larger number of cattle to population, and its effect upon prices. In 1883 we had 42,500,000 cattle and not more than 55,000,000 people. We have now only about 2½ million more cattle to supply the need of 21½ million more people, yet the range of top prices for fancy cattle in Chicago during the year 1884 was from $7.15 to $8.00! And it is well to remember, too, that our exports of beef cattle and of fresh and cured beef have enormously increased since 1884.

Of course everybody rejoices that cattle are higher now than they have been but when a political party, an administution or a monetary system takes credit to itself for the advance these figures better be offered as an antidote for too much gas in the system, swelled head and similar complaints. All of these figures are from government reports, except the prices named, which are from authentic reports of the Chicago stock market.—Farm, Stock and Home.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent

Mr. Roberts stirred up the administration menagerie, by saying that Mormons, against whom the charges of living in polygamy had been brought, had been named for Federal positions in Utah by McKinley and confirmed by the Senate. Grosvenor, of Ohio, and Dalzell, of Pa., sought to defend the administration by denying the statement of Mr. Roberts, but their denial could not change facts. Senator Rawlins made the same statement more than a week ago, and proofs of its truthfulness will doubtless be forced upon the investigating committee's attention by Mr. Roberts.

Representative Richardson, of Tennesee., the new leader of the House democrats, and Representative Bailey, of Texas, the old leader, were both among the thirty-one members who voted against the resolution denying Roberts, of Utah, the right of being sworn in, in advance of the investigation of the charges against him. These votes were not cast in favor of Roberts, but as a protest against the method in which the republicans purposed to get rid of him. Mr. Richardson explicitly stated that if Roberst were shown to be guilty he would vote for his expulsion from the House, adding: "If there is one thing the American people are a unit upon, it is that the American home shall be preserved in all its loveliness, sweetness and purity."

Democrats have every reason to be pleased with the outcome of the first week of Congress. Mr. McKinley and the majority in both House and Senate have committed the republican party irrevocably to the perpetuation of the single gold standard. McKinley in his message to Congress, the republican Senators by the Gold standard bill introduced by the chairman of the Finance Committee, and the republican Representatives by the action of their caucus in endorsing the Gold standard bill, prepared last summer under Mr. McKinley's orders by a committee of which Speaker Henderson was chairman, and ordering it railroaded through the House. In addition, the republican Representatives have gone back on all their professions of reform and unanimously adopted the old Reed gag rule, and the republican Senators have decided upon the grab policy of increasing their own and reducing the democratic representation on all the Senate Committees. These things will all be understood by the people, and they will all make democratic votes. That's why the democrats in Congress are pleased with them; they enjoy seeing the republicans helping along their own defeat.

It's all Pine Now.

Speaking the other day of spruce lumber and its shrinking propensities, Collector Moody told the following, and vouches for its truth:—"When I built my house three years ago, I laid the upper floor with spruce lumber that was considered seasoned. I was advised by a person who had had some experience with this timber to not nail the floor, as it was liable to shrink so that I would have to move the boards. I took the advice, and since that, from time to time as the spruce boards shrank, I had them driven together and a pine board put in. A few weeks ago in preforming this operation, it was noticed that the whole floor was of pine, the spruce floor having shrunk entirely out of existence.—Warroad Plaindealer.

A republican farmer came to town with seventy bushels of oats. He got $10.50 for the load. We asked him if that was prosperity for him. He said it was sound money and that was all he wanted. The man wanted wire enough to put two wires on one side of his quarter. He went to Hunter's and figured on wire. He got wire there last year at two and one-half cents a pound and was mad when he had to pay four and one-half cents this year for the same kind of wire. The wire cost $14.80. The man gave seventy bushels of oats and $4.30 for the wire. Last year seventy bushels of oats bought the same amount of wire and the farmer had $5.10 left. The money is very sound when it buys farm products. Splendid money then. Takes lots of oats and wheat to get little of it. The same money is not so good and sound when it buys manufactured goods. Takes lots of money to get a little wire and a few nails.—Hebron Nebraska Champion.

My son has been troubled for years with chronic diarrhoea. Sometime ago I persuaded him to take some of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. After using two bottles of the 25-cent size he was cured. I give this testimonial, hoping some one similarly afflicted may read it and be benefited.—Thomas C. Bowen, Glencoe, O. The Arnewood Mystery

BY MAURICE H. HERVEY.

Author of "Dead Man's Court," "Somerville's Crime," "Dartmoor," "Maravin's Money," etc., etc.

PROLOGUE Continued.

Half an hour passed, but still the watcher smoked and thought, and still his comrade lay as senseless as a log in the hut.

"He'll do, safe enough," muttered Nat, at length, "if he gets the chance. And that, to me, means the utter ruin of all my plans; and, quite possibly, his marriage with Ruby! The fool, the babbling, blundering fool! To boast of his hopes and prospects to me, upon the very eve of my intended departure! It would seem, almost, as though Fate had marked him down for destruction, for, by thunder! the world is too small for us both—now!"

He went to his prostrate mate and shook him roughly; more as a test of his real condition than with any expectation of arousing him. Neither move nor sound in response. He next unbuttoned his shirt, and, from an inner pocket, sewn on to the flannel, extracted a small bundle of letters wrapped in oiled silk. As he did so, he noticed some tattooing upon his victim's breast.

"That's odd!" he muttered. "Long as we've been together I never noticed it before, though I've seen the L. A. on his arm dozens of times. Looks like R. N. upon a log of wood. I'll just make a copy of it."

This he did skilfully enough in pencil upon an envelope. He then searched him carefully for any further proof of his identity, but in vain.

He pulled aside the canvas screen that did duty for a door, and stepped out into the open air. It was a chilly night, but fine and bright with moonlight.

"All the better!" he growled to himself. "It'll make the job easier, and I'll strike Cooktown by daybreak." He re-entered the hut, and, after some hesitation swallowed yet another dram of brandy. "My nerves are not what I thought they were," he muttered, "or I wouldn't need priming with that cursed stuff to do the trick. Now for it!"

He was a strongly-built man, but the task he had set himself taxed his powers to the utmost. Seizing Arnott by the wrists, he balanced him upon his bent back, in much the same way as a lumper carries a sack of coal; and, thus burthened, he made his way, for about a furlong, down a very rough, uneven, ill-defined sort of pathway. A small mound of mullock, surmounted by a rudely-constructed windlass, indicated the position of the shaft, and, with a final effort, Nat Rainsforth succeeded in depositing his unconscious load upon the very edge of the yawning cavity.

"A man might easily slip just here," he muttered, steadying himself by the windlass; "and if he had no mate handy to lower the rope and bucket, he would stand a poor show of ever getting out again, even if the shaft were dry and he broke no bones in the fall. As it is, well, they say drowning is a painless way of passing in one's checks, and he's too dead drunk to feel much anyhow."

Still he hesitated to finish the ghastly work. The moon shone full upon the unconscious man's upturned face, and Rainsworth, callous though he was, shuddered at the thought of that face lying livid and swollen in the flood-water that had inundated the shaft. As he lay, upon the slope of the mullock ground, one good push was all that was needed to send him to destruction. Twice Rainsforth's sinewy hands grasped his shoulders, but each time he recoiled from the one brief effort of strength that would stain his soul with a foul murder. Indeed, for a time, it seemed that whatever there was of good in the man's nature would triumph over the diabolical impulses that had hitherto swayed him. But, as usually happens, the promptings of evil prevailed in the end, and with a savage imprecation on his own weakness of purpose, he once more gripped his victim and jerked him violently forward. A hollow, faintly-borne splashing sound, as the falling body struck the water at the bottom of the shaft; and Nat Rainsforth knew that no interference with his schemes would ever again come from Luke Arnewood, alias Leo Arnott.

(End of Prologue.)

CHAPTER I.

Drink and a Fog

A raw, bleak night in November; a combination of drizzling rain, fog, and east wind happily rare even during a London winter. A night unfit for the proverbial dog to be out in, yet not inclement enough to empty the streets in the densely populated Soho district, forasmuch as it was but twenty-five minutes past midnight, and the brilliantly-illuminated public houses were still doing a roaring trade.

Shuffling along, with hurried, uneven steps, a poorly-clad man was making his way through Wardour street, towards Shaftsbury avenue. In the near distance the lights of a flaming gin-palace shone brightly into the gloomy street.

"Must be precious near closing-time," he muttered, breaking into the nearest approach to a run of which he was capable. He was only just in time, for, even as he passed through the heavy swing-door, the voice of the barman was raised in preliminary warning.

"Time, gents! Hurry up, if you please!"

"Half-pint of rum, Joe!" pleaded the newcomer, breathlessly, as he produced a battered old flask and a shilling.

The barman glanced doubtfully at the clock, but, apparently recognizing the belated applicant as a regular customer, nodded and supplied the rum.

"Time, gents, please."

The late arrival clutched the flask greedily and passed out into the night with the other customers, whom the barman was expelling with great show of zeal and respect for the licensing act.

Before he reached Shaftsbury avenue, the flask had twice found its way to his lips. Then, with a great effort of well-nigh forgotten will-power, it was screwed up and consigned to the breast pocket of the threadbare frock coat, which seemed but a pitiful protection against the biting east wind. There was something in the action suggestive of a mission yet to be fulfilled, before he could safely indulge in any more sips of the fiery liquor; and, from the course he was following, his destination appeared to lie in the direction of Fleet street. Onward he slouched through the raw, foggy mist, as forlorn-looking an object as could well have been found, even in the London streets, that night.

"Hullo, Webb! Is that you?"

The voice had a cheerful, hearty ring, and a friendly grip upon his arm brought the wretched wayfarer to a standstill.

"Yes," replied the latter, irritably. "Can't you see it is?"

"Well, not over-clearly in this confounded fog," was the good-natured rejoinder. "Whither bound? 'Morning Express' office, eh?"

"Yes; and no time to waste about it, either."

"Come along, then; I'll see you that far. It isn't much out of my way."

"Why go out of your way at all?" was the short retort. "I haven't asked you to accompany me."

The stranger released his sulky acquaintance's arm, and seemed about to quit him in sheer disgust; but, suppressing the momentary feeling of irritation, he walked along by his side.

"Why go out of my way for you, Tom?" he repeated. "Well, because I don't like to see an old schoolfellow, who once called me his friend, going to the dogs at the pace you seem to have set for yourself."

"Especially if the old schoolfellow happens to have a sister you're sweet upon, eh, Ralph Weston?" sneered the other.

"Quite so," assented Weston. "That, of course, adds very considerably to the interest I feel in your welfare. And—as a matter of fact—I am under promise to your sister to do my utmost to serve you. I wish you would make it easier for me to keep that promise, Tom. I do, indeed!"

"What do you mean?"

"Oh, you know well enough. Knock off nine-tenths of the drink you are now wallowing in, and be your old self again. I tell you, Tom, when I remember that, less than two years ago, you came up to London with good Press introductions, an excellent education, and acknowledged literary ability to back you up, it just brings a lump in my throat to see you now; a seedy, broken-down tout for half-crown paragraphs, with neither wish nor thought in the world save to satisfy your morbid craving for drink. For Heaven's sake, Tom, be a man, and give it up!"

"Give it up!" echoed the drunkard, bitterly. "That is rather a hard order for a fellow who (as you truly remark) has nothing else in the world to wish for, isn't it?"

"I don't mean that you need necessarily give it up altogether," urged his adviser. "I'm no teetotaler myself, as you know. All I ask of you is to avoid excess."

"That is sheer nonsense!" was the vagabond's comment. "See here, Weston. I believe you mean me well, and I daresay you are a very clever fellow in your own line. But you evidently know nothing of drunkards and their ways. I do. I have had a wide experience of both. And you make take it from me that no drunkard ever yet retrograded to moderate drinking. He may (for some cause unintelligible to me) give up drink altogether. But partially? Never!"

Ralph Weston shrugged his shoulders despondently, and nothing more was said until Webb had taken his scrappy reports of district items into the office of the "Morning Express." He was known to the sub-editors as being accurate in such odds and ends of reporting as he did manage to put together, and, possibly, they sometimes strained a point in his favor. At all events, he could usually count upon his "stuff" being accepted, and now felt secure that 7s 6d would be paid to him on demand by the cashier in the morning. Rum and the minor necessaries of life were, therefore, reasonably safe for the next twenty-four hours; beyond which limited period his foresight rarely extended. Upon emerging into the mist, he was seized with a short but ominous fit of coughing.

"Nasty cough you've got," remarked Weston, surveying his shivering companion under the office lamp. "And what on earth made you venture out of doors in this sort of weather without your overcoat?"

"What the dickens is it to you what I wear?" was the indignant rejoinder. "However, if you must know the full measure of my depravity, I pawned my overcoat this afternoon, in order to buy rum. With the help of a little luck (say a sensational murder, or even a good fire in my neighborhood) I shall get it back in a day or two. Is your curiosity satisfied now?"

"Why will you persist in misjudging me, Tom?" asked Weston, earnestly. "You have allowed yourself to run down to a very low ebb, both as regards your health and in other ways. Reject my advice in other ways, if you will; but let me, at all events, help you to pull round."

"I want neither advice nor help," was the reply. "But if you've got any liquor at your place and choose to offer me a drink, I'll take it."

Ralph Weston hesitated. To supply a man like Webb with drink seemed an act of cruel kindness, if not downright folly, especially as he seemed but half-sober. Yet, the unfortunate man was evidently chilled to the bone, and a stimulant might, under the circumstances, do him more good than harm. What ought he to do?

"Come along, Tom," he said. "You shall have your drink, if you think you can carry it."

"Carry it!" repeated Webb, with a grim laugh. "I can carry a fair skinful, especially in weather like this. After all, you're a good chap, Weston."

So saying he disappeared in the fog, followed by his impromptu host. He knew his way well to the latter's rooms in the Adelphi, and he wanted a few yards start. Drunkards are as cunning as other more fully-developed madmen. His idea was to provide an opportunity for swallowing the remaining contents of his flask, which he trusted to have replenished subsequently. He had to sneak across the road, way to accomplish his object, for Weston was strong and fleet of foot. But he managed it and, breaking into a shuffling run, overtook his host near Somerset House.

"Better take my arm, or, I yours, in this fog," remarked Weston. "Why, what's the matter, Tom?"

What, with the hasty swallowing of raw rum and the scurry through the foggy air, Tom Webb was incapable of intelligent speech. So he adroitly put a soiled handkerchief across his mouth and grunted asthmatically. This (as was intended) aroused his companion's unquestioning concern, and they arrived at the Adelphi arm-in-arm. A somewhat steep climb up three flights of stairs brought them to the modest but withal cosy couple of rooms which Weston (in grandiloquent moments) sometimes referred to as his "chambers." A well banked fire loomed red in the grate, and a large lamp, promptly turned up to full power, revealed as comfortably furnished a little sitting room as any reasonable bachelor need desire.

It revealed something more, something that had not been so marked beneath the fog-bedimmed street-lights. It revealed the startling contrast between the two men.

Tom Webb, from his unkempt, grizzled hair and dirty, crumpled collar to his frayed trouser ends and down-at-heel shoes, appeared to be an exceedingly disreputable vagabond of forty-five or fifty. In reality, he was barely thirty years of age.

His host was just a well-set-up man of twenty-eight, who scarcely looked his age. Neatly, if somewhat plainly, dressed, but remarkably well groomed and blessed with more than an average share of good looks, Ralph Weston stood forth in the lamp-light as a very good sample, indeed, of a healthy, manly young Englishman. A look of sorrow and pity that he could not suppress came over his face as he marked the ravages which drink and neglect had wrought in his former schoolfellow's appearance. Then, taking him with friendly force by the shoulders, he pressed him into an arm-chair by the fire, and bestirred himself on hospitable thoughts intent.

"Which shall it be, Tom?" he queried, opening a cellaret. "Beer or whisky? Not much variety of choice, I must say."

"Whisky will do all right," was the reply, "if you don't happen to have any rum."

"Can't endure even the smell of the stuff," rejoined Weston; "but here's the whisky. And, as I'm pretty sure you've had no supper yet, I'll see what I can discover in the way of eatables. I feel as if I could manage a snack myself."

Now, considering that Tom Webb had broken his fast that day upon nothing more substantial than a baked potato, purchased in the street, he might have been expected to rejoice at the prospect of a supper of any sort. Not he. The money borrowed upon his overcoat had been spent solely upon rum. And the uppermost thought upon his mind now was to secure the opportunity of replenishing his flask, with his host's whisky. Ralph's brief absence to the larder gave him his chance, and he was quick to seize it. A slip of paper was hastily transformed into an impromptu funnel, and half the contents of a bottle of whisky were hastily transferred to the battered old flask. It never occurred to him that he was doing anything wrong or mean in thus surreptitiously helping himself. The whisky he must and would have, and it would probably be refused to him were he to ask for it. His scruples went no further.

Weston noted with renewed concern that although his wayward guest did but scanty justice to the little supper set before him, he contrived to replenish his glass several times before he rose to depart, and that he was thicker of speech and unsteadier of limb than before. He even proposed to him to camp for the night upon the sofa; but to this suggestion Webb would not listen at all.

"Well, Tom," he remarked, at length, "you are your own master, and must have your own way, I suppose. But I have a spare overcoat, and I absolutely insist upon your getting inside it before I'll let you go."

To this Webb consented, donning the proffered garment contrived to help himself to yet a fi [illegible] rum, and started toward Soho thro [illegible] fog that seemed denser than ever.

"I'm half sorry I let him go," muttered Ralph to himself, as he regained his sitting room. "But, as he says, he knows the way well enough to reach his place in the dark, and he's as nearly sober as he ever seems to be nowadays—poor chap."

Meanwhile, Tom Webb, feeling comparatively warm in his borrowed overcoat, shuffled along in his usual uneven manner, stopping at increasingly frequent intervals to make sure of his whereabouts. Everybody who has been abroad in a real thick London fog knows how disconcerting it is to the wayfarer, however familiar he may be with the district; and certainly Webb's addled brains were incapable of much discrimination. The streets, too, seemed quite deserted; not even a policeman could he come across. And, in sheer disgust, he proceeded to do the most irrational thing he could possibly have devised under the circumstances: he applied himself once more to the flask. A few minutes more of onward groping; then more hesitation, and more drink.

"Can't be far off now," he muttered, brokenly. "Round here to the left—it ought to be." And, accordingly, round to the left he staggered, feeling pretty sure that if he did not speedily strike the street he sought, brain and feet would alike fail him and leave him helpless in the gutter. No matter how drunk a man may be, he generally knows when he is upon the brink of collapse.

"Come, hold up, can't yer?"

The warning was gruffly spoken, and came all too late to save Webb from sudden and violent contact with an advancing pedestrian. He reeled back, and would certainly have fallen had not the newcomer seized his arm in a powerful grip. Nothing was distinct. They were as two shadowy figures in the mist. Webb was too much dazed by the shock and liquor to make any reply. He stood there swaying about in the other man's supporting grasp.

"Pretty far gone, I reckon," remarked the latter. "You looks like pitchin' on yer head as soon as I let go of yer, and I've a bigger job on hand than to play leanin' post for a boozey cove like you."

"Where—am I?" hiccoughed Webb. "Lost ra'way."

"No wonder, what with the fog and the booze," was the reply. "Well, you are in Greek street."

"Good!" gasped Webb, trying hard to stand unaided. "I live—No. 18 Cato street."

"No. 18 Cato street, eh?" repeated the stranger, with interest in his tone. "Why, that's close by. But how'll you get in at this time of night?"

"Latch-key—bed room, ground floor," was Webb's disjointed, but still intelligible explanation. If, by means of his latch-key, he could still reach his room, he would be safe. But he was obviously incapable of walking, even a short distance, without assistance.

The stranger hesitated, as though rapidly revolving some fresh plan of action in his mind. "See here, my festive cuss," he said, at length, "I'll see yer as far as yer crib, if you'll just sit down on that curb stone for a couple of minutes. I've a mate waiting for me a bit down the street, and I want to tell 'im wot's up. See?"

Webb assented, and sat down as bidden. The stranger uttered a peculiar sort of cat-call, which was answered in the distance, and walked swiftly down the street. Within a few minutes he returned, according to promise, and, being a man of obviously vast personal strength, he easily raised and supported his drunken protege to Cato street, which, despite the still dense fog, he apparently had no difficulty in finding. Twice he paused, as though to listen, and it was evident from the sounds, that a vehicle was following in the roadway close behind.

By the time they reached No. 18, Webb was in a state of barely semi-consciousness. His conductor extracted the latch-key from his pocket, opened the hall door carefully, and fairly carried him into the hall.

"Which is your bed room?" he demanded, quietly lighting a taper.

By a final effort, Webb managed to indicate a door at the extremity of the hall, and then went off into a drunken stupor upon the stranger's shoulder. Very gently the latter carried him into the bed room, and deposited him, just as he was, upon the bed. Then, after a hurried glance around at the position of the furniture, he extinguished the taper and retraced his steps, omitting, however, to close the hall door behind him. Upon the opposite side of the street a hansom cab loomed vaguely in the dense mist, with a tall man's figure standing at the horse's head.

"Well?" queried the tall man, impatiently. "Can you manage it without risk?"

"I can manage it right enough, sir," was the reply, "and rare luck I call it to tumble across such a chance. As for the risk, well, there's risk to be run, anyhow, in a job like this; but less this way, I reckon, than any other. Wot you've got to do, sir, is to lead the 'orse quietly on until I overtakes yer, and if yer happens to spot a copper keep 'im in chat for a minute or two. That's just the one thing I'm afeared of, stumbling against a copper; and the odds is ag'in it. So here goes!"

Standing upon the footboard of the cab, the speaker stretched forth his powerful arms and stepped into the roadway, bearing a motionless figure enveloped in a long naval cloak. There was something in the man's every action suggestive of coolness and self-reliance, and these qualities were strongly in evidence upon the present occasion. With no greater apparent effort than though he had been carrying a sick child, and as calmly as though No. 18 were his own residence, he re-entered the house and noiselessly went into Webb's bed room. The heavy, stertorous breathing of its drunken inmate was sufficient proof that he would not regain consciousness for many hours to come; but the intruder did not deem it prudent to hazard striking a light. He had, from memory, an exact knowledge of the room, and had no difficulty in depositing his burthen upon a sofa that stood near the fire place. Lastly, he placed the latch-key upon the floor, as though it had been dropped by its drunken owner, and once more went forth into the street, closing the door behind him. For a moment he stared hard into the still dense fog, as though half-expecting to discover the form of a prowling constable. But he could see naught in the brown mist save the feeble radiance of the nearest street lamp, and, with a grunt of satisfaction, he set off to overtake the departed hansom.

* * * * * * *

The ways of drunkards are erratic. In an ordinary way, Tom Webb would sleep for ten or twelve hours after a debauch. Yet, an hour before the earliest of Soho milkmen had started upon his rounds, he awoke to a dazed sort of semi-consciousness. His throat and mouth seemed to be dried up, as though by fire, and his animal instincts almost mechanically urged him to seek for water. He knew, vaguely, that he was in the room which to him represented home, and that there should be water upon the washstand, if he could but find it in the dark. So he rolled off the bed and staggered across the room in search of the jug. He found it, drank eagerly of the contents, and essayed to return to bed. He mistook his bearings, however, and stumbled against the sofa instead.

A Dearth of Planets.

During the coming autumn, in the month of November especially, the astronomical amateurs who take delight in the study of the planets will encounter a very unusual and unsatisfactory state of affairs. With the exception of Neptune and some of the asteroids, none of which amount to anything as telescopic objects, not a single planet will be available for observation.

Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn will all be far south and so near the sun that in the middle of the month all will be hidden in the morning or evening twilight, except that Saturn may then possibly be seen for a few minutes after sunset, low down in the southwest. But the sky will be practically planetless all night; nor will the case be much better for a month or two before and after.

Such a crowding of the planets around the sun is very rare. It would require a tedious calculation to determine just when it happened last, and when it will occur again. Probably it does not occur more than once in a century, if, indeed, so often.

It may be worth while, in view of certain semi-superstitious ideas which are current, to add that this one-sided massing of the planets is of no special importance or significance. It will produce no effect upon the earth perceptible by any ordinary observation, nor exert upon human affairs the slightest influence, either harmful or beneficial.—Youth's Companion.

Extraordinary Marriage Vows.

An English rural clergyman says that in his parish it is quite the fashion for the man, when giving the ring in the marriage ceremony, to say to the woman: "With my body I thee wash up, and with all my hurdle goods I thee and thou." He said the women were better up in this part of the service than the men. One day, however, a bride startled him by promising, in what she supposed to be the language of the prayer book to take her husband "to 'avo and 'old from this day fornit for betterer horse, for richer power, in siggerness health, to love cherries and to bay." What meaning this extraordinary vow conveyed to the woman's mind, the incumbent said, baffled him to conjecture.—Short Stories' Magazine.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Agricultural Notes.

The value of animal manure to our farms is seldom realized. We speak of commercial fertilizers as a necessity to some of our lands and we speak truly. But the correct use of our barnyard manure means the adding every year of many millions of dollars to the value of our farms. For this reason there is a close connection between the number of live stock in the country and the fertility of our farms. In the last few years our sheep, hogs, cattle and horses have decreased by many millions. This means that it is possible for us to put many millions less tons of manure on our land than formerly. Consider the manurial product from a single animal, and then consider it from all the animals in the country. It is safe to say that during the late depression our farm lands have deteriorated enormously, due to the lessened supply of manure from farm animals. If the higher prices now obtained succeed in stimulating breeding they will confer an indirect but great blessing on our agricultural communities by increasing the fertility possibilities of the soil.

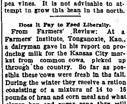
* * *

There are few if any poor farms that cannot be made good farms provided they were ever good farms. A worn-out farm is not a necessary result of cultivating a farm for generations. In other parts of the world some of the most fertile farms at the present day are those that have been cultivated for hundreds and thousands of years. The Almighty, when he made the earth for the abode of man, did not so construct the soil that its fertility might be exhausted in a generation or two. Where there are poor, run-down farms we may be assured that there has been mismanagement in cultivation. Not only is it possible to grow all the crops we now grow without running down the farm, but it is possible to take a run-down farm and bring it back to a state of fertility greater than that known in any previous period of its existence. Nor is a miraculous amount of knowledge needed to do this. It only requires a study by the owner of the best methods of handling a farm as they are now taught in our agricultural colleges, in the agricultural press and by many of our best farmers.

The Velvet Bean.

A bulletin of the Alabama experiment station says: The velvet bean (Mucuna utilis) is a plant which, in general appearance of leaves and stems, is nearly similar to the running varieties of cow peas. The vines attain great lengths, a growth of twenty feet being usually made and much greater lengths being sometimes attained. The beans are larger than cowpeas and usually three or four are found in each pod. The pods are short and stout, nearly black in color and covered with a coat of velvety hairs. The velvet bean belongs to the same family as the cowpea. It is a legume or leguminous plant, and like the cowpea, the velvet bean is a renovating plant, having the power to enrich the land on which it grows.

In any comparison of velvet beans with cowpeas as a renovating crop, there is one point in which velvet beans are conspicuously superior. When frost comes the vines and leaves settle down together in such a way that the force of falling rain is broken and the network of vines is so complete that the leaves, the most valuable portion, cannot be blown or washed away. With cowpeas the case is somewhat different, the bare stems standing erect and affording no means of retaining the leaves in place. On the other hand better implements are required to turn under vines of the velvet beans than to plow under cowpea vines. It is not advisable to attempt to grow this bean in the north.



Does It Pay to Feed Liberally.

From Farmers' Review: At a Farmers' Institute, Tonganoxie, Kan., a dairyman gave in his report on producing milk for the Kansas City market from common cows, picked up through the country. So far as possible these cows were fresh in the fall. During the winter they receive a ration consisting of a mixture of 14 to 16 pounds of bran and corn meal and what clover hay and sugar cane they will eat. In summer they receive in addition to pasture and soiling crops, four to five pounds of bran. By this system of liberal feeding, a two years' record shows an annual income per cow of $70.99, the milk being sold at an average of 8 cents per gallon. Last year at the agricultural college our best cow cost us $32.80 for feed, the highest of any cow in the herd and about $3.50 above the average of the herd, and yet the profit from that cow over the cost of feed was $24.12 above the average of the herd. Does it pay to feed liberally? With a good dairy cow it surely does. Had the herd referred to above or the best cow at the agricultural college been stinted to feed it would have been an extravagant piece of economy that would have resulted in a diseased pocket book. The dairy cow is a hard working animal and should be fed accordingly.

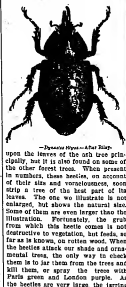
Protection for Trees in Winter.

Mr. A. D. Barnes tells in the Wisconsin Horticulturist about his method of protecting fruit trees against winter injury. He says: "I want to tell the readers of the Horticulturist of a protector which I am using with great success, namely, window-screen wire. Cut the wire netting in different lengths and different widths, to suit small or large, short or tall trees. Roll the pieces around a broom-stick before going to the orchard. Use close-meshed, jointed, wire screening. Set the bottom end one inch into the earth. This protector needs no tying at all; will expand as the tree grows. It is all right for protecting against sun scald, mice, rabbits and a multitude of other things and makes no defense or protection for bugs, worms and larvae. This protector is all right and not patented, so let's not quarrel over the origin of it, but use it at once. It is a daisy. I put it on five hundred trees one year ago. These trees were nearly all planted in the orchard in the spring of 1891, consequently were of quite good size. The wire ready cut at hardware store here cost just eleven dollars and it took me about a day and a half to form them and put them on. Every one is in its place now, one year since placing, and I am sure they have saved a good many trees from the ravages of mice, as the ground was thickly covered with a second crop of clover and we lost about twenty-five trees the previous winter.

The Ash Tree Beetle.

We herewith illustrate one of the largest of the beetle family that preys upon our forest trees. This one is called the Dynastes tityus. It feeds upon the leaves of the ash tree principally, but it is also found on some of the other forest trees. When present in numbers, these beetles, on account of their size and voraciousness, soon strip a tree of the best part of its leaves. The one we illustrate is not enlarged, but shows the natural size. Some of them are even larger than the illustration. Fortunately, the grub from which this beetle comes is not destructive to vegetation, but feeds, so far as is known, on rotten wood. When the beetles attack our shade and ornamental trees, the only way to check them is to jar them from the trees and kill them, or spray the trees with Paris green and London purple. As the beetles are very large, the jarring method of disposing of them may be preferable to the spraying of the trees.



—Dynastes tityus.—After Riley.

Halter-Breaking for Colts.

It is an excellent practice to break a colt to halter at weaning time, for the younger the colt is taught to lead, the more easily is the operation accomplished. Youngsters halter-broken at weaning time are more than half harness-broken when of age for service. It is quite an undertaking to round up a 3 or 4 year old colt and break it to halter, which feat is necessary before the process of harness racing commences. At that age they are so strong and frequently make such a protracted and stubborn fight that the animal is spoiled. It not infrequently happens that the horse rears and breaks its neck in the operation. All danger may be avoided, and the labor necessary to educate the colt to lead will be minimized by halter-breaking at weaning time. A colt will soon yield to the tension of the halter if pulled at an angle, and it quickly learns that to follow the breaker relieves it from pain. The resistance is brief and the subjugation complete.—Ex.

In fattening old steers it should be borne in mind that the days of growth are past in that the steer has fully matured his bony frame, hence does not require as great a supply of nitrogenous food as would a young, growing beast or dairy cow. So long as he is getting the food of maintenance he will neither progress nor retrograde, but to fatten him it is necessary to provide him with an abundance of carbonaceous food, of which corn is the greatest and cheapest example, and to aid the fattening process should have comparatively little exercise in a comfortable barn rather than out of doors in the cold where food is wasted in raising the temperature of ice water and warming up the body against winter's blizzards. It is throwing good feed away to pile such nitrogenous foods as oats, wheat, rye, etc., into old steers when corn, oil cake, hay and fodder will do all that is required. Save the nitrogenous foods for the growing and milking beasts and feed the corn to the older fattening animals.

Butter and Other Pure-Food Laws in France.—They have contracted a pure-food enthusiasm in France, and now the senate is considering a law that provides for imprisonment for from three to twelve months and a fine of from $20 to $1,000, or both, for deceiving the purchaser either respecting the nature and qualities of the goods or the amount sold. If false weights are used the punishment can be doubled and the offending scale smashed up. Another year's punishment can be added if the goods sold should be hurtful to man or beast.—Merchants' Sentinel.

Bonedust for Young Stock.—Trials of feeding bonedust to young stock have been made in France. Four ounces daily fed to a calf gave an increase of thirty pounds to twenty-four days beyond the previous twenty-four days' increase on the same ration. Thus five and one half pounds ground bone, costing 3½d, made a live-weight increase of thirty pounds. The bonedust is said to promote assimilation of the food, tending to the formation of flesh.—Ex.

Poultry feed is easier secured than feed of larger farm stock. Almost everything that is at all edible can be made into food for poultry.

BASHFUL COUPLE.

Tried to Hide Their Happiness, but Rice Exposed Them.

"I don't know why it is," said H. R. Riggs of Philadelphia, at the Holland House, "but young married couples always try to deceive the general public and create the impression that they have been married for a long time. This has led to many jests and stories; but about as funny a thing in this connection as I know of actually happened to a friend of mine who got married last year. The wedding occurred in the city, and the brougham in which they drove away from the house had been liberally decorated with ribbons and streamers by their friends. As soon as they turned the corner the bridegroom ordered the coachman to take them to the nearest elevated station, and there dismissed the obnoxious carriage. In pursuit of their plan of deception they determined to sit on opposite sides of the car, to pretend not to know each other, and to be apparently deeply absorbed in reading papers. All of this they did, but every one that entered that particular car would first glance at one and then at the other, smile audibly and give them their undivided and amused attention. They saw that they were discovered, but in what manner it had come about they could not imagine. It was only when they finally got into their state-room in the train at the Forty second street station, that the reason why their deception failed to deceive revealed itself, for then they discovered that the brim of the groom's hat and the top of the bride's headdress were white with rice that had been thrown at them when they left the house."—New York Tribune.

Passengers on One Liner Get Mail in a Barrel Thrown From Another.

An unusual incident happened on the homeward voyage of the Castle liner, Carisbrook Castle, which brought the last mail from the Cape.

The English letters not having arrived before the Lismore Castle sailed from Cape Town for home, the captain of the Carisbrook Castle, which was to sail the following day, good naturedly undertook to deliver the letters to the disappointed passengers of the Lismore Castle on the high seas.

Overtaking her on the ocean, the letters were enclosed in a tin box and soldered up. This was then put into a flour barrel, with a pole attached flying a red flag, and, having passed the Lismore Castle and got well ahead of her the barrel was dropped overboard, the captain at the same time hoisting a signal which had been prearranged.

The Lismore Castle, coming up on her course, in due time picked up the barrel, and the passengers received the anxiously-awaited news from home.—New York Journal.

Cowardly Act.

Frau Hingstermeier, the wife of Herr Hingstermeier, the lion tamer, was what may be termed—to put it mildly—a virago, and held Hingstermeier in absolute subjection.

The lion-tamer returned to the family caravan one evening in a state of hilarity which made him feel that he would better postpone an interview with his better half until this condition had worn off. He, therefore, concluded not to sleep in the family quarters.

The next morning his wife called him to account, and he explained that he had been having a little jollification, and did not wish to disturb her slumbers on his return.

"Where did you sleep?" she demanded.

"In the cage with the lions," he replied, meekly.

"Coward!" hissed Mrs. Hingstermeier, with a look as of one robbed of her just dues.—Life.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Dairy Notes.

The United States department of agriculture is making strenuous efforts to establish a butter trade with the oriental countries, such as China and Japan. Recently a governmental order was given to a Minnesota creamery for 12 cans of butter containing 23 pounds each to be sent to China. The cans are hermetically sealed and then are packed in boxes with sawdust. The butter is similar to that put on our own market, with the exception that it has a trifle more color and more salt. The butter is not as highly flavored as some, but that fact increases its chance of keeping. It is learned that the government will carefully watch results and if this shipment does not prove satisfactory, will endeavor to ascertain the reasons and guard against the mistakes in future.

At the coming dairy conventions this winter makers of dairy butter will do well to send butter for exhibition purposes. Most of the poor butter on the markets comes from people that suppose they are good butter makers. Their grocers do not like to tell them that they do not make the kind of butter the market demands, but the judges at the dairy exhibitions have none of that sympathetic feeling and will score the butter as it deserves. If more would compete at these places it would greatly advance the interests of the dairy. Every housewife should consider it a favor to be told just where she falls in coming up to the demands of the public. Sometimes it will be in the color, sometimes the salt, often it will be found to be something that may be easily remedied. We should remember that there is a commercial standard that will have recognition. The trouble with most dairy butter is that it has been made in accordance with the standard in the mind of the butter maker, and not in accordance with the general commercial standard.

* * *

The export of Canadian butter to England has undergone many changes within the last twenty years. There was a time when it appeared certain that Canada would control to a large extent the butter market of Great Britain. In 1881 the value of Canadian butter imported into England was over $3,300,000. Then Danish butter began to compete with it seriously, the latter butter being under the watchful supervision of the Danish government. That government did not hesitate to go beyond what we call governmental sphere to influence its trade. Canadian butter continued to decrease in quantity imported for the following eight years, till in 1889 the value of Canadian butter sold in England was only a little over $174,000. After that time there was some improvement but nothing that had the appearance of permanency until the Canadian government took the matter in hand in 1897. The authorities began the subsidizing of cold-storage steamers and the partial subsidizing of creameries and cheese factories to such an extent that the Canadians were stimulated to send their butter across the water in its best condition, and of best quality. It made a reputation for itself on the English market and from that time the trade has rapidly developed. In 1896 the value of butter sent to England was $893,000, but in the following year, under the fostering care of the government, the amount sent over was valued at $1,912,000. In 1898 the amount was about the same as the preceding year, namely, $1,915,000.

A Poultry House.

From Farmers' Review: We have about completed a poultry house to accommodate fifty hens that when finished will have cost less than $1 in money. It is built of large poles, or small logs, and is 12 by 20 feet in size. It faces the southeast and is five feet to the eaves, the ridge pole being three feet higher. Eight twenty-foot poles are used for the back or northwest side; two twenty-foot poles are needed to front, one at bottom and one at the top, with six nine-foot poles between, for the length is partitioned with logs nine feet from the west end, making a room 9 by 12 to be used as a roosting room. Twenty-four twelve-foot poles are needed, eight at either end, and eight for the partition, but the partition poles need not be so large.

The larger room (11 by 20) is open to the southeast and will be the scratching shed, the only door opening from the shed into the roosting room. The east end logs were held in place and made solid at the southeast corner by a timber being set in the ground and spike nails driven through it into the ends of the logs. Small poles were used as rafters, being placed about one foot apart, and nailed, one end to the ridge pole the other to eave pole; straw is placed thickly on this—thick enough to shed water. It is also necessary to wire or fasten poles or brush at intervals on this to secure it in place and to prevent the wind blowing it away.

A window placed to the south wall of the roosting room is necessary to allow light and sun in this room. The cracks between logs are chinked, then daubed carefully, inside and out. If this is well done and your mortar is good you will have a house that, if not a thing of beauty, will be very comfortable and will last as long as you want it to, with an occasional renewing of the roof and a patching with mortar. One man and one horse can build such a house, if the poles are close by, to six days, and with cash outlay only for nails, window and door. Such houses are practicable only where poles are plenty.

When the walls are whitewashed inside such a house will look very cozy, especially of a cold, windy day. The roosting poles will be flat on top and made level, and these, with a few nests, will constitute all the furnishings in the roosting room. The roosts will be placed to allow of one passing entirely around them, to allow of better and quicker removal of the droppings.

In the shed will be placed the box containing their bath, which will consist of road dust and sifted ashes, renewed as often as necessary; drinking fountain, grit and charcoal box, several nests and a great amount of litter in which a little grain will be scattered in order to induce them to exercise. The litter will be renewed when necessary, often I hope, for the more they scratch and wear out the litter, the more eggs we will get. Common boxes will be used for nests, entirely separate from other furnishings and from each other, for while they will take more room than a continuous row of nests, they are much easier cleaned. Wheat or oats straw will be used for nesting material. A curtain made of gunnysacks—burlap—will be used to confine the chicks to the shed of stormy days. Old carpeting would do all right. Poultry-raisers who do not need to count the cost can pass this article to some one not so lucky.

EMMA CLEARWATERS.

Poultry Notes.

The egg trade of Germany and Russia is said to be developing very rapidly, but the movement of eggs is toward Germany and from Russia, so far as these two countries are concerned. In 1880 Germany paid other countries $3,498,000 for eggs, but since that time her imports of eggs have increased to such an extent that during the first eleven months of last year the value of her imports of eggs was $16,993,000. On the other hand Russia is building up a fine trade in export eggs. In 1881 the total value of eggs exported from Russia was $237,000. In 1894 it had increased to $9,252,000, and for the first eleven months of last year it was $17,990,000. The raising of poultry for the production of eggs has become an important factor in Russian husbandry. In 1894 freight on the Russian railroads was reduced, and this gave an impetus to the infant industry.

Little is known generally of the real character of what we call "black-head in turkeys." Previous to the year 1894 even the cause was unknown, as no scientist appears to have investigated it thoroughly. In that year Dr. Theobald Smith, of the Rhode Island Experiment Station, set himself the task of finding out the cause of the disease. He requested persons having birds sick with black-head to send him parts of the birds that died. The parts received were sections of the heads and intestines, particularly the liver. The latter is always affected in this disease. The liver is covered with mottles of brownish, greenish or yellowish color. A microscopic investigation showed the trouble to be due to a minute parasite of the protozoan order. The life history has not, so far as we are informed, been determined, hence it is difficult to say if the parasite has an intermediate host, such as some animal or insect, that it must go through before being able to live in the turkey. Whenever the disease breaks out in a flock it is certainly well to isolate the sick birds and remove them from the pasture ground over which they have been roaming.

Breeding the Dairy Cow.

Henry Wallace says:

"We have no hesitation in saying that the farmer who has good dual purpose cows will learn how to mate them, learn how to grow calves on a balanced ration, can grow as good calves as ever followed their dams, and at present prices can sell them to feeders at 30 months old for $50 per head and over. There is money in this, and plenty of it, but it is only the skillful breeder and skillful feeder that can realize it. He can, sometimes he does, in time, as a rule, he will, but only when he gives close attention and learns how to balance his skim-milk ration with corn."

We agree with Mr. Wallace. He means that the man who owns dairy cows should not be satisfied to breed to any old bull, but should select one that will get good feeders and beefers. Where the dairyman breeds to raise the female progeny the matter is different. He must breed to a dairy bull, but the thousands of dairymen who do not raise calves might make more by breeding calves that will feed well for beef. Skim-milk, being highly nitrogenous, requires a carbohydrate like corn to balance it, as Mr. Wallace suggests.

High Priced Cattle.—The prices of choice cattle on the market sound most encouraging. Sales at over $6 are not uncommon now, and a number at $6.60 to $6.65 have been reported. This gives the owner of feeding cattle nerve, but it must be considered that the class of cattle that is bringing these fancy prices was high and that the country is not yet abundantly supplied with feeding cattle that are capable of being brought to such prime condition. It takes good breeding to produce the animal of the high beef type and only such animals, even in the hands of the most intelligent feeder, can be made to top the market. It is generally understood that there is only a small proportion of the feeding stock offered in the market that can be so handled as to finish them up as choice beef or export steers. The men who own them can get big prices whenever an intelligent feeder buyer comes around, but scrub stock must continue to go at less prices.—Texas Stock Journal.

When cattle come off pasture in fall to enter the stables or feeding yards, an attempt should be made to kill the young "warbles" which are forming upon their backs. Most of our readers will know that we mean by "warbles," the large grubs to be found in rounded abscesses upon the backs of cattle in winter time. Years ago the Farmers' Review showed to an exhaustive series of articles how serious is the loss caused annually by these grubs which puncture the hide, set up irritation and inflammation and consequently hinder the fattening process or milk production. It is claimed that the young grubs may be killed now by bathing the backs of the cattle with brine and this plan should be tried and again later on, should this method fail, a little mercurial ointment rubbed upon the warble will usually kill the grub, which is also sometimes dispatched by the thrust of a large needle. When, however, the grub has grown to a large size and is surrounded by pus it may be squeezed out and destroyed.

DRIVING TO THE LEFT

AWKWARD METHODS IN VOGUE IN CANADA.

Still Cling to the Old World Methods—Americans Driving in That Country Have a Mighty Risky Time of It—A Victim Unbosoms Himself.

"Though I knew from experience that keeping to the left was the rule of the road in England," observed a well-known horseman to a Washington Star reporter, "I did not know that rule prevailed in Canada until week before last, when I took a short drive on the outskirts of Toronto. I have been a horseman for many years and know the rules of the road pretty well, but I had considerable difficulty to keep out of trouble there, I assure you. A friend loaned me a nice turnout which had rather a free stepper in the harness. At the first turnout I naturally turned to the right in passing. The man I met was pretty well fixed also in the way of a horse, and the first thing I knew we came together in splash-bang style, the result of it being that I lost a wheel and got pitched out into the road. I supposed, of course, that he would turn to the right and he supposed for similar reasons, for he thought from the kind of a horse that I was driving that I knew what I was about, that I would turn to the left. Mutual explanations followed, but I was the loser in the transaction, for I felt obliged to have the mishap fixed at my expense. An American driving in Canada is, as a consequence, in one continued worry, for it matters not how clever one is with the reins, it is extremely hard to unlearn the rule which obtains in this country of keeping to the right. The Canadians have an argument to prove that they are right in the matter and that keeping to the left is much safer in the way of preventing collisions on the road, but I could not understand it, and three days later I had a similar trouble happen in Quebec, though in that case it was the other team that got the worst of it. Still it was just as annoying to me, though not as expensive. It is the same thing with foot passengers and bicycles, and the American wheelmen have a hard time in consequence of it; collisions being frequent and in some instances very dangerous. The Canadians may be right about it, but, just the same, no American can ever get it in his head thoroughly that they are. The Canadians drive from the right side of the team, as we do, and the whip socket is on the right, but all the rest of it is to the left."

LAZINESS OF KAFFIRS.

Employed in Mines, but Will Not Work Unless Watched.

R. Ruaff, who left the Transvaal last May for a tour of Europe and America, has gone to Milwaukee to inspect the breweries. In regard to labor conditions in the Boer country, he said to a reporter for the Detroit Tribune: "One of the mines in the copper country will turn out as much work as five of our men. We have to employ Kaffir labor. Kaffirs are notoriously lazy, and they require constant supervision or they will quit altogether. With every five Kaffirs one white man is employed. One hole drilled with a hand drill is considered a day's stint for a Kaffir. Although our employes do not get as much pay individually as the miners hereabouts, yet labor costs us much more, because one of the copper country miners will do as much work as five Kaffirs. In Oom Paul's domain the natives are restricted by stringent laws. When a native is employed in the Transvaal he is given a pass upon his arrival, and he is legally compelled to work for a specified length of time. If he deserts his employer he is arrested. When a native is seen on the streets or highways any white man has a right to demand an inspection of his pass. If he does not produce it, or there is ground for believing that he has not obtained permission from the employer to leave his work he is taken into custody."

Probably She Meant It.

"When she will, she will, you can depend on't," is a line which many men have quoted of many women. The saying is often unjust, and the woman is often justified, but now and then the cap fits perfectly. Not long ago, a fast express was bowling over the sands of Arizona. Just how it happened was frequently explained and never understood, but as the train sped along the side of a parched river it left the rails, rolled down the bank and landed in three feet of muddy water at the bottom of the river bed. One by one the occupants of the rear car extricated themselves from the mass and sought for means of escape, while stanching various wounds caused by broken glass. Every exit was jammed tight. Just then, in the midst of the doubt and confusion, rose a woman's voice in emphatic demand. "Let me out! Let me out! If you don't let me out I'll break a window!"—Youths' Companion.

Facts About Yourself.

The average weight of a man in Great Britain is 140 pounds; of a woman, 125. The average height of the Britishers is about five feet seven inches for men, five feet four for women. Lunatics are smaller than sane people, and are seldom fat. On the other hand, centenarians are also generally small-boned and lean. The blood completes its circulation through the body in twenty-two seconds, and to three minutes every drop passes through the heart and lungs and is revitalized. A drop of blood will travel 61,320 miles a year. In 84 years a blood corpuscle would travel 5,150,808 miles. For this matter a reasonably active man walks about 297,000 miles—more than ten times the earth's circumference—in 84 years, just trotting about the house and office.—London Answers.

A TIDAL BORE.

The Famous Wave at the Head of the Bay of Fundy and How to See It.

The Bay of Fundy is known to the world chiefly on account of its tides, which rise to an immense height, seventy feet having been recorded. As these tides reach the head of the bay and are forced up the Petticodiac river, the conditions are such as to form the front into an almost perpendicular wall of water termed a "bore." This formation is a grand and exciting spectacle, and interest in the phenomenon is increasing. Large numbers of American tourists, scientific men and others visit the locality to admire its effects and study its causes. About nineteen miles from the mouth of the Petticodiac, at a point commonly known as the "bend," the river takes a turn almost at right angles to its previous course. Immediately above the bend and on the line of the Intercolonial railway is situated Moncton. The run of the rising tide first breaks into a bore at Stony Creek, eight miles below Moncton. At first it is scarcely noticeable, but it gradually grows until at the bend it about reaches its maximum height. The wharves of Moncton are thus the most popular positions from which to view this interesting phenomenon, says Self-Culture. The average interval from the arrival of one bore to the arrival of the next is about twelve hours and twenty-five minutes, so that the average retardation from day to day is about fifty minutes. But "his boreship" is erratic, and the daily retardation may be anywhere from forty minutes to an hour. The best time to see the bore is during the full moons of August, September or October, and if the visitor would see this natural wonder in its most beautiful aspect, let him choose a bright moonlight night, rather than the daytime. Under such favorable circumstances a crowd of four or five hundred people, one day last fall, witnessed the arrival of the bore. The schedule time for its arrival, given by the local newspapers, was 9:20 o'clock. At 9:12 the expectant crowd on Moncton's wharves heard a noise easily distinguishable as the rush of distant waters. This grew louder as the bore approached and rounded the bend, and at 9:22, two minutes later than the schedule time, there appeared in full view of the spectators an almost perpendicular wall of water, five or six feet in height, rushing madly against the swift current of the stream. In some places along the head of the bore the water, beaten into a foam by its own violence, sparkled in the moonlight, while along the shore the mud ploughed from the bank made the water almost black. The contrast was beautiful.

Ways of Shuffling Off.

"I have been looking over one of the blanks for the regular monthly mortality report of the board of health," said a citizen, who admits that he likes to pry and prowl, "and I was amazed at the weird diseases which I found enumerated. I had no idea that humanity had such a variety of things with eerie names to select from in the matter of shuffling off. Science has certainly made a great advance in that particular. A few years ago appendicitis was about the only fancy disease on the market, and that was beyond the reach of people of limited means. It was confined entirely to the aristocracy. Here are a few sample maladies from the last board of health catalogue: Haematemesis, apthous, phlegmasia, dotonum, spina bifida and mollities ossium. I'd like to see the man who would dare to assert, after reading that little list, that medicine has been at a standstill during the past decade. Altogether, there are 302 different ways of getting out of the world set down on the blank, and the chap who couldn't find something to suit him in the lot would certainly be ultra-fastidious. The document looks at first glance like the classified advertisement of a big bargain sale. It is a magnificent monument of pathologic perseverance."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Babies Were Mixed.

A couple of ladies in Pana desired to play a joke on the husband of one and got things into a pretty mess before they got through. The husbands were absent from home when the ladies gave birth to children, twins being born to one and one to the other. The single baby was transferred to the bed of the twins in order to make the father of the twins think he was the father of triplets. After the joke had been allowed to cause consternation for a time in the mind of the supposed father of the triplets the whole thing was exposed, but the mothers were unable to identify their children. One woman took one and the other retained two, but neither is certain she has the right ones. Hysterics and other evidences of excitement are in order, but the complete identity of these children will never be established. The mother of the twins will know that she has one of her children, but which one? While the mother of the one child will never be certain that she hasn't one of the other woman's babies.—Taylorville (Ill.) Courier.

Mrs. McKinley's Gown.

Mrs. McKinley is, as every one knows, a great invalid, and her husband's devotion to her is a beautiful example, which will go down in history. She has excellent taste in the choice of her gowns. She receives, almost always, seated in a large armchair, so has her dresses made that the front effect is always good, and her trains are so arranged that there is not too much fullness at the top of the skirt and yet enough to hang in graceful folds about her, says Miss Van Santvoord, in Demorest's. Mrs. McKinley's gowns for this winter are in excellent taste. She has one of silver-gray peau de soie, which is a sort of heavy ribbed silk, with hardly any luster. The skirt has a long train, and all up the front and on both sides are bands of beautiful steel embroidery, with small silver spangles. The bodice is embroidered in the same way and is relieved at the throat by a collar and jabot of real lace. It is made surplice with long, tight-fitting sleeves, which fall well over the hands.

SAID TO CONGRESS

SYNOPSIS OF PRESIDENT McKINLEY'S MESSAGE.

Touching Tribute to the Late Vice President—Financial Affairs in Good Condition—Recommendations for Currency Reform—The Philippine Question Exhaustively Reviewed—In Duty Bound to Put Down the Rebellion—Future Government of the Islands for Congress to Decide—Business of the Government Reviewed.

The following is a synopsis of President McKinley's message:

The message opens with a touching tribute to the memory of the late Vice President Hobart.

The fifty-sixth congress convenes, says the president, in its first regular session with the country in a condition of unusual prosperity, of universal good will among the people at home, and in relations of peace and friendship with every government of the world.

Our foreign commerce has shown great increase in volume and value. The combined imports and exports for the year are the largest ever shown by a single year in all our history.

Referring to the government finances, the president says that the receipts from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, aggregated $610,982,004.35. For the fiscal year the expenditures were $700,093,564.02, leaving a deficit of $89,111,559.67.

The secretary of the treasury estimates that the receipts for the current fiscal year will aggregate $640,958,112, and upon the basis of present appropriations a surplus of $40,000,000.

The present gratifying strength of the treasury is shown by the fact that on Dec. 1, 1899, the available cash balance was $278,004,837.72, of which $239,744,905.36 was in gold coin and bullion. The conditions of confidence which prevail throughout the country have brought gold into more general use, and customs receipts are now almost entirely paid in that coin.

The president directs the attention of congress to the necessity of reforms in the national banking act, and expresses the hope that reasonable modifications be made in the act to make its service more responsive to the people's needs. He says:

"I urgently recommend that to support the existing gold standard, and to maintain 'the parity in value of the coins of the two metals (gold and silver) and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the market, and in the payment of debts,' the secretary of the treasury be given additional power and charged with the duty to sell United States bonds and to employ such other effective means as may be necessary to these ends."

In summing up the financial section of his message, the president says:

"Our receipts now equal our expenditures; deficit revenues no longer create alarm. Let us remove the only remaining cause by conferring the full and necessary power on the secretary of the treasury and impose on him the duty to uphold the present gold standard and preserve the coins of the two metals on a parity with each other, which is the repeatedly declared policy of the United States.

In this connection I repeat my former recommendations that a portion of the gold holdings shall be placed in a trust fund, from which greenbacks shall be redeemed upon presentation, but when once redeemed shall not thereafter be paid out except for gold."

The attention of congress is called to to the value of an American merchant marine for the extension of our commercial trade and the strengthening of our power upon the sea, and immediate action is urged.

On the subject of trusts the president says:

Combinations of capital organized into trusts to control the conditions of trade among our citizens, to stifle competition, limit production and determine the prices of products used and consumed by the people, are justly provoking public discussion, and should early claim the attention of the congress.

It is universally conceded that combinations which engross or control the market of any particular kind of merchandise or commodity necessary to the general community, by suppressing natural and ordinary competition, whereby prices are unduly enhanced to the general consumer, are obnoxious not only to the common law but also to the public welfare. There must be a remedy for the evils involved in such organizations.

If the present law can be extended more certainly to control or check these monopolies or trust, it should be done without delay. Whatever power the congress possesses over this most important subject should be promptly ascertained and asserted.

It is apparent that uniformity of legislation upon this subject in the several states is much to be desired. It is to be hoped that such uniformity founded on a wise and just discrimination between what is injurious and what is useful and necessary in business operations may be obtained, and that means may be found for the congress within the limitations of its constitutional power so to supplement an effective code of state legislation as to make a complete system of laws throughout the United States adequate to compel a general observance of the salutary rules.

A review of our relations with foreign states is presented, with such recommendations as are deemed appropriate. Our relations with other nations are of most friendly terms.

The president again refers to the necessity for the construction of the Nicaragua canal and urges congress to take early action in the matter.

Of the dispute regarding the Alaskan boundary, the president says a modus vivendi for provisional demarcations in the region about the head of the Lynn canal has been agreed upon and expresses the hope that negotiations now pending will end in an early and amicable adjustment.

With regard to the British-Boer war, the president says this government has maintained an attitude of neutrality.

The president refers to the lynching of foreigners in Louisiana, and says the federal courts should be given jurisdiction in such cases.

The president urges the necessity of a cable to Manila, and invites congress to give the matter consideration.

The year has been marked, says the president, by constant increase to the intimacy of our relations with Mexico, and the magnitude of mutually advantageous interchange. This government has omitted no opportunity to show its strong desire to develop and perpetuate the ties of cordiality now so long happily unbroken.

Samoan affairs are briefly reviewed by the president. He says a satisfactory arrangement was concluded between the governments of Germany and of England, by virtue of which England retired from Samoa in view of compensations in other directions, and both parties renounced to favor of the United States all their rights and claims over and in respect to that portion of the group embracing the islands of Tutuila, Ofoo, Olesengo and Manua. The convention is referred to the senate for its constitutional action thereon.

The president reviews Cuban affairs since the close of the Spanish war. He declares that our pledges to restore order and establish a stable government in the island must be sacredly kept. He says the greatest blessing which can come to Cuba is the restoration of her agricultural and industrial prosperity, which will give employment to idle men and re-establish the pursuits of peace. This is her chief and immediate need.

The resumption of diplomatic relations with the government of Spain is referred to with satisfaction.

The United States minister to Turkey continues, under instructions, to press for a money payment in satisfaction of the just claims for injuries suffered by American citizens in the disorders of several years past and for wrongs done to them by the Ottoman authorities. Some of these claims are of many years' standing. This government is hopeful of a general agreement in this regard.

The dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela regarding the boundary line between Venezuela and British Guiana has been adjusted, thus ending a controversy which has existed for the greater part of the century.

Conventions of reciprocity have been signed during the congressional recess with Great Britain for the respective colonies of British Guiana, Barbadoes, Bermuda, Jamaica and Turks and Caicos islands, and with the republic of Nicaragua. Important reciprocal conventions have also been concluded with France and with the Argentine republic.

Of the work of the peace conference the president says:

The final act of the conference includes conventions upon the amelioration of the laws and customs of war on land, the adaptation to maritime warfare of the principles of the Geneva convention of 1864, and the extension of judicial methods to international cases. The convention for the pacific settlement of international conflicts embodies the leading features of the American plan with such modifications as were rendered necessary by the great diversity of views and interests represented by the delegates. The four titles of the convention provide for the maintenance of general peace; the exercise of good offices and mediation; the formation of committees of inquiry and international arbitration.

The mediation provided for by the convention is purely voluntary and advisory and is intended to avoid any invasion or limitation of the sovereign rights of the adhering states. The commissions of inquiry proposed consist of delegations to be specifically constituted for particular purposes by means of conventions between the contesting parties, having for their object the clear understanding of international differences before resorting to the use of force. The provision for arbitration contemplates the formation of a permanent tribunal before which disputed cases may be brought for settlement by the mutual consent of the litigants in each case.

The president speaks in terms of the highest praises of the work of the volunteers and regulars engaged to war in the Philippines, and recommends that congress grant a medal of honor to those who voluntarily remained in the service.

The operations of the army are fully presented in the report of the secretary of war. I cannot withhold from officers and men, the highest commendation for their soldierly conduct in trying situations, their willing sacrifices for their country and the integrity and ability with which they have performed unusual and difficult duties in our island possessions.

The president says the navy has maintained the spirit and high efficiency which have always characterized that service, and has lost none of the gallantry in heroic action which has signalized its brilliant and glorious past. The nation has equal pride in its early and later achievements. Its habitual readiness for every emergency has won the confidence and admiration of the country. The people are interested in the preparation and prestige of the navy and will justify liberal appropriations for its maintenance and improvement.

Pension affairs are considered briefly by the president, and some changes in the laws and regulations are recommended.

The situation in the Philippines is dealt with at considerable length by the president. He says:

On the 10th of December, 1898, the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain was signed. It provided, among other things, that Spain should cede to the United States the archipelago known as the Philippine islands; that the United States should pay to Spain the sum of $20,000,000, and that the civil rights and the political status of the native inhabitants of the territories thus ceded to the United States should be determined by the congress. The treaty was ratified by the senate on the 6th of February, 1899, and by the government of Spain on the 19th of March following. The ratifications were exchanged on the 11th of April and the treaty publicly proclaimed. On the 2d of March the congress voted the sum contemplated by the treaty and the amount was paid over to the Spanish government on the first of May.

In this manner the Philippines came to the United States. The islands were ceded by the government of Spain, which had been in the undisputed possession of them for centuries.

They were accepted, not merely by our authorized commissioners in Paris under the direction of the executive, but by the constitutional and well considered action of the representatives of the people of the United States in both houses of congress.

I had every reason to believe, and I still believe, that this transfer of sovereignty was in accordance with the wishes and the aspirations of the great mass of the Filipino people. From the earliest moment no opportunity was lost of assuring the people of the island of our ardent desire for their welfare and of the intention of this government to do everything possible to advance their interests. In my order of the 19th of May, 1898, the commander of the military expedition dispatched to the Philippines was instructed to declare that we came not to make war upon the people of that country "nor upon any party or faction among them, but to protect them in their homes, in their employments and in their personal and religious rights." That there should be no doubt as to the paramount authority there, on the 17th of August, it was directed that "there must be no joint occupation with the insurgents;" that the United States must preserve the peace and protect persons and property within the territory occupied by their military and naval forces; that the insurgents and all others must recognize the military occupation and authority of the United States. As early as Dec. 4, before the cession, in anticipation of that event, the commander in Manila was urged to restore peace and tranquility and to undertake the establishment of a beneficent government and should afford the fullest security for life and property.

On the 21st of December, after the treaty was signed, the commander of the forces of occupation was instructed "to announce and proclaim in the most public manner that we come not as invaders and conquerors, but as friends, to protect the natives in their homes, in their employments, and in their personal and religious rights." On the same day, while ordering Gen. Otis to see that the peace should be preserved in Iloilo, he was admonished that "it is the most important that there should be no conflict with the insurgents." On the first day of January, 1899, urgent orders were reiterated that the kindly intentions of this government should in every possible way be communicated to the insurgents.

On the 21st day of January I announced my intention of dispatching to Manila a commission composed of three gentlemen of the highest character and distinction, thoroughly acquainted with the Orient, who, in association with Admiral Dewey, and Maj. Gen. Otis, were instructed to "facilitate the most humane and effective extension of authority thoughout the islands and to secure with the least possible delay the benefits of a wise and generous protection of life and property to the inhabitants."

While the treaty of peace was under consideration in the senate these commissioners set out on their mission of good will and liberation. Their character was sufficient guaranty of the beneficent purpose of which they went, even if they had not borne the positive instructions of this government which made their errand pre-eminently one of peace and friendship.

But before their arrival at Manila the sinister ambition of a few leaders of the Filipinos had created a situation full of embarrassments for us and most grievous in its consequences to themselves. The clear, and impartial preliminary report of the commissioners, which I transmit herewith, gives so lucid and comprehensive a history of the present insurrectionary movement that the story need not be here repeated.

It is enough to say that the claim of the rebel leader that he was promised independence by any officer of the United States in relation for his assistance has no foundation in fact and is categorically denied by the very witnesses who were called to prove it.

The most the insurgent leader hoped for, when he came back to Manila was the liberation of the islands from the Spanish control, which they had been laboring for years without success to throw off. The prompt accomplishment of this work by the American army and navy gave him other ideas, and ambitions and insidious suggestions from various quarters perverted the purposes and intentions with which he had taken up arms.

The rebellion must be put down, civil government cannot be thorougly established until order is restored.

With a devotion and gallantry worthy of its most brilliant history, the army, ably and loyally assisted by the navy, has carried on this unwelcome but most righteous campaign, which richly deserved success. The noble self-sacrifice with which our soldiers and sailors whose terms of service had expired refused to avail themselves of their right to return home as long as they were needed at the front forms one of the brightest pages in our annals. Although their operations have been somewhat interrupted and checked by a rainy season of unusual violence and duration, they have gained ground steadily in every direction and now look forward confidently to a speedy completion of their task.

The unfavorable circumstances connected with an active campaign have not been permitted to interfere with the equally important work of reconstruction. Again I invite your attention of the report of the commissioners, giving interesting and encouraging details of the work already accomplished in the establishment of peace and order and the inauguration of self-governing municipal life in many portions of the archipelago. A notable beginning has been made in the establishment of a government in the island of Negros, which is deserving of special consideration. This was the first island to accept American sovereignty. Its people unreservedly proclaimed allegiance to the United States and adopted a constitution looking to the establishment of a popular government.

The authorities of the Sulu islands have accepted the succession of the United States to the rights of Spain, and our flag floats over that territory.

Concerning the future government of the archipelago the president says:

The future government of the Philippines rests with the congress of the United States. Few graver responsibilities have ever been confided to us. If we accept them in a spirit worthy of our race and our traditions, a great opportunity comes with them.

The islands lie under the shelter of our flag. They are ours by every title of law and equity. They cannot be abandoned. If we desert them we leave them at once to anarchy and finally to barbarism. We fling them, a golden apple of discord, among the rival powers, no one of which could permit another to seize them unquestioned.

Their rich plains and valleys would be the scene of endless strife and bloodshed. The advent of Dewey's fleet in Manila bay, instead of being, as we hoped, the dawn of a new day of freedom and progress, will have been the beginning of an era of misery and violence worse than any which has darkened their unhappy past. The suggestion has been made that we could renounce our authority over the island.

This proposition will not be found, I am sure, worthy of your serious attention. Such an arrangement would involve at the outset a cruel breach of faith.

It would take the peaceable and loyal majority who ask nothing better than to accept our authority at the mercy of the minority of armed insurgents. It would make us responsible for the acts of the insurgent leaders, and give us no power with the task of protecting them against each other and defending them against any foreign power with which they chose to quarrel. In short, it would take from the congress of the United States the power of declaring war and vest that tremendous prerogative in the legal leader of the hour.

It does not seem desirable that I should recommend at this time a specific and final form of government for these islands. When peace shall be restored it will be the duty of congress to construct a plan of government which shall establish and maintain freedom and order and peace, in the Philippines.

Until congress shall make known the formal expression of its will, I shall use the authority vested in me by the constitution and the statutes to uphold the sovereignty of the United States in those distant islands as in all other places where our flag rightfully floats.

I shall put at the disposal of the army and navy all the means which the liberality of congress and the people have provided to cause this unprovoked and wasteful insurrection to cease. If any orders of mine were required to insure the merciful conduct of military and naval operations they would not be lacking; but every step of the progress of the troops has been marked by a humanity which has surprised even the misguided insurgents. The truest kindness to them will be a swift and effective defeat of their present leader.

The hour of victory will be the hour of clemency and reconstruction.

No effort will be spared to build up the waste places desolated by war and by long years of misgovernment. We shall not wait for the end of strife to begin the beneficent work. We shall continue, as we have begun, to open the schools and the churches, to set the courts in operation, to foster industry and trade and agriculture, and in every way in our power to make these people whom providence has brought within our jurisdiction feel that it is their liberty and not our power, their welfare and not our gain, we are seeking to enhance. Our flag has never waved over any community but in blessing. I believe the Filipinos will soon recognize the fact that it has not lost its gift of benediction in its world-wide journey to their shores.

Of Hawaii the president says:

"Some embarrassment in administration has occurred by reason of the peculiar status which the Hawaiian islands at present occupy under the joint resolution of annexation approved July 7, 1898. While by that reason the republic of Hawaii as an independent nation was extinguished, its separate sovereignty destroyed and its property and possessions vested in the United States, yet a complete establishment for its government under our system was not effected.

By the resolution of annexation the president was directed to appoint five commissioners to recommend to congress legislation concerning the islands as they should deem necessary or proper. These commissioners were duly appointed and after a careful investigation and study of the system of laws and government prevailing in the islands and of the conditions existing there they prepared a bill to provide a government under the title of the "Territory of Hawaii." The report of the committee with the bill which they prepared, was transmitted by me to congress on Dec. 6, 1898, but the bill still awaits final action.

The people of these islands are entitled to the benefits and privileges of our constitution, but in the absence of any act of congress providing for federal courts in the island and for a procedure by which appeals, writs of error and other judicial proceedings necessary for the enforcement of civil rights may be prosecuted, they are powerless to secure their enforcement by the judgment of the courts of the United States. It is manifestly important, therefore, that an act shall be presented as speedily as possible erecting these islands into a judicial district, providing for the appointment of a judge and other proper officers and methods of procedure in appellate proceedings, and that the government of this newly acquired territory under the federal constitution shall be fully defined and provided for."

The president says a necessity for immediate legislative relief exists in the Territory of Alaska. The present civil government is fitted only for the administration of affairs to the sparsely inhabited country. The increase of immigration consequent upon the discovery of gold has produced such a condition as calls for more ample facilities for local self-government. The president sees no reason why a more complete form of territorial organization should not be provided.

According to the president the time is ripe for the adoption of a temporary form of government for the island of Porto Rico.

It is desirable, he says, that the government of the island, under the law of belligerent right now maintained through the executive department, should be superseded by an administration entirely civil in its nature.

In conclusion the president says:

"The 14th of December will be the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Washington. For a hundred years the republic has had the priceless advantage of the lofty standard of character and conduct which he bequeathed to the American people. It is an inheritance which time, instead of wasting, continually increases and enriches. We may justly hope that in the years to come the beneficent influence of the Father of His Country may be even more potent for good than in the century which is drawing to a close. I have been glad to learn that in many part of the country the people will fittingly observe this historic anniversary.

Presented to this congress are great opportunities. With them come great responsibilities. The power confided to us increase the weight of our obligation to the people, and we must be profoundly sensitive of them as we contemplate the new and grave problems which confront us. Aiming only at the public good, we cannot err. A right interpretation of the people's will and of duty cannot fail to insure wise measures for the welfare of the islands which have come under the authority of the United States and inure to the common interest and lasting honor of our country. Never has this nation had more abundant cause than during the past year for thankfulness to God for manifold blessings and mercies, for which we make reverent acknowledgment.

MAJ. EDWADS AS GUARDIAN.

Aids a Larimore Lad to Realize a Martial Ambition.

Richard Shoemaker, a Larimore youth, who was under age, had considerable difficulty at Fargo getting into the service of Uncle Sam. He wanted to enlist, and his mother was willing. His stepfather, with whom he was not on the best terms, opposed. Judge Roberts of the county court appointed Maj. Edwards guardian of Shoemaker, and Chairman Barnes of the county commissioners authorized the judge to act without the usual fees. The major gave his consent, and young Shoemaker is now enlisted in the regular army and may get to the Philippines in time to chase a few of the insurgents.

Mayor Johnson of Fargo and President Worst of the agricultural college are in Duluth conferring with the elevator men to raise funds for the publication of the proceedings of the flax convention to be held here Dec. 10. It is intended to publish the speeches and send out 30,000 or 40,000 copies to the farmers on both sides of the valley.

Lieut. Tad Foster surprised his father by wiring of his arrival in San Francisco. He went to the Philippines as quartermaster sergeant of Company B of Fargo in the First North Dakota regiment. After his service there with his home company he was appointed to a lieutenancy in the regulars. A severe attack of malaria laid him out and he was ordered home on sick leave. It is supposed he will come on to Fargo after a short stay at the hospital in San Francisco.

DESPICABLE WORK.

Incendiaries Make Another Effort to Burn St. Peter.

A disastrous fire occurred in St. Peter Saturday evening. The Lampert Lumber company's yard, which carries a stock valued at $15,000, was totally destroyed; also the residence of Mrs. M. M. Stark. It was valued at $2,000. The St. Peter furniture factory was saved by the work of the fire department.

The fire was started by a firebug, as the sheds and lumber were saturated with oil. This is the third attempt at setting fires within a month. The hydrant wrenches were missing from the engine house when the alarm was turned in, and it is supposed they were taken by the firebug to delay getting water to the fire. The entire city was threatened for a time, but at 11 o'clock the flames were under control.

In the Same Pen.

"One of the boys at the hotel put me on to a little poker game," said the dry goods drummer, "and I went around to see what it was like. There were some thirty respectable looking people in the room, and one of them was trying to teach me the value of the cards, when the police broke in and made a clean sweep of everybody. Next morning, when arraigned at the police court, I wanted a lawyer, and there was a general laugh in court as his honor replied:

"I don't know where you will get one. There are nine in town, but all are in the pen with you!"

"It was so," continued the drummer, "and things might have gone hard with us had it not been for the fact that the judge was there, too, but had just stepped out as the raid was made. Nothing was said about it, of course, but he let us off with a fine of $2 each and a lot of fatherly advice."

How He Won His Promotion.

"Mr. Green," said the city editor, "I am pleased to tell you that you are getting along very well in your work. At first I did not hope for much from you. Your vocabulary appeared small and your spelling was very bad, but you have improved much in the last month. I suppose you have been putting in your evenings studying.

The new reporter kicked his left toe against his right heel.

"I'm afraid I ato't," he said.

"Then how do you account for the improvement in your words and spelling?" inquired the city editor, who was a kindly man and hadn't been a city editor long.

"I dunno, unless it's eatin' the alphabet soup they give me up to my boarding house."

Whereupon the new reporter was immediately transferred from the suburban to the joke department.—Detroit Free Press.

Good Name for the Dog.

A boy's fishing rod was fastened on the root of a tree on the river bank, and he was sitting in the sun playing with his dog, idling the time away. He had been fishing all day and caught absolutely nothing.

"Fishing?" inquired the passing man.

"Yes," answered the boy.

"Nice dog you have there; what is his name?"

"'Fish,'" replied the boy.

"Fish? That's a queer name for a dog. What do you call him that for?"

"'Cause he won't bite."

Then the man proceeded on his way.

The Sex of Ships.

The word "ship" is masculine in French, Italian, Spanish and Portuguese, and possesses no sex in Teutonic and Scandinavian. Perhaps it would not be an error to trace the custom of feminizing ships back to the Greeks, who called them by feminine names, probably out of deference to Athene, goddess of the sea. But the English-speaking sailor assigns no such reason. The ship to him is always a lady, even though she be a man-of-war. She possesses a waist, collars, stays, laces, bonnets, ties, ribbons chains watches and dozens of other distinctly feminine attributes.—Collier's Weekly.

Birds of Prey.

"Now, George, to what class of birds does the eagle belong?"

"Birds of prey."

"And the turkey, where does he belong?"

PERISH IN A MINE.

Thirty-two Lives Lost at Carbonado, Wash.

Carbonado, Wash., Dec. 12.—About noon Saturday this coal mining village was stunned with the first report of a terrific subterranean explosion in the mine of the Carbon Hill Coal company, the tunnels of which run for miles under the town. There was an enormous rumbling, smothered sound for a few moments, and then it ceased abruptly.

The people who had been accustomed to gain a livelihood by mining knew at once what this meant and stood around with blanched faces. Apprehensions of some fearful disaster were confirmed in a little while with information that the morning shift in tunnel No. 7 had been caught in an explosion of fire-damp. Seventy-five men were at work in the mine and the meager news conveyed the information that all must have been killed as there was no chance of escape. Rescue parties were immediately organized and put to work.

Sunday's advices, giving later details of the disaster, say:

Stunned by the suddenness of the mine horror the people here seem too dazed for any expression of grief of a demonstrative nature. Thirty-two is the number of dead. As by a miracle two men were rescued at 5 o'clock yesterday morning after suffering an awful night entombed in the dark cavernous chamber of horrors.

Gov. Rogers will conduct a searching examination as to the cause of the explosion. He telegraphed State Mine Inspector Owens, now at Spokane, to attend the inquest and examine witnesses himself. The question of insufficient ventilation of the mine in accordance with the state law will be thoroughly gone into. It has been found impossible to secure an impartial coroner's jury in the mining districts and Coroner Hoskel has gone to Tacoma and will select his jurors there.

The theory of Supt. Davis is that a small pocket of gas was opened, became ignited and caused the terrific explosion of dust which resulted in the damage and loss of life.

The total number of men in the unfortunate shaft was seventy-six, of whom forty-five are alive, having escaped or been rescued.

ROASTED THE COURT.

Irate County Attorney Roasts District Court Judge.

Butte, Mont., Dec. 12.—A sensational and remarkable scene was witnessed in Judge William Clancy's department of the district court, when County Attorney C. P. Connolly made a bitter attack on the court for his action in turning a number of criminals loose under strange and remarkable rules of law established by himself, and from which the state had no appeal. The county attorney roasted him for five minutes, charging him with ignorance and dishonesty, while the judge took it meekly and without making a reply.

Some of the children managed to jump out, but others didn't, and the team was making for a steep precipice at the head of Taylor avenue. This little boy jumped upon the runner of the sled and, grabbing the lines, held to them until the team stopped, which was not more than 100 feet from the precipice.

Miller, S. D., Dec. 12.—While skating Friday Henry Strickler, while buckling on the skates for a young lady, was lassoed with a rope by some boys, and in cutting the rope he accidentally stabbed Willie Tamblyn, inflicting a dangerous wound. Arrests followed.

WORK OF CONGRESS

Washington, Dec. 6.—After an interesting debate of three hours yesterday by a vote of 302 to 30 the house adopted the resolution offered by Mr. Taylor of Ohio for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the charges against Brigham H. Roberts, the Mormon representative-elect from Utah. Previously the house had rejected a substitute resolution offered by Mr. Richardson, the leader of the minority, to allow Mr. Roberts to be sworn in and to send the whole case to the judiciary committee. This substitute resolution, however, by no means commanded the full Democratic strength. Only 57 members voted for it. Of the 30 who voted against the Taylor resolution all were Democrats except Mr. Loud of California, Rep., and Mr. Newlands of Nevada, Silverite. By the terms of the resolution Mr. Roberts is not only excluded from all participation in the proceedings of the house until the committee reports and the house passes upon his case, but he is denied a seat in the hall. Whether this will be interpreted to deny him admission within the chamber pending the disposition of his case is yet to be decided.

The reading of the president's message was completely overshadowed by the dramatic proceedings which resulted in the action of the house. The galleries were thronged with spectators, mostly women, who sat patiently through the three weary hours that preceded the debate and then waited on three hours more until it was concluded. The most remarkable feature of the debate was the fact that Mr. Roberts' presentation of his own case, which lasted almost an hour, became so impressive that he won the sympathies of many in the galleries, and he was several times showered with applause. It was apparent he realized the house was overwhelmingly against him, and at times he spoke fiercely and defiantly. Mr. Taylor conducted the case upon his side. Mr. Richardson championed his resolution. During the debate Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio rose to indignantly repel an insinuation of Mr. Roberts that the president had knowingly appointed men guilty of polygamy to federal office in Utah.

In the Senate.

Yesterday's session of the senate lasted two hours and forty minutes, practically the entire time being consumed in the reading of the president's message. The reading was largely perfunctory, few senators according it any attention.

The announcement of the death of Senator-elect Munro Hayward of Nebraska was received by the senate with sincere regret. Although he was not officially a member of the body he was well known to many of the senators and by them was held in high regard. At the conclusion of the reading of the message the senate adopted resolutions of regret presented by Senator Thurston of Nebraska, and as a mark of respect adjourned immediately.

Washington, Dec. 7.—Nearly 800 bills and joint resolutions, several important concurrent resolutions and petitions, numbering hundreds, were presented to the senate yesterday. A majority of the bills were old stagers. A few were of a national interest and importance.

Mr. Aldrich had the honor of introducing the first measure in the senate. It was the financial bill drawn up by the senate committee on finance, of which Mr. Aldrich is chairman, and probably was the most important measure introduced during the day.

Resolutions were offered providing for an investigation by the judiciary committee of all phases of polygamy recently presented in connection with what is known as the Roberts case; expressing the sympathy of the senate for the Boers in their war with Great Britain, and declaring that Senator N. B. Scott of West Virginia is not entitled to a seat in the senate.

Mr. Harris, Pop., Kan., was appointed a temporary member of the committee on privileges and elections. The appointment is important and significant because the committee has under consideration the Quay, Clark and Scott contests.

Washington, Dec. 8. — The session of the house lasted only half an hour yesterday. Mr. Overstreet (Ind.), in charge of the finance bill, attempted to reach an agreement for its consideration next week, but Mr. Richardson, on behalf of the minority, rejected all proposals on the ground that a bill so important as this should go through the regular channels. The speaker thereupon appointed a committee on rules which is to include himself, Mr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania, Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio, Mr. Richardson of Tennessee and Mr. Bailey of Texas. They will hold a meeting to-day and decide upon a rule for the limits of the debate which undoubtedly will consume the whole of next week.

Mr. Roberts, the Mormon representative, despite the adoption of the Taylor resolution, which in terms deprives him of his seat during the pendency of his case in committee, was in the hall throughout the session and occupied the seat be selected on Monday.

In the Senate.

Routine proceedings of the senate yesterday were enlivened by a colloquy between Mr. Chandler of New Hampshire and Mr. Hale of Maine over a bill introduced by the former to promote athletic sports at the military academy at West Point and the naval academy at Annapolis. Both senators became facetious and at times sarcastic over the growth of athletics at the American colleges, and Mr. Chandler advanced the proposition that the cultivation of such sports as football and similar sports at the government academies ought to be given the sanction of law. The senate will hold no farther sessions until Monday.

Washington, Dec. 9. — The house adopted a special order for the consideration of the currency bill, beginning Monday. The general debate will continue until Friday; on Saturday amendments may be offered under the five-minute rule, and on the following Monday the vote will be taken. The Democrats, Populists and Silverites presented a solid front against the adoption of the resolutions and every Republican voted for it. Mr. Richardson, leader of the minority, taunted the majority leaders at the change of front in coming out flat-footedly for the gold standard, but Mr. Grosvenor and Mr. Cannon good naturedly replied that they had learned something with advancing years. The former said the Democratic party was the only living demonstration of the survival of a great organization which refused to learn anything.

As a rule, when a man has greatness thrust upon him it doesn't take him very long to get rid of it.

"BLOODY HANDS"

DECLARED OF THE ADMINISTRATION, BY ANTI-IMPERIALISTS.

Their League Launched in Minnesota. Other Points of National Politics—St. Paul Hustlers Bring the Republican National League Here, to Add to the Campaign Fireworks—State Political Reasons—Board of Appeal Results. Making Ready by the Reform Forces For St. Paul's Redemption—Echoes of Trust Prosperity—Note and Comment of the Past Week.

Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, Dec. 18, 1899.

"Look at your hands when blood is shed
For lust of land or gold or fame,
And if you find them dripping red
Think not the patriot's honored name
Will cleanse your guilt or purge your shame—
Look at your hands!"

The Minnesota anti-Imperialists have opened their campaign, and the Minneapolis meeting was one of the most interesting, as well as remarkable ever held in that city of important political events. There is not room for even a brief summary of programme and events, but the most striking feature was the courageous spirit shown, in the face of the contumely and opprobrium which had been cast on the movement by the subservient monopolistic press. The latter has preserved an Otis censorship, and no detailed, accurate or even fair report was made by a single Twin City daily.

The non-partisan character of the programme was shown in the fact that all those participating, with a single exception, supported McKinley in 1896. The exception was Lieutenant Martin E. Tew, of the Thirteenth, who earned his right to speak, by his own blood shed in McKinley's unholy war.

Among the proofs of our "criminal aggression" against the Filipinos, absolutely unquestioned, are the following:

The Filipinos had an organized insurrectionary government more than a year before the Cuban war broke out. Aguinaldo, when brought to Manila for the purpose, turned this into an active ally of the Americans and had cleared all Luzon of Spanish, up to Manila, by the time of the arrival of the first American troops. Aguinaldo followed Dewey's and our generals' suggestions in all his movements, our Consul "drawing up the very proclamation to his people." Instead of being a bribe-taker, as insinuated by Mr. McKinley, he spent the Spanish gold given him for arms for his men. Instead of making war (or "rebellion") on the Americans, an American fired the first shot, the strained relations leading thereto being caused by the McKinley proclamation of sovereignty, in the face of implied or actually promised independence, on Dec. 21, a month before the treaty with Spain was confirmed, which gave us such sovereignty.

Each and every proposition above and much more, was proven absolutely, by the official, governmental records. Our allies, men who had struggled for years for independence, and nearly won it—this liberty loving people, proven by Dewey's own words to be better qualified for independence than the Cubans, are shot into subjection, and taken by conquest, by the great American power! No wonder awakened American consciences bring the cry of shame, shame!

And no wonder the heart of the regenerated Democracy beats responsive.

Governor Lind's connection with the meeting was as a mute but deeply interested spectator. The audience was set wild by the reference of one of the speakers to the governor's sentiment that the volunteer soldier was unfit for the purposes of conquest since he "carries a conscience as well as a gun." This disclosed the governor's presence, and hence his brief speech. That the "U" boys are all anti was shown by the fact that the real "Ski U Mah" was lustily given.

The Jackson Day Bryan banquet, Jan. 10, is the great political event to usher in the new year and century. The intention is to have 2,000 present to meet our great chieftain, who is now taking a short vacation in Texas. The virtual opening of the 1900 campaign, this will be an event that no prominent member of the reform forces can afford to resist. While it is to be under Democratic auspices, all allies will be welcome. Address William Banquet Baldwin, Minneapolis, for particulars.

And speaking of a Twin City evening paper's proneness to use the snake, the "copperhead," in political cartoons, does it come from the frequency of finding the serpent in the foot gear?

And the world do also move, do it not, when Manitoba votes for public ownership?

The political house cleaning promised for St. Paul next spring is foreshadowed by the shameful misrule in the comptroller's office. Comptroller McCardy had held the office so long and had been treated with such courtesy (?) by the Republican public examiner, that when Public Examiner Pope sent a deputy to examine the records of the City of St. Paul, and the assistant, Edward Ekman, found some transactions that seemed to him in violation of the charter, McCardy refused to furnish an explanation which was politely asked by the examiner. The examiner's office went on, and now the comptroller is not only floundering about in a sea of inconsistent explanations, to city employes who had to go six weeks without their salaries, but to his contemporaries in municipal office, who not only fear the political effect of the recent disclosures, but are chagrined at the way the comptroller has concealed the true state of city finances from them all these years.

Clerk of Court Dar Reese and State Printer Whitney scored for Minnesota and the Twin Cities, by securing the convention of the League of Republican clubs. It will of course add to the fireworks of the campaign, and stimulate the Reform forces to a brighter and more penetrating glare.

And, speaking of campaigns, they do say that the inspiration of the St. Paul Dispatch to redoubled meanness, is Senator Nelson's agreement that its editor shall be Surveyor General. How this will stimulate the old guard.

All reports agree that the boards of grain appeals are proving of great benefit to the state grain interests. The boards, owing to the reform majorities of each, are thoroughly in sympathy with the lofty purpose of the administration.

The State Dairymen's association, in annual session, passed very cordial approval of the dairy department as conducted by Commissioner Bowler.

Another Republican governor has been installed in Kentucky, but under such mountains of proof of violations of the election laws, which, however, the canvassing board was powerless to go into, that there is little doubt that in the contests which will follow, Goebel will be seated. What do those "Democrats" who aided the Republicans think of their job, anyhow?

Of course if it was Democracy or Populism that was disturbing business as is being done by the financial bill, Rome would howl all along her seven hills.

The Reform forces of all shades and connection rejoice that Governor Poynter of Nebraska sends Senator Allen back to the senate in the Hayward vacancy. He will be a great power in the pending struggles, especially on the banking bill. Mr. Bryan absolutely refused the appointment. Now for a fusion legislature, and the return of a Democrat to sit with Allen, when, with Bryan in the White House, Nebraska will be well provided for.

A British general says that he was led to defeat by treacherous guides. Rather was it the hand of a just God.

This is an excellent time, while England is busy, for our Canadian brethren across the border to strike for nationality, and Ireland for liberty. What say our near neighbors, and what the brave sons of the Emerald Isle?

With the ticket McKinley and Root, the goppite battle cry will be "Root, hog or die." And the G. O. P. will both root and die.

The bill by which the money power is enforcing its mortgage on the Republican majority of congress, will simply make every bond, greenback and treasury note of whatever present character, every private debt, all outstanding public debt, however contracted for, payable in gold coin! The effect will be, since most of these are now payable optionally in gold or silver, to unjustly add hundreds of millions of dollars to the wealth of bondholders and creditors, which amount will come from debtors and taxpayers!

The last was a billion dollar congress. The present is a bankers' and bondholders' congress.

Bend down your backs, American toilers, and let the bondholder and the soldier get on.

The call for a national anti-trust conference is out, for Lincoln's birthday, Feb. 12, Chicago. Minnesota is well represented on the official call, which embraces patriotic men from all parts of the Union. This promises to be as great a movement as the Anti-Imperialist organization, now at work all over the country. This, like the other movement is strictly non partisan.

Menage of Northwestern Guaranty Loan fame goes Scott free, so that Director Eustis, who also ran, has been the only official of that institution to meet with condemnation.

And, speaking of Menage, et al, and then again of Sulu's sultan, Brigham H. Roberts and others—there's the British owner of one of the Twin City afternoon dailies. 'Nuff said.

The suggestion originally made by the Martin County Sentinel that Judge Severance be the candidate of the Reform forces for congress in the Mankato district, has met with a most cordial response. There is believed to be no possible doubt but that Judge Severance, if he can be persuaded to accept the call, can skin the Schoolmaster to a finish.

Falling stocks, lower produce, higher Wall street interest, Secretary Gouge prepaying interest, large interest bid for deposits in the tightening money market, gold at the export figure, Canadian gold being withdrawn from New York for loan abroad, coal mine strikes in Iowa, newspaper suspensions in St. Louis from strikes; and locally, the cutting off of stories from projected blocks, cheaper wages and fewer jobs for laborers, $5 less per month for "lumber jacks," etc., etc., are among the many pointers of trust prosperity.

Goppite comment on the recurrence of Washington's death anniversary, is very chilly, in contemplating anything Washingtonian connected with recent events. Even his warning against "entangling foreign alliances," strikes all McKinleyites below the belt.

Such, like the Minneapolis Journal, can only claim that the country has outgrown its Washingtons, Jeffersons and Lincolns, and such puerile documents as the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and such doctrine as Monroe's. G. S. C.

LIVES IN MEMORY

CENTENNIAL OF WASHINGTON'S DEATH COMMEMORATED.

Mount Vernon the Scene of Beautiful, Impressive and Appropriate Ceremonies—Vast Concourse of Masons Representing Every Jurisdiction in the United States and a Few From Foreign Countries Participate in the Solemn and Beautiful Ceremonies of the Masonic Fraternity — Eloquent Tribute by President McKinley.

Washington, Dec. 16.—With solemn pomp and circumstance, with ceremonies, beautiful, impressive and appropriate, in the presence of a distinguished assemblage and in the full splendor of ideal autumn weather, the centennial of the death of George Washington was commemorated yesterday at Mount Vernon. That Mount Vernon should have been selected as the scene of the exercises was peculiarly fitting. There it was that the happiest incidents of Washington's life occurred. In other parts he endured his trials, on other fields he won his triumphs, but there, surrounded by those whom he loved best, were spent the restful, quiet, studious hours of his life. There it was, too, that he sickened and died; and there all that was mortal of him was laid to eternal rest in a mausoleum, overlooking a broad sweep of the picturesque Potomac.

The ceremonies were elaborately planned and successfully carried to a conclusion. They were conducted by the Masonic fraternity and later by the Red Men of the United States. Charge of the Masonic ceremonies, incident to the commemoration, was in the hands of the Masons of Virginia. It belonged in the Old Dominion that Washington was obligated as a Master Mason and there that he participated enthusiastically in Masonic work and observances. The officers of the grand lodge of Virginia and the membership of Fredericksburg lodge, in which Washington and of Alexandria-Washington lodge, over which he presided as worshipful master, had the chief part in the duty of seeing that the observances were appropriate. That that duty was well performed was evidenced by the solemnity and beauty of the ceremonies and by the vast concourse of Masons present. Members were in attendance from all parts of the country and almost every jurisdiction in America and a few from foreign countries were represented by some of their grand officers and members.

Was Made a Mason,

The visiting Masons, many accompanied by the ladies of their families, congregated in Washington and were escorted by the Masonic bodies of the District of Columbia, headed by the grand lodge of the district, made the pilgrimage to Mount Vernon by boat. The Virginia Masons assembled at Alexandria and thence, escorted by Fredericksburg lodge and Alexandria lodges, in a body proceeded to Mount Vernon, also by boat.

At 10 o'clock President McKinley, himself an enthusiastic Mason, accompanied by Secretary of State Hay, Secretary of the Treasury Gage, Secretary of the Navy Long, Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock, Secretary of Agriculture Wilson and Postmaster General Smith, of the cabinet; Assistant Secretary of the Navy Allen, Maj. Gen. Miles, Adjt. Gen. Corbin, Secretary Porter, Assistant Secretary Cortelyou, Maj. John A. Johnson and Senator W. A. Clark of Montana; past grand master of his state, left Washington on a special electric train for Mount Vernon, arriving there at 11 o'clock.

Greeted the President.

The presidential party was greeted by Grand Master Duke of Virginia and by him escorted to the mansion. It was nearly an hour and a half afterward before all of the steamers bearing Masonic bodies arrived. After the president and his cabinet had reviewed them from a platform on the east front of the mansion a procession was formed and moved, as on the day of Gen. Washington's funeral, Dec. 18, 1799, to the old vault where the remains were first deposited. There, in the immediate presence of the grand officers of the various states and the assembled Masons, solemn funeral rites were conducted. After music Grand Master A. A. Burnard of Colorado delivered an address on the life and work of Washington, laying particular stress upon his Masonic life and accomplishments. The procession re-formed and moved, then to the tomb where the remains of Washington and those of his family lie now. The tomb was magnificently decorated with flags and festoons of evergreens and flowers. Here the beautiful and impressive, comprehensive Masonic ceremonies were conducted. The grand masters of the thirteen original states formed in line facing the representatives of the other jurisdictions, the grand lodge of Virginia at the head, the two lines facing the tomb of Washington. Prayer was then offered. Then the grand master of Virginia called upon each of the jurisdictions of the thirteen original states, the jurisdictions of the other states, and those of Canada, Belgium and Nova Scotia for messages sent by them, and all responded. Then the grand master of the District of Columbia deposited within the tomb the lambskin apron as a token of innocence; the grand master of Missouri deposited the white glove as a token of friendship and the grand master of California deposited the evergreen as an emblem of the Masonic faith in the resurrection of the body and the immortality of the soul.

Joining Hands.

Scores of beautiful wreaths and bunches of evergreens were then deposited within the tomb, one of the most beautiful tokens, an immense wreath of ivy, immortelles and acacia blossoms, being offered by President McKinley. The procession returned to the east front of the mansion, where President McKinley, introduced by Grand Master Brooke, delivered an eloquent oration as his tribute to Washington. The president was interrupted frequently by applause, and at the close of his oration he was cheered heartily. The exercises at the mansion were concluded with a benediction pronounced by Brother Ed H. Calisch, rabbi of Beth Ahaba synagogue, of Richmond, Va.

Observed by Patriotic Societies.

Washington, Dec. 15.—George Washington memorial services were held yesterday afternoon at the Church of the Epiphany, under the auspices of the patriotic societies of the District of Columbia. The church was crowded. The Episcopal form of service was conducted jointly by the Sons of the American Revolution, Colonial Dames, Colonial Wars, Sons of the Revolution, Daughters of the Revolution, Daughters of the American Revolution and the Society of the War of 1812. The bishop of Washington officiated, assisted by the rector of the church and others. Features of the exercises were a special thanksgiving, commemorative of Washington, the singing of Kipling's recessional and an address by Assistant Secretary of State David J. Hill.

TAKEN BY BULLER.

Reported to Have Captured 10,000 Boers.

London, Dec. 16.—A special dispatch from Pietermaritzburg says Generals Buller and Clery have entered Ladysmith and have captured 10,000 Boers.

The war office is still without news from Ladysmith other than that already published. The general belief is that the large Boer forces Lord Methuen encountered at Magersfontein were partly drawn from Natal and that Gen. Buller will strike a blow before they have time to return.

The newspapers are calling upon the government to employ the Canarders as well as the White Star liners as transports, seeing the urgent need of getting men to the Cape as speedily as possible. Forty thousand men could still be sent from England without calling upon the militia for service. That body contains 100,000, and from this body 20,000 carefully selected could be spared for South Africa. Moreover the colonies are again offering assistance. The greatest need, therefore is speedy transports.

Sir Charles Warren, who arrived at Cape Town yesterday, will possibly join Lord Methuen and take command of the combined forces. A Chronicle's Modder River dispatch, which is at variance with all other accounts, reports Lord Methuen's force as retiring on Modder River as the result of more artillery firing during the day. Orders have been issued at Woolwich to prepare another siege train to go out with the Seventh division.

Boer Loss Exceeds 700.

Modder River, Dec. 16.—Ambulances started early yesterday morning under a flag of truce to collect the wounded and bury the dead who fell at Magersfontein. Brig. Gen. Wauchope, who led the Highland brigade, was found dead near the trenches, shot in the chest and thigh. A few wounded were found near the trenches. Several wounded Boers were taken to the British hospital. The side of the hill and the immediate neighborhood of the Boer trenches showed dead bodies all about. One wounded Boer informed a correspondent of the Associated Press that their loss was terrible. The whole Scandinavian corps was destroyed. Judging from information gathered from the Boer wounded and from prisoners taken at different parts of the field the Boer loss must exceed 700. The destruction wrought by the navy guns was enormous. Word was passed along the Boer lines to prepare to retreat at nightfall. All confess that it was their greatest loss during the war. The British troops have returned to Modder River owing to the lack of water near the position held yesterday.

Boers Forced Back.

London, Dec. 16.—The war office has received the following from Gen. Forestier-Walker at Cape Town: "Gen. French wires, under date of Dec. 13, reporting a skirmish at 4 o'clock in the morning with 1,800 Boers who were advancing southward toward Naauwpoort. The skirmishing continued all the morning, the Boers fighting on a front of fourteen miles. The enemy retired with a loss of forty killed and wounded. Our casualties were one killed, seven wounded, including one officer, and two missing."

Bad Effect on Colonists.

London, Dec. 16.—"Methuen's check, following Gatacre's reverse," says the Cape Town correspondent of the Daily News, "has had a bad effect upon the colonists, which are by no means a growling body. The reverses have stirred up the Dutch. Many secret meetings have been held. The imperial authorities are arming the loyal farmers in the Stutterheim and Kerroad districts."

Churchill Escapes.

Lourenzo Marques, Dec. 16. — Winston Churchill, the newspaper correspondent and former officer of the Fourth hussars who was captured at the time of the armored train disaster near Estcourt, Nov. 16, has escaped from Pretoria.

BISHOP OF LONDON.

Appointment Formally Announced by the Pope.

Rome, Dec. 16. — At the consistory held yesterday the pope formally announced the appointment of a number of bishops, including that of Mgr. Fergus McEvay to the bishopric of London, Ont., which he has been occupying since August last.

Drank Too Much Whisky.

Philadelphia, Dec. 16.—Mamie Bastard, aged four years, drank more than a pint of whisky and died after remaining unconscious for about three hours. The spirits had been purchased by the baby's father for medicinal use. How a child could manage to swallow a pint of whisky is a mystery to the physicians.

Praise for Gen. Wood.

Santiago, Cuba, Dec. 16.—The news of the appointment of Maj. Gen. Wood as governor of Cuba was received here with enthusiasm. Even the most bitter Cuban nationalists agree in praising him as a soldier and an administrator.

Swiss President.

Berne, Dec. 16.—The federal assembly has elected Walther Hauser, Radical, of Wadenswell, Zurich, to be president of Switzerland for 1900. He was the vice president during 1899.

BRITISH AROUSED

NOW REALIZE THE MAGNITUDE OF THE TASK BEFORE THEM.

Baron Roberts Ordered to South Africa as Commander-in-Chief, With Lord Kitchener as Chief-of-Staff—Buller Will Be Kept Busy in Natal—All the Remaining Portions of the Army Reserve Called Out—Militia Battalions Will Be Allowed to Volunteer for Service Outside of the Kingdom—Strong Force of Volunteers Will Be Employed.

London, Dec. 19. — Shortly before midnight the following notice was posted at the war office:

"As the campaign in Natal, in the opinion of her majesty's government, is likely to require the presence and undivided attention of Gen. Sir Redvers Buller, it has been decided to send Baron Roberts of Kandahar and Waterford as commander-in-chief in South Africa, with Lord Kitchener as chief of staff."

The war office has also issued the following announcement:

"Acting upon the advice of the military authorities her majesty's government has approved the following measures: 'All the remaining portions of the army reserve, including Section D, are called out. The Seventh division, which is being mobilized, will proceed to South Africa without delay. The commander-in-chief in South Africa has been authorized to continue to raise, at his discretion, local troops, mounted. Nine battalions of militia in addition to two battalions which have already volunteered for service at Malta and one for service in the Channel Islands, will be allowed to volunteer for service outside the United Kingdom; and an equivalent number of militia battalions will be embodied for service at home. A strong force of volunteers, selected from the Yeomanry regiments, will be formed for service in South Africa. Arrangements are being made and will shortly be announced for the employment in South Africa of a strong contingent of carefully selected volunteers. The patriotic offers which are being received from the colonies will, so far as possible, be accepted, preference being given to offers of mounted contingents.'"

"Black Week" Wakes Them Up.

London, Dec. 18.—Not for years before has the queen decided to spend Christmas away from Osborne. Her decision to remain at Windsor in touch with the cabinet is a measure of the gravity of the crisis and of the anxiety her majesty feels for the welfare of the country. She is nevertheless in fair health.

The queen's graceful act in presenting a flag to the American hospital ship Maine is highly appreciated by her own people as well as by the Americans in London, and the morning papers express the hope that the incident means something more than a pretty ceremony.

"Black week," as last week is now universally called, has evidently aroused the government and the war office to a full sense of their responsibility and of the magnitude of the task before them. The papers unanimously applaud this awakening, despite the fact that they recognize that the heroic measures now decided upon savor rather of weakness than of strength. Rumor has it that the question of expense has really been at the bottom of the half-hearted measures hitherto adopted, and it is not unlikely that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, chancellor of the exchequer, and other members of the cabinet will resign. It was high time that something very energetic was done. The British losses in killed, wounded, prisoners and missing throughout the campaign now reach the enormous total of 7,630.

The tragic circumstances of the appointment of Lord Roberts almost simultaneously with the announcement of the death of his promising son excites deepest public sympathy.

Gen. Warren Arrives at Cape Town.

London, Dec. 19. — Lieut. Gen. Sir Charles Warren, commanding the Fifth division of the First army corps, has arrived at Cape Town. It is understood that he will proceed to Port Elizabeth. No further news has been received regarding the battle at the Tugela river. The latest accounts regarding the battle at Magersfontein show that the retirement of the British troops was executed with the greatest coolness and order under a heavy Boer artillery fire on Tuesday. Mafeking was safe on Dec. 10 and Col. Baden-Powell, the British commander there, is still actively pushing out his defenses. The other beleaguered garrisons and positions are still holding out.

Result of British Reverses.

Storkstrom, Dec. 19.—As a result of the British reverses the whole country northward is in rebellion. The natives there, as well as those in Basutoland, are said to be much disturbed and losing heart respecting the strength of the British.

Buller's Losses.

London, Dec. 19—Gen. Buller reports to the war office that his losses in the recent engagement were: Killed, 82; wounded, 667; missing, 348; total, 1,097.

A PHILADELPHIA REQUEST.

It would Be the Republican National Committee's Headquarters.

Philadelphia, Dec. 19.—The members of the citizens' committee, whose efforts resulted in the selection of this city for the Republican national convention, have started a movement to have the Republican national committee make this city its headquarters. They are urging that if the national committee will select this city as its headquarters they will make every endeavor to lighten its running expenses.

A writer in the Review of Reviews gives this advice: "If you have a farm, keep it; if not, get one; for the time may come when the population of this country will be largely divided into monopolists, dependents and farmers; and the farmer will be the most independent of all men, and will be the saving power of our institutions." We venture to say that it will not depend so much upon the farm as upon the farmer.

President McKinley, in speaking at a town in South Dakota a few weeks ago, remarked that the little folks now had a good deal of geography to learn that he did not have when a boy. This is significantly true. Africa, in the old geographies, took up little space; it was the dark continent. Australia is also a comparatively new chapter. So is a great part of the United States. South Dakota, where the president spoke, was a wilderness in 1843, the year in which he was born, and he was 14 years old before its first permanent settlement, at Sioux Falls, was started.

A valuable but little-known daily newspaper is published in Washington by the bureau of foreign commerce, and is entitled "Advance Sheet of the Consular Reports." It has reached its five hundredth number. In its pages are found many interesting glimpses of life in foreign lands, and the range of its matter is wide, as the following list of articles in a single issue shows: "American Fruit in Norway," "Sugar in Spain," "Heating and Cooking Stoves in Uruguay," "Coffee in Jamaica," "Conversion of Mexican Debt," and "Direct Steamship Connection with Syria." These papers are extracts from consular reports. They are of prime interest to business men, but nearly every issue contains some paragraphs which are curious, amusing or novel. This is true of many other government publications, but this daily is exceptionally favored.

About ten years ago there sprung up among the metropolitan papers a rivalry that led to some interesting as well as awful developments. Though the Sunday issues were chiefly effected, the changes did not apply to them alone. It seemed to be—and it was—the effort of some publishers to give in the columns of their daily issues not only the news of the world, but illustrations of the leading events, and pictures of those who took part in them, with literature of all kinds, and its criticism thrown in as a side dish. From a dozen, the Sunday issues ran up to twenty, forty, sixty, and sometimes to a hundred pages. Very often—it might almost be said generally—the quantity was offset by a dilution of the quality, and it became a puzzle to discover who read the mass of material the presses turned out every Saturday. The reaction has been noted for some time. Pictures have disappeared altogether from the columns of the leading papers, not only in New York, but in other great cities. There has been a return to the older idea that a daily newspaper has an ample field for all its energies in seeking to give to clean-minded readers all the clean news of the day. With the tremendous expansion of the news service of the press—an expansion that has brought the ends of the earth together, it may be said—this is a task that can give the greatest energy and enterprise full employment, and the execution of which can secure to the intelligent readers of a daily paper the most profitable satisfaction.

"TURKEY ACTRESS"

A pretty little Thespian said to me the other day:

"I must look out for a turkey job for Christmas."

"Why, what do you mean?" I queried.

"What, haven't you heard of 'turkey actors'?"

"I know plenty of actors who are geese, and a few actresses who are ducks," was the reply.

"Oh, dear, no! Turkey actors are those who only get an engagement for Thanksgiving or Christmas or New Year's."

"And how long can they live on that?"

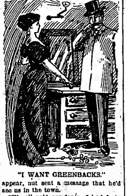
"Well, it's better than nothing. I engaged for twenty dollars and expenses last Christmas to play Alida Bloodgood in 'The Streets of New York.' Oh, what an experience!"

"Come in here," quoth I, "and over a brimming bumper of chocolate or a wild wassail of tea, tell me all."

And as we lunched together she told me this:

"They sent for me from a dramatic agency, said the money was sure and almost any dresses would do. Alida is the daughter of a banker in the play, but they said that in the town where we were to perform on Christmas night they wouldn't know the difference. However, I fixed up three changes without spending a cent.

"We were all to meet the manager at the ferry to Jersey City. He didn't appear, but sent a message that he'd see us in the town.



"I WANT GREENBACKS."

"We all paid our fares—I had forty cents left—and reached the place pretty well disgusted.

"At the hotel they viewed us suspiciously, as we had no trunks, and there we learned that the matinee had been abandoned, no seats having been sold.

"We had a rehearsal instead, and it was six o'clock before I staggered into the hotel, only to learn that we couldn't have any supper unless we paid for it individually.

"I sent word to our manager that I had no money and shouldn't play without my supper.

"This brought him to my door in a hurry. He knocked, and entered with a surprised air.

"'Why, my dear,' he said, 'there's some mistake.'

"'I think there is,' I replied, spiritedly. 'If I don't have any supper I don't go on.'

"'Why, that'll be all right, my dear. We'll go out together, and you shall have supper with me.'

"And he laid his arm affectionately on my shoulder.

"I gave him a good push, and he fell up against the door. Oh, how angry he was!

"'What are you doing?' he shouted.

"'Rehearsing you in the character of a gentleman,' said I, 'and you won't suit.'

"He went out and banged the door, but a very nice supper came up to me later. Still I remembered the gleam of hate in his eyes and was on my guard.

"We had a very good house that night and felt a little encouraged. As I stood looking out of the peephole in the curtain, the property boy brushed against me.

"'Beg pardon,' he said, hurriedly, 'but I've been workin' so hard an' nothin' to eat so that I'm as weak as a rat. I've had no supper.'

"'You shouldn't go without your supper,' I said.

"'I ain't got the price.'

"I gave him half of my forty cents.

"'Go out and get a cup of coffee and a sandwich.'

"He took the money with a grateful look and disappeared.

"The play went on. So did he, for that matter, for he played two parts, poor little soul!

"At the end of the third act he knocked at my dressing room door.

"'Say, you're Miss Hallett, ain't yer?'

"'Yes.'

"'Well, I got somethin' I want to say to yer on the quiet.'

"I finished dressing and came out.

"'You certainly was good to me,' he said with a grin, 'an' now it's turn about.'

"'What do you mean?'

"'Just this. The boss—the manager, I mean—just sent me up to the hotel to get five dollars changed into pennies an' nickels an' ten cent pieces.'

"'Well, what has that to do with me?'

"'Plenty! He's a-makin' up salaries out front in the office, an' he's a-laughin' with another feller. He's going to pay you your salary in pennies an' nickels an' dimes.'

"'I don't believe it.'

"'Well, you can. I heard him tell the other feller, an' they think it's a great joke. He's down on you for some reason or other. Don't gimme away.'

"And so he disappeared again.

"So this was the manager's contemptible revenge.

"Twenty dollars in nickels and pennies!

"I called the stage manager.

"'Don't ring up the curtain, Mr. Clarke,' I said, 'for I shan't go on until I get my salary.'

"'But, my dear what I said,' was my rejoinder, as I went back to my dressing room.

"I thought of Patti refusing to put on her slippers until poor old Mapleson had produced $4,000—how she got two thousand, simply put on one slipper and waited.

"Heavens! Suppose they had paid her in nickels and pennies!

"The manager came dashing back.

"'What's this, Miss Hallett?'

"'I want my salary.'

"'Salaries will be paid immediately after the performance.'

"'Mine must be paid now or the performance will not be finished.'

"In awkward position he drew a newspaper package from his overcoat pocket. It seemed heavy, and I heard the clink of coin.

"'Awful lot of silver tonight,' he said, as he handed me the parcel.

"I dropped it scornfully.

"'I want greenbacks,' I said firmly.

"'But I haven't——'

"'Greenbacks or no performance,' I repeated calmly.

"You should have seen his face!

"You should have seen the property boy contorting himself with delight behind a 'set house.'

"With the smothered curse of the melodrama the manager picked up the scattered coins and marched away. A twenty-dollar bill came back to me in a few moments and the play ended in orthodox fashion.

"But what do you think of that for meanness?"

"I'm speechless," said I. "Encore the oolong, please! I must steady my nerves!"

CHRISTMAS VERSES.
(For Little Folks.)

If I Were He, and He Was Me.

If I were only Santa Claus,
And Santa Claus was me,
I'd show to him just what a good Old Santa I'd be.
I'd always bring the kind of toys
And story books for him;
I'd find his stocking ev'ry year,
And fill it to the brim.
This year I'd bring a book or so
On how we conquered Spain,
Or how a boy pursued his foe
Across the Klondyke plain.
And boxing gloves—and, say, I guess
A pistol would be fine

IF I WERE HE.

To Klondyke with. And then—oh, yes,
A wheel for ninety-nine.
I'd bring a leather suit and hat—
The kind that cowboys wear.
Of bowie knives and things like that
He'd have a lot to spare.
I'd fill his stocking then with all
The candy it would hold,
And where the packages were small
I'd fill in round with gold.
And when they saw how good I was,
How happy folks would be
If I were only Santa Claus
And Santa Claus was me.

Little Sister's Dilemma.

Now, I like things to run with, and things to swing and pound,
And you like dolls and dishes and things for sitting 'round;
And every year there's books for you,
for me a jolly game,
Just how did Santa Claus find out we didn't want the same?

It isn't till we're sound asleep that
Santa Claus begins,
And wouldn't look very diff'rent with the blankets on our chins;

I WONDER HOW IT HAPPENS?

There's nothing to explain it on our stockings when they're fixed.
I wonder how it happens that he never gets us mixed!

Those Christmas "C. O. D's."

He was an active parcel boy.
From house to house he'd range,
And whatsoe'er your bill might be
He always "had the change."
But cruel, coarse and changeless boys
His efforts did deride,
Until, from utter loneliness,
The little fellow died!

The Christmas Rose

It was Christmas eve. The air was frosty. Men's boot heels made the snow creak under them as they passed with quick tread. There was a rumble of carriage wheels, a rapid, hurrying tread of thousands of feet in the crowded thoroughfare of the great city.

And amid all this Christmas activity Philip Meredith walked with an acrid and indefinable pain at his heart. He was as strangely incongruous amid the joy, the color, the brilliancy of this festival eve as a skeleton at a feast.

He made a strenuous effort to forget. He had told himself that the coming of this anniversary should not overwhelm him with that agony of recollection which he knew down in his innermost soul he could not endure. For days the approaching holiday had filled him with an unacknowledged terror.

It was the first Christmas he had spent without her, without Mirabel. And, telling himself that he would forget, that he would not remember, he straightway remembered with the intimate fidelity of pain all that could wound him now.

A breath of fragrant air from out a florist's shop made him turn his head for a moment, and as he looked he saw forget-me-nots. The sight gave him a pang. He recalled the morning they had first met. It was a morning in spring, fresh with innocence—one of those mornings that yet dawn on the world to evoke images of primordial daybreaks when the world was young. Her eyes were blue—blue like the forget-me-nots. Then, less than a year later, they were wed, and the one Christmas they had spent together had seemed to him more exquisite in its perfect happiness than the one on the plains of Judea could have been to the shepherds. Then came misery; scarcely had the echo of the Christmas bells died away in the air than that fatal episode had occurred that had parted them. It arose in a trifle, as most of the world's misery and wars have, and then before he knew it he had said words that had made a gulf between them which it seemed could never be bridged. She said she would go away and battle with the world by herself; he made a brutal reply. Then they parted.

Again the opulence of a florist's shop met his gaze. A sudden resolution came to him; he stepped up to the window and speculated between orchids and lilies.

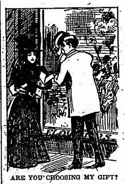
"Ah, Philip, I see you are choosing my Christmas gift," said a voice at his elbow. He turned—it was his cousin, a woman born to bring to others some of the light and joy denied them in their own poor lives. "Do not hesitate so," she continued, laughing. "You know how easily I am pleased in the matter of flowers. Shut your eyes and choose whatever you see first when you open them, and it will suit me."

"It will give me more pleasure to suit your taste than to trust in a haphazard choice," he replied. "Give me your parcels, you look like Mrs. Santa Claus, and come with me straight into the shop and say what you will have. I will see to it that the Christmas saint wears a flowery garland for you."

"Oh, Philip," said the woman, her eyes filling with a soft mist, "you are always good and generous, and I will let you give me a bunch of those American beauty roses—but not for me. I want to send them to the Woman's hospital in the morning."

He purchased the roses, and they separated at the door.

It was Christmas morning in St. Joseph's hospital. There was a faint antiseptic odor in the air. The long lines of narrow white cots stretched their serried rows down the room in pitilessly quiet array. In one cot lay a woman, who was a mystery to the hospital officials. She had been brought in late in the afternoon of the day before insensible. She was young and beautiful; her clothing was that of a gentlewoman; she had all the marks of refinement, albeit with certain signs of toil, but every mark that could identify her had been carefully clipped from her garments. All night Siva the Destroyer had hovered near her. Yet he passed her by, and in the early hours of the morning she revived and murmured words they could but indistinctly understand. Toward noon she revived so that her conversation became intelligible. But with the return of consciousness she seemed to guard her secret more closely. She refused to answer the questions of the hospital physicians, and insisted that she would soon be strong and well and would leave the hospital. There were no marks of violence on her—there was absolutely nothing to point to her identity—only the sinister fact that she had fallen in a faint on her way to the river gave the officials a hint of what might be concealed. The wedding ring shone on her hand, yet she steadfastly refused to let her husband be notified. The hospital physicians shook their wise heads and turned her over to the tender mercies of the nurse, saying that she would be all right when she recovered her full senses.



ARE YOU CHOOSING MY GIFT?

Shortly after noon the nurse approached her. She bore a large box.

"Here is something for you," she said.

It was a large white box; around it were wide, pale blue ribbons. A spray of holly lay on the top. She looked at it listlessly.

"Shall I open it for you?" said the nurse pleasantly. "It was sent especially for you by a friend."

The pale patient almost smiled. The nurse's kindness was almost pathetic.

"There is no one to send me flowers," she said; "but you may open it for me."

The nurse did so. A rush of fragrance filled the air. The roses burst upon the vision of the pale woman with the glory of midsummer, dazzling in their brightness. They lay in their satin-padded home like fragrant jewels.

"Oh, how beautiful!" she cried. "Let me have them."

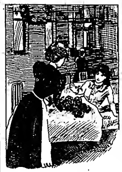
As she took them a card fell out. She looked at it as one might look at a dear face that had been hidden for years. Her eyes dilated. She was silent for one moment, then she cried out in a voice that thrilled the nurse and caused every head in the ward to be lifted from its pillow.

"It is he!" she cried. "It is he. I must go at once."

They remonstrated with her, but the sick woman was well. She arose from that pale couch with sudden vigor—her eyes were bright—every trace of illness left her. "I must go to him," she repeated, time and again. The doctors came and looked at her and then conferred in a low tone with the nurse. "She may go," they said.

So she took her roses and walked down the street.

She walked some distance and then she neared a church. On its steps, just stepping out to go down the avenue,



OH, HOW BEAUTIFUL!

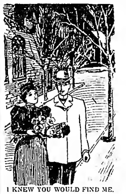
was a man. His restless agony had driven him forth to try to exorcise the demon that would not let him rest. He had passed the church and, drawn by an impulse he could neither define nor resist, he had entered. With the strains of "Gloria in Excelsis" ringing in his ears he went out. As he stood on the steps of the cathedral and looked casually down the street he saw what made his heart stand still. He caught at the air with lips that were pale with emotion. Great God! could it be she? A mist swam before his eyes—his knees shook under him. He hastened toward her.

"Mirabel!" he gasped.

She looked up at him with a smile.

"I was going to see you," she said simply.

The morning sunshine made a halo about her head. Her eyes were filled with a dewy sweetness. The purple shadows of the aftermath of pain were slipping away on the horizon before the glory of dawning joy. He felt dazzled. His heart leaped, then burned within him. He drew her arm within his own, and they turned down a quiet side street.



I KNEW YOU WOULD FIND ME.

"I knew you would find me some time," she said, with an infinitely gentle air. "When they brought me your roses in the hospital this morning and I saw your dear name once more I knew that my trouble and separation were over forever. I could not wait for you to come to me, and so I started to come to you. Sweetheart, how good it is to see you once more."

"Listen," he said, his throat quivering. "Listen to the bells. They are ringing 'Peace on earth, good will to men.' Come, come with me, darling. No birthday of any pagan god ever brought such happiness as this."

The lesson taught by their long separation and the meeting that Christmas morn was one which the pair never forget.

Don't Give Begrudgingly.

No loveless gifts, no gifts that are given to satisfy convention or grudgingly, should dishonor the day of love, and when your Christmas list is cut down to this limit you have pruned away all the germs of weariness and anxiety, and left only the joy of cooperation in a blessed lovemaking which involves the world. If your powers are limited to leaving at a friend's door a bunch of holly tied with a bit of bright ribbon and a little card of greeting, you have still had your share in the pleasure giving and dispensing of "good will toward men," and if you have but bestowed some rosy apples for the children and a pound of tea for the grandmother, you have lightened the hearts of the poor.

Couldn't Help.

"I have called," announced the mendicant, tearfully, "to ask you to help me in my extremity." "Impossible," returned the business man, promptly; "I'm not a chiropodist."—Philadelphia Record.

Making Others Happy

"Merry Christmas, mamma, and many of them! Thank you for your books; we read some already, and mean to read more after breakfast!" cried Jo, Amy and Meg as they came trooping into the room where their mamma was that Christmas morning.

"Merry Christmas, little daughters! I'm glad you began at once, and hope you will keep on. But I want to say a word before we sit down. Not far away from here lies a poor woman, with a little newborn babe. Six children are huddled into one bed to keep from freezing, for they have no fire. There is nothing to eat over there. The eldest boy came to tell me they were suffering hunger and cold. My girls, will you give them your breakfast as a Christmas present?"

They were all unusually hungry, having waited nearly an hour, and for a minute no one spoke; only a minute, for Jo exclaimed impetuously:

"I'm so glad you came before we began!"

"May I go and help carry the things to the poor little children?" asked Beth, eagerly.

"I shall take the cream and the muffins," said Amy, heroically giving up the articles she liked.

Meg was already covering the buckwheats and piling the bread into one big plate.

"I thought you would do it," said Mrs. March, smiling as if satisfied. "You shall all go and help me, and when we come back we will have bread and milk for breakfast, and make it up at dinner time."

They were soon ready and the procession set out. Fortunately it was early, and they went through back streets, so few people saw them, and no one laughed at the queer party.

A poor, bare, miserable room it was, with broken windows, no fire, ragged bed-clothes, a sick mother, wailing baby and a group of pale, hungry children cuddled under one old quilt, trying to keep warm.

How the big eyes stared and the blue lips smiled as the girls went in.

"Ach, mein Gott! It is good angels come to us!" said the poor woman, crying for joy.

"Funny angels in hoods and mittens," said Jo, and set them laughing.

In a few minutes it really did seem as if kind spirits had been at work there. Hannah, who had carried wood, made a fire, and stopped up the broken panes with old hats and her own cloak. Mrs. March gave the mother tea and gruel, and comforted her with promises of help, while she dressed the little baby as tenderly as if it had been her own. The girls meantime spread the table, set the children round the fire, and fed them like so many hungry birds—laughing, talking and trying to understand the funny, broken English.

"Das ist gut! Die Engel-kinder!" cried the poor things as they ate, and warmed their purple hands at the comfortable blaze.

The girls had never been called angel children before, and thought it very agreeable, especially Jo, who had been considered a "Sancho" ever since she was born. That was a very happy breakfast, though they did not get any of it, and when they went away, leaving comfort behind, I think there was not in all the city four merrier people than the hungry little girls who gave away their breakfast and contented themselves on bread and milk on Christmas morning.

A Brand New Christmas

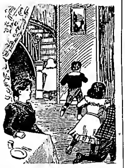
(For the Children.)

The Barnes children couldn't have any Christmas this year. They live in the country, and there were trees enough, to be sure. But there was nothing to put on one to make it look "sparkly," as a tree ought to look, and there was not a penny to spend for tree trimmings.

The Barnes children, however, had a jollier time than they had ever had with a tree. Joe said so, and George said so, too; and Grace and Winnie agreed with them. This is how it was done. A delightful young auntie lives with them. They call her the Lady with a Bright Idea. She always has a new bright idea just in the nick of time, but this year it did seem as if the idea was brighter than ever. It fairly shone.

"We'll give the presents in a funny way," she said to the children. "Yes, we'll give them in two or three funny ways. You'll see!"

There was a very mysterious feeling in the air Christmas morning. Everybody looked at everybody else, and then they all smiled. Something good was going to happen. When the breakfast plates were lifted, there were little envelopes tied with gay ribbons. Such a time as the children had untying them! In each was a card, and on each card was a verse, signed, "The Christmas Postman."



THEN OFF THE CHILDREN RAN.

Joe shouted as he read his aloud:

"When you get this, dear Joe,
You must straight away go
And look under your bed,
But pray don't bump your head."

Joe jumped up, but auntie called, "Here, you must wait until the rest have read their notes, and all start at once."

The verses were all short. George read his next:

"Look behind your closet door,
For a great big package on the floor."

Grace read:

"In the northeast chamber, out of sight,
Under the coverlet, snowy white,
You'll find a gift if you search just right."

Last came Winnie's:

"A present lies on the garret stair;
I think that Santa Claus dropped it there."

Then off the children ran to search for their presents. Such a stamping and scuffling and shouting as the grown people heard! Pretty soon they came rushing in, one after the other. Then such an untying of strings and tearing off of wrapping papers as there was!

"Auntie! Auntie!" they shouted. "These are your presents! You are the Christmas postman!"

Auntie's gifts were not to be mistaken. She made them nearly always. Joe's was an envelope album for scraps. Joe liked to cut all sorts of things out of newspapers and magazines. The scrap-album was made of twenty-six big brown envelopes, tied together by cords, in a pasteboard cover. They could be taken out when filled and new ones put in.

George's "great big package" was a wooden box made into a nice little store. It had shelves and counters, and a set of scales besides.

Grace's gift was a fancy work bag, with pockets holding embroidery silks. It had some crochet needles and a pair of embroidery hoops, and some pretty doilies ready to begin work on.

Winnie's gift was an afghan, pillow and strap for her doll carriage. The afghan was made out of pink and white worsted knitted in stripes. The pillow was of pink silk, over which was a cover of Swiss with a lace ruffle. The strap was a piece of white ribbon with little pink flowers painted on it.

As the children were exclaiming over these gifts, they were startled by a loud noise at the door that led into the dining room from the hall. Bang! Bang! The boys ran to open the door. There stood their father. He had slipped away while they were upstairs, and they had not missed him. He had a trunk, covered with cotton and trimmed with evergreen, on his shoulder.

"Express from Santa Claus," he cried.

"Ho, ho! Express from Santa Claus!" the children shouted, dancing around the room.

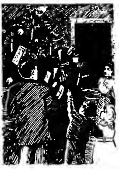
It was a regular Christmas trunk, when opened. "Merry Christmas." was printed in green letters on a white ground inside the lid, and everything in the trunk was done up in white paper, tied with green cord. In each was stuck a sprig of evergreen. In the trunk were all the presents from papa and mamma to the children, and from the three grown folks to each other. Most of the gifts were homemade, and not costly, but all were received with delight. There never was such a jolly Christmas trunk!

"Why, we haven't given our presents to each other!" cried Winnie at last. Each of the four children always had some trifling gift for the other three.

"I'll tell you a nice way to give them!" exclaimed auntie. "All mark your presents with the first names of those they are for, and bring them to me. Then we'll go to the sitting-room and play 'hunt the thimble' with each bundle. The one whose name is on it must go out while we hide it." And off they trooped to collect their bundles and to spend a merry morning hunting for them.—Annie Willis McCullough in Youth's Companion.

A CHRISTMAS VISITOR.

Papa, Archie and May went to the woods to get a Christmas tree, and found just what they wanted—a little pine, bushy and straight.



FLEW TO THE TIP TOP BRANCH.

"There is something I must cut off," said Archie. He pointed to a little bunch on one of the twigs, and pulled out his knife.

"No, no!" cried May, holding his hand. "Let it stay. It is a poor little caterpillar's house."

May was right. One Indian summer day a caterpillar, dressed in brown velvet, was taking a walk in the woods. At last he came to the little pine tree and thought to himself, "What a nice place to spend the winter!"

So he made himself a little house. He made it very tight and close, of fine, soft thread, and fastened up the door. He did not leave himself even a window to look out. If there had been one, how it would have surprised him to see that he and his house and the pine tree were riding in a sleigh with pap and May and Archie!

He would have been still more surprised if he had seen the tree standing in the parlor, covered with toys and trinkets and little candles.

"It must be spring at last," he thought, for it was very warm in the parlor.

So he poked a hole in the wall of his house and out he came. But what do you think? He was not a caterpillar at all!

"Oh, see the lovely butterfly!" cried May.

He flew to the tip-top bough; and the children said there was nothing else on the tree so pretty as the butterfly.

"He must have come down the chimney with Santa Claus!" said May. And she never guessed that he came out of the caterpillar's house.

A Visit to Santa Claus

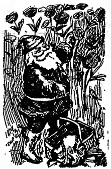
Goldilocks and I were walking back of Moss valley and happened to step, together, upon the Enchanted Flying Phantom Field. In a moment we were flying through the air, and in less time than you can count six plainly we were once more in Fairyland, under Tamalpais mountain.

And then what do you think we saw?

Santa Claus picking plum puddings from trees! Real plum puddings from real trees!

This was in the plum pudding orchard which the fairies planted, long ago, for Santa Claus. He was whistling and chuckling and laughing, "Ho! ho! ho!" and sometimes slyly winking one eye as he viewed the many growing heaps of puddings as he laid them under the trees, and thought what jollity there would be Christmas day when they were eaten—and what tummyaches afterwards!

Goldilocks thought the plum pudding orchard wonderful. It was watered by sparkling rills and was surrounded by hedges upon which candles and nuts and oranges were growing. These hedges were made all of Christmas trees, the burning little candles on which furnish Santa Claus light at night to work by. He will have only the candles to work by because they seem to bring him nearer to his millions of dear children, and—a secret—Santa Claus is in as much of a hurry for Christmas eve as you are.



PICKING PLUM PUDDINGS.

The plum pudding orchard had hundreds and thousands of trees in it. The way the trees came to bear plum puddings was this: They were grafted. The bread-fruit trees furnished grafts for plum pudding dough, and grafts from rasin grape vines, citron trees and current bushes supplied other "fixings." The birds brought oak and holly leaves and Christmas berries for decorations. The sun browned the puddings just right and the leaves on the plum pudding trees turned snowy white just in time to furnish plum pudding bags—one for every pudding and not one to spare. The stems grow into pudding bag strings. The trees bent low with their weight of puddings. The air smelled as sweet as a thousand Christmas dinners all in one!

When Santa Claus had pulled all the puddings from the trees new ones sprouted—for birthdays and next Thanksgiving.

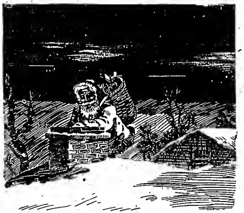
Jingle, jingle, tinkle, tinkle! Santa Claus' reindeer stamped their little feet until all the bells on their harnesses jingled and tinkled again, while waiting for Santa Claus and the thousand fairies who helped him to load the puddings into his sleigh to carry them to the Boy Proof Pantry of Ten Thousand Shelves. Some fairies, when the first sleigh load was on its way to the pantry, gathered the small piles of puddings into one great heap. Then along came the bad boy fairy, tied two dozen puddings together by the pudding bag strings and fastened them to his kite, which drew the long string of puddings away up into the sky.

One fairy, leaning backward to watch the kite, lost his balance and fell against the small mountain of puddings. They began to roll and roll and chased each other and chased us, but they were not hurt one bit. Santa Claus laughed louder than ever when he came back and saw the fun and he winked one eye at the bad boy fairy and shook one finger at him, as he saw the boy stick in his thumb and pull out a plum.

When Goldilocks and I stopped running we were outside of Fairyland, but we could still hear the puddings rolling softly about and Santa Claus laughing—while still upward flew the kite, skyward, with its plum pudding tail.

Honesty is often goaded to ruin.—Phaedrus.

KEEP OLD SANTA CLAUS.



SANTA CLAUS AS WE KNOW HIM.

If all the little fictions, fairy tales and fancies dear to children were to be given up, what would become of the imaginations of the coming generation? We have been called a practical people. So we are. If anything, too practical. As we grow older the realities of life crowd thick and fast upon us. Why then seek to destroy one of the most beautiful ideals of child life?

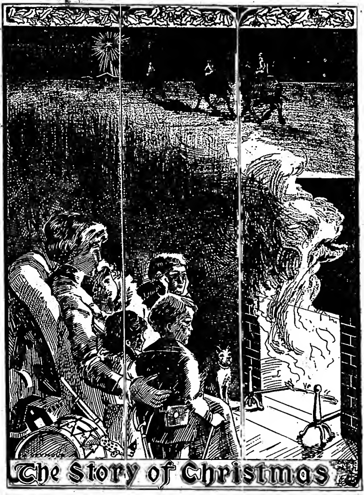
Let the little ones hang up their stockings on Christmas eve. Let them believe in the dear old white-bearded man who is one of their happiest illusions, and, above all, let them be real children while they may, not miniature men and women, tired of the ideal side of life before they leave the nursery for the schoolroom.

Yes, we believe that the best and truest mother can with perfect justice to both her children and herself conscientiously decide to keep Santa Claus in the especial niche in which he has sat enthroned for ages past.

Give us Santa Claus! Throw the good old saint out into the snow? Put away those delicious Christmas eve dreams, when every stir in the household after dusk meant the stamp of a reindeer? Bring up a child without the belief in the chimney and its capacity to stretch on Christmas eve?

No; a thousand times no!

There's too little poetry in life now. Let the children have all of it they can get. Says a recent writer: "I wish there was a grown-up Santa Claus. I'd love to believe in him, and I would not thank anyone who told me he wasn't true. I'd listen to his sleigh bells with something very much like rapture, I'm afraid. It wouldn't be for the presents, either. That isn't why the children love Santa Claus. They love him because he means that somewhere there's a great-hearted creature, who is thinking of them and planning all the year through to delight them."



The Story of Christmas

Her Merriest Christmas

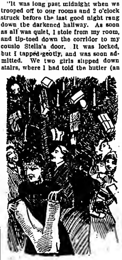
A western lady, who formerly lived at Cambridge, Mass., writes entertainingly of what she declares was the happiest Christmas of her life. The climax of this merry occasion was a house party given at the home of her uncle not many miles from Cambridge. The lady writes:

"My uncle owned a big place about twenty miles from town, and every year he invited all his relatives to spend the Christmas holidays with him. He was a widower with two children—a son 26 years old and a daughter of 17. This girl, my cousin, Stella, was one of the brightest and most fun-loving girls I have ever known. I was just two years her senior, and between us we managed to stir up that house party to a degree nothing short of startling! Twenty people beside our family were invited, there being altogether about thirty guests in the house. Among them were a young lawyer from New York (for whom I immediately conceived a violent admiration), a naval officer, three Yale men from New Haven, my two brothers, an antique female cousin of ours (age-unknown), some girls from New York and a young married couple from St. Louis. Before the end of a week Stella and I had almost originated a divorce case, where the young St. Louis couple were concerned. Of course, there were some other people, but they were sort of chaperones, old fogies who didn't count much. Well, that year the 25th of December fell on Wednesday, and the guests were invited from Dec. 23 to Jan. 2, and I can tell you we made Rome howl. My brothers and I, with our parents, arrived at our uncle's late Monday morning. The snow had been falling steadily for thirty-six hours, and was many inches deep.

"We drove from the little rickety station three miles 'cross country to the farm. We were the first arrivals, and we made good use of the advantage over the other invited guests. The next train, at 4 o'clock, brought them all, and at 5 they came shouting and singing up to the house, in sleighs, wagons and carriages, borrowed from the farmers all over that part of the country. Well, the first evening was passed in the big dining room, all of us crowded about the roaring log fire. That is, all of us, excepting the young lawyer from New York and—myself. We were seated on a chintz-covered soap-box, off in a dim corner of the room, discussing—er—the possibilities of effect of mistletoe on—ah—mankind. Before the candles were brought in to announce the 'time for disappearing,' we two had begun to understand each other. It was our first meeting, but in the country, and at Christmastide, people become acquainted very quickly.

"The next morning we all arose at 8 o'clock, and after the jolliest kind of a breakfast, we hauled in great bunches of evergreen, reels of crow-foot moss, and pile after pile of holly and mistletoe. We spent most of the day on step ladders or tables, hammering and tacking the Christmas decorations in place. And in the evening my uncle had a big pine tree brought in and set up in the parlor. We had each brought scores of little packages from town to present on Christmas morning, and these were suspended from the branches of the tree. Mistletoe was everywhere, and so were the girls. The consequence will be readily understood—the men were not of the variety known as shy.

"It was long past midnight when we trooped off to our rooms and 2 o'clock struck before the last good night rang down the darkened hallway. As soon as all was quiet, I stole from my room, and tip-toed down the corridor to my cousin Stella's door. It was locked, but I tapped gently, and was soon admitted. We two girls slipped down stairs, where I had told the butler (an old servant of my uncle's) to wait for us. And then we put our three heads together and concocted a grand scheme, for the undoing of everybody in the house. We tugged and hauled that big over-loaded Christmas tree from the parlor, through the hall into the library, and then we exchanged the names on all the presents. It was almost daylight before we finished, but we were amply repaid for our trouble.



RECEIVED A PAIR OF HUNTING TROUSERS.

"By 9 o'clock everybody was dressed and down stairs, exchanging greetings and gifts. Stella and I were the last to arrive, and our entrance was the signal for a grand rush to the parlor. And lo! the big Christmas tree had flown. My uncle was enraged, the guests much excited, and the young lawyer from New York looked very much amused. A search was promptly instituted, and of course the tree was found in the library, standing in stately solitude.

"Who on earth could have put it there? No one knew—and no one could guess—Stella and I were particularly obtuse. And after awhile the presents were distributed. The young married woman's card was inclosed in a bundle of embroidered flannel petticoats to 'my darling husband,' and 'darling husband' presented his 'little love' with a volume of Mother Goose tales, and a red bathing suit; my old maid cousin received a Dutch pipe and a pair of hunting trousers; my uncle got a half dozen tulle veils and a pair of gold garter clasps."

WENT HOME TO SANTA CLAUS.

A bitter night—a squalid street—
A basement bleak and bare,
A hungry child with bleeding feet
Alone sat waiting there.
All day amid the surging throng
She'd wandered far and near—
All day had sung a feeble song
That none had paused to hear.

But as she sang she caught the name
Of Santa Claus, and how
On Christmas night he often came
To hungry children now.
And so she waited in the dark
For Santa Claus to come
Till in her breast the feeble spark
Of hope grew faint and numb.

She thought because she had no light
He failed to bring her share,
And crept at last into the night
To lead the good saint there.
And Christmas morning came, and lo!
Her dead face smiled, because
Amid a whirring drift of snow
Her little weary soul I know
Had found its Santa Claus.

THE SPITTING HABIT.

Correction of the Practice Should Begin While Young.

Boys should early be taught the heinousness of the offense of spitting, both from the basis of decency and danger to public health. It is much easier to prevent the formation of a habit of this kind in a boy than to correct it in a man, and herein lies the mother's part in the warfare against spitting.

No extension of woman's rights is necessary to make mother a power in this neglected realm. All that is required is return to a duty once faithfully discharged—but in the rush of modern life neglected—the vigilant maternal supervision of boys during the years in which their habits are formed. The boy who is taught that to spit on the hearth, the steps—anywhere about the house—is an infringement upon the rights of the family that will not be tolerated, is not likely, as a man, to infringe upon the rights of the public by spitting upon the sidewalks, or the floors or steps of public buildings, or in the cars.

In the meantime, however, there is a generation of full-grown, active spitters to be reckoned with in the interest of the public health, and it is the opinion of those who have given careful attention to the matter that these can be reached more effectively by the dissemination of knowledge upon the subject than by city ordinance or state law.—Trenton Star Gazette.

Here's the Whole Winter Problem.

"There is one sound piece of advice that should be repeated from Maine to Oregon every year when winter approaches, and that is—if you want to go through the winter without catching cold, wear rubbers."—Churchman.

An Insect Calculator.

There is a little insect found in New Caledonia called the "insect which counts," and which seems capable of counting at least six. It is found on the leaves of the banana tree, and, when the moment is favorable, it may be seen to turn around, with its head as a center, in describing rapid circles. At first it executes six of them, not one more or one less; then it reverses the movement and makes the same number in an opposite direction. It stops a moment and begins again, but only makes five this time, always alternately in opposite directions. Another stop, then double rotation in alternative ways, the turns this time only being four, and so on, diminishing constantly in such a way as successively three, then two, and at last one single turn.

After these gymnastic exercises, which are at the same time mathematical, the insect remains absolutely motionless, until its agitation again takes possession of it and it gives itself up to its complicated calculations with an exactitude which many people might envy.

Florida.

As to why Ponce de Leon gave the name of Florida to the territory now known by that name, the Florida Farmer and Fruit Grower quotes from an old book published in 1763: "Gave it the name of Florida because it was first seen on Easter, called Pasqua de flores in the language of his countrymen, or, as Herrera alleges, because it was covered with flowers and the most beautiful blossoms." And the Farmer adds: "Those who have seen the Easter season in Florida and the wealth of flowers which still commemorate and adorn its return, can well believe that both these reasons influenced the giving of its name."—Meehan's Monthly.

"Those soldiers are white, aren't they?" he asked.

"Yes," replied his captor.

"And those are red?"

"Yes. They are Indian scouts."

"And those are black?"

"Yes. They are the colored troops."

"And those men over there? What are they?"

"They are yellow journalists."

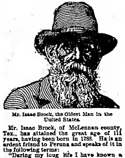
OLDEST MAN IN AMERICA

Tells How He Escaped the Terrors of Many Winters by Using Peruna.



Mr. Isaac Brock, the Oldest Man in the United States.

Mr. Isaac Brock, of McLennan county, Tex., has attained the great age of 111 years, having been born in 1788. He is an ardent friend to Peruna and speaks of it in the following terms:

"During my long life I have known a great many remedies for coughs, colds, catarrh and diarrhoea. I had always supposed these affections to be different diseases, but I have learned from Dr. Hartman's books that these affections are the same and are properly called catarrh.

"As for Dr. Hartman's remedy, Peruna, I have found it to be the best, if not the only reliable remedy for these affections.

"Peruna has been my stand-by for many years, and I attribute my good health and my extreme age to this remedy. It exactly meets all my requirements.

"I have come to rely upon it almost entirely for the many little things for which I need medicine. I believe it to be especially valuable to old people."

A Bill Poster's Trick.

"Of course we used to put up small bills wherever they'd catch the eye," said a bill poster who traveled with a circus making one day stands, "and one thing we used to do that always pleased folks was to hang a bill from a ceiling. You had to have a wooden ceiling, to start with; and then all you wanted, besides the bills, was a tack and a silver dollar. It took practice to do it, but when you'd got the knack it was very simple and easy.

"You attached two bills together, one at the foot of the other so that it would hang down when the first one was attached to the ceiling. Then you folded the bills up, with a tack, thrust point upward through the top fold of the upper bill, with a silver dollar under it, up against its head and between it and the other folds of paper under it.

"Then, some time when the room was full of people—this might be a hotel office or perhaps a barroom—you tossed the bills up, and there was weight enough in the dollar to drive the tack into the ceiling far enough to hold. Then the weight of the paper itself and of the dollar would open the bills out, and the coin would drop and you'd catch it as it fell, and the chances are that not one man in five would see it fall. The bills would be seen, fastened up there somehow, most of the people wouldn't know how, and opening out with the lower bill, hanging so you could read it.

"This was not the greatest thing in bill posting ever was, but, as I said before, always pleased folks."—New York Sun.

Very Curious Weather.

At Alto Cruecero water freezes every night of the year and the thermometer frequently falls to 6, 8 and 10 degrees below zero. There are no facilities for artificial heat—not even a fireplace—and people keep themselves warm by putting on ponchos and other extra wraps.

At noonday the sun is intensely hot, because of the elevation and the rarity of the atmosphere, and blisters the flesh of those who are not accustomed to it. There is a difference of 20 and sometimes 30 degrees in the temperature of the shade and the sunshine. Water will freeze in the shade while 20 feet away men may be working in their shirt sleeves.

The natives seem to be entirely inured to cold and go about barefooted and barelegged over the ice and the stones indifferently without regard to the temperature; but they have a way of heaping the blankets on their heads and wrapping up their faces to keep the pure air out of their throats and nostrils. The women who herd the flocks are often out on the mountains for weeks at a time without shelter or anything to eat except parched corn, strips of dried meat and coca leaves—which are the most powerful of nerve stimulants.—Chicago Record.

Board For His Poems.

"Yes, I find it extremely difficult to make my living by my pen," said the poet.

"Difficult!" exclaimed his friend. "You mean impossible, I presume."

"No, I do not," replied the poet. "I am in the habit of saying precisely what I mean, and when I say difficult I mean just that and nothing more."

"You don't mean to say that you have ever earned anything by your literary work?"

"Indeed I do," answered the poet. "I once got six months' board for some poems."

"Who did you sell them to?"

"My landlady."

"What on earth did she want with a lot of poems?"

"I don't know that she wanted them particularly, but I left them in my box when I went away, and there was nothing else in sight. They were good poems, too, but I couldn't sell them.'

The Stumbling Block.

A member of the Mug House club who had failed to win a fortune on the turf decided to go into Wall street to tackle easier game. "On the turf," he explained, "a man has exactly 27 chances against him in a field of ten horses. In other words, he has one chance in 28 to hit a winner. Now, in Wall street stocks go one of two ways either up or down—giving a man one chance in two. It looks like a dead open and shut. I'm going to make it pay. There's nothing against you except bad judgment."

"Oh, yes, there is," said a New street operator, nodding his head sagely.

"And that is"—we all asked.

"Your broker and his commission."—New York Press.

IT INSPIRES HORROR.

A HIDEOUS CREATURE TO CONTEMPLATE IS THE OCTOPUS.

The Snakelike Way in Which It Attacks Its Victims and Endeavors to Crush Them in Its Slimy and Writhing Tentacles.

One of the most disagreeable animals of the sea to handle or contemplate is the octopus. The tangle of arms, the snakelike movements, the strange flashes of color, the green glittering eyes, are all features that arouse a strong feeling of aversion on the part of the observer. I have had under observation several octopi at the Santa Catalina aquarium, and it has been interesting to note the characteristic features of the various individuals. In a small tank were confined three individuals having a radial spread of perhaps 18 inches. One affected a light yellow hue and was timid, sulking behind a rock. Another, of a dark reddish cast, was continually flourishing its tentacles, rising and falling on the side of the glass until an observer nicknamed it the "skirt dancer." A third was almost black, and was a vindictive fellow, ready at any time to make an attack. When I introduced my hand into the tank, this octopus would as quick as a flash send out one long attenuated tentacle and coil about it; then if an advance was made it would suddenly release its hold upon the rock and quickly encompass my hand with its eight arms, pressing the round serrated disks into the flesh while a tremulous motion would be felt.

At the first attack of this kind the sensation was one of horror. The hideous creature flattened out, assimilating the color of the flesh to a marked degree and evidently endeavoring to smother the hand with its folds, as the tentacles were distended to their utmost limit. To hold the hand firm under such circumstances required some effort, and I confess when it was first attempted, with a Florida specimen, I beat a rapid and decided retreat; but in the latter case I waited to see if the animal's object was to bite, knowing that the bill of so small a specimen could not make a serious wound. But the octopus merely pressed its mouth on the back of my hand, apparently trying to intimidate the supposed enemy. While fastened to the hand, it still held to the rock, and it was with difficulty released. When I remained quiet, the animal began to creep along like a huge spider, but at the first movement of my fingers it pounced upon my hand again, enveloping it in the eight snakelike arms. I finally twisted out of its grasp and seized it firmly by the body, when its rage became intense. Flushes of color passed over it in rapid succession; now red, black, yellow and when at the height of its anger it was mottled and splashed with black—a frightful creature. It made a desperate effort to escape, but when released ejected a cloud of ink, darting off rapidly under its cover. This octopus resented any intrusion and advanced to the attack at once. When a strange octopus was placed in the tank, although much larger, it came out of its corner without hesitation, eyed the newcomer a moment, then in some incomprehensible way hurled itself at the enemy, and in a second the two were rolling over and over in a contest that was amazing to witness. The 16 tentacles wound about each other with the rapidity of light, and both animals ejected the inky fluid from their siphons. They resembled a ball of snakes rolling along and striking at each other more than anything else. A close examination of the writhing mass showed that the object apparently was to smother the opponent. Finally, the newcomer beat a retreat; it was badly wounded and succumbed a few hours later.

The octopus is a favorite subject with popular writers on natural history, and many accounts have been written of its ferocity, which are almost invariably denied by naturalists; yet I am inclined to think that in some instances certain individuals are more or less pugnacious. I have handled scores of them from the gulf of Mexico and California and observed only one instance—the one cited—where the animal deliberately rushed to the attack, though I know of two others. One was observed by Mr. Ralph Arnold, a geologist of Pasadena. He was wading among the pools at low tide at Point San Pedro when suddenly he heard a cry, and, turning, saw some children in a pool, wading, and moving toward them a large octopus, its long arms raised above the water. Whether the animal would have attempted to attack them is a question, as it was interrupted in a more or less violent manner. A resident of Washington told me that once when visiting the shore he was advised by the fisherman with him to avoid the pools and when it became necessary to cross them to pass over as quickly as possible, as large octopi frequented them. He considered this the exaggeration of a fisherman and paid but little attention to it; but once in crossing a pool, stepping from stone to stone, suddenly a long, livid arm shot out of the water and reached insinuatingly for his legs, the entire animal moving rapidly toward him. He, however, reached the rocks safely and bombarded the animal with stones. He estimated its size at 25 feet across, judging the tentacles to have been 12 feet in length. Again, it cannot be determined from this whether the animal would have seized him, though the observer was confident that it would and that it was large enough to have held him under water had he been pulled in.—C. F. Holder in Scientific American.

NEW YORK WORLD.
THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.
Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

Paris hotels have been syndicated, it is said, and will make a minimum price of $5 a day during the exposition for a room without meals. This will be pleasant, of course, to the syndicate, but it will add another reason to a number that have accumulated why the public may syndicate itself by an agreement to stay away.

The dollar of 1899, under the gold standard policy of this country, is worth but little more than fifty cents when taken into a store to buy the necessaries of life to-day. In other words, fifty cents two years ago would buy three common brooms—to-day it takes a dollar. Now we have a fifty cent gold standard dollar.—Norwood Times.

Evidently they had some weather 'way down in Texas judging from the following local taken from the Texas Citizen, Ed. Love's paper at Haney Grove: "The weather clerk evidently got things somewhat mixed Wednesday night, judging from the seventeen different kinds of weather he turned loose. Everything in the weather scale from a delightful summer moonlight night, a gentle shower of rain, a hail storm with lightning and thunder accompaniments, to sleet and snow. Yesterday was pretty and clear though a little cool."

This is a tough, wicked old world; but how much more ready we always are to pay a big doctor bill than to leave it!

There is a lot of "going into cattle raising" these days. But if you don't go in right, gentleman, you better stay out.

If a horse were never whipped until he knew what he is whipped for there would be a great falling off in the demand for whips.

Trying to make horses tough by neglect, wintering them at strawstacks etc. will prove unsatisfactory, however much the horses may enjoy it.

Where is there any sense in the fear that cattle raising can be overdone, when it has been demonstrated that the more cattle we have the higher their price!

It costs less to raise the highest-priced steer than a cheaper one, it costs no more to raise a good horse than a poorer one, yet poor steers and horses are in the majority!

It is always a safe proposition to spend no money for the device that is claimed to get more butter out of milk than there is in it, nor to get butter in three minutes. Better take more time and get more butter.

The friends of the trusts say: "It is a new force, that stands merely for the latter stage of industrial growth." In a few weeks it will be "moral growth," and in a few more it will be "the way God designed the business of this country to be run," and that'll settle it!

This conversation was recently overheard: "Say, Tom, I've got the slickest scheme yet to work the farmers, there's thousands in it!" Then followed a long earnest explanation of the scheme, but in a voice too low to be heard by the unseen listener, after which came this: "It's no use, John, unless you can muzzle or exterminate that d—d Farm, Stock and Home!"

The American Steel & Wire Co. from which comes all the fencing wire and nails used cleared $1,800,000 in October. If each farmer who buys wire for fencing or nailing cleared $2,5000 a year, which would be regarded an almost phenomenal gain by a vast majority of farmers, it would take 720 of them a whole year to match the earnings of the wire trust for a single month! It would take 8,640 of them a month at the rate named to equal the net earnings of the wire trust for a month! This is no kick against the trust remember, but a simple statement of fact.

Cosgrove's Merry Makers presented their high class entertainment at the Davidson opera house Saturday night to a good house. The program as a whole contained features that were entensely clever, elicitating great applaus, Miss Ada Cosgrove acquitted herself with unusual credit on each appearance and was obliged to respond to more than one encore. She is quite an alluring little actress. If Harry Fay, the clever comedian, needed anything to perfect him in the roles of a burlesque disclaimer or humorous impersonater, he concealed the deficiency with absolute success. Fay showed skill and tact as a make-up artist. His appearance was always buoyant and catchy. "The Cosgrove's" gave some very rare performance with the musical glasses, hand bells, marinbaphone and Rosewood bells, and Lillian and John, upon their sweet toned guitars, displayed talent that was very superior. Their playing met with the warmest appreciation and they were called back twice. John and Reg. Cosgrove won equal praise with their unique marimbaphone duet.—St. Cloud Times October 16th.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent

The democrats intend pushing trust legislation at this session of Congress. Senator Morgan, of Ala., has introduced an anti-trust joint resolution which he says he intends forcing to a vote if it possibly can be done, and Senator Chilton, of Texas, says the same about the anti-trust bill he has introduced.

The appointment of Gen. Leonard Wood, whose nomination to be major general of volunteers was confirmed by the Senate this week, to be Military Governor of Cuba, is regarded as the best thing that has happened for the Cubans for some time, as he has shown by his management of the province of Santiago that he thoroughly understands how to get along with them.

It is no new thing to charge the U. S. Senate with being an extravagant body, but the itemized cost, as shown by the report of the Secretary of the Senate, of the furnishings bought for the Vice President's room in the Capitol, show that it is growing more extravagant all the time. Here are some of the items: Imported carpet $465, Antique desk $325, Mahogany tables $150, sofa $130, two rugs $212, two pairs of lace curtains $300, velvet portiere $170, and a solid silver ink stand $1,000.

Last winter a committee, representing nearly all of the metropolitan dailies in the United States called upon President McKinley and urged that an agreement putting wood pulp on the free list be made with the so-called High Joint Canadian Commission, then trying to make a treaty of commerce with the United States. This treaty fell through, and consequently nothing was done for the paper industries. The Paper Trust has gone forward adding burdens to the consumer; and Congress is asked now to afford relief. Mr. Bellamy's bill or something in that direction, should interest all publishers. There should be no party division in such a question, as the interests of all are identical.

A bill of great interest to publishers of small papers was introduced in the House, Monday, by Mr. Bellamy, of North Carolina. It proposes that wood pulp, used in the manufacture of paper, shall be admitted free of duty; and reduces import duties on manufactured papers one half. The object of this is to enable the consumers of paper, especially printing paper, to escape the exactions of the International Paper Trust, which has advanced printing papers to such a figure that many publishers must either increase the subscription price or suspend publication. A further advance of 35 per cent is proposed by the trust. Mr. Bellamy's bill was introduced at the instance of county publishers in his district. It is manifestly in the interest of all publishers, and should command united support from papers, small and large.

If an editor was as free hearted as some people imagine he should be the newspaper business would be a glorious success. Send out your paper for steen years, never ask your readers to pay up give them a nice little puff now and then and you would be a first-class fellow. But as soon as the editor ask for what's due him, there is a large sized ruction and he is soon put down as a thoroughbred son-of-a-gun—by the ones who never intend to pay him.—Tracy Trumpet.

A Farmer's Opinion.

Preston Republican: A leading Republican in Nobles county, says an exchange, has become self asserting and refuses to longer train with the once respectable party. He is a farmer and states his conversion to manly independence as follows: "Had I known three years ago that I was voting for Mark Hanna instead of William McKinley my ballot would have been cast for Bryan. The farmer stands no show as long as the trusts dominate the country, for the monopolies not only dictate the price of clothing, food, lumber, fuel and every necessity of life, but actually dictate what the farmer shall receive for the products of his farm. To-day I am getting less than a year ago for my crop, while everything I buy is advanced from 10 to 100 per cent. I am through voting the Republican ticket." The farmer sees plainly that the prosperity wave that is so fulsomely paraded in the columns of the hireling press, touches only the money changers and business men" who make the toiling masses contribute to their profits without benefit to themselves. The farmer is not permitted to share in the prosperity. And many of them will desert the oppressors.

The Arnewood Mystery

BY MAURICE H. HERVEY.

Author of "Dead Man's Court," "Somerville's Crime," "Dartmoor," "Maravin's Money," etc., etc.

CHAPTER I. (Continued.)

What mattered the difference between bed and sofa in his muddled state? Now that his raging thirst was satisfied, his sole desire was to lie down and pass off once more into oblivion. With a weary sigh, that was a half-groan, he threw himself upon the couch, and nearly dislodged its occupant.

"Uncommon odd!" he muttered, groping vaguely at the prostrate figure. "Some other chap here, too!—Perhaps the Johnny—I met in the fog," he added, with a dim recollection of recent events.

Yet, even in the dark, and to his distempered brain there was something strongly repellant about that motionless form. He felt impelled to arouse this unknown sharer of his room and hear him talk. And so, with nervous, shaking hand, he pulled at the enveloping cloak, at first hesitatingly, then more boldly; but in vain.

"I say—I say—wake up, will you?" he pleaded, in jerky accents. "You give me the jumps!"

Still no reply, no movement from that prostrate form. Poor Webb's nerves, already badly unstrung, could stand the strain no longer. Trembling from head to foot, he groped his way to the mantelpiece, found a box of matches, and managed to light a candle. Then, half-paralyzed with the vague dread of some impending terror, he returned to the sofa. The pale light of the candle fell upon the livid, distorted face of a corpse!

The shock of such a discovery, under similar conditions of horror, would certainly tax to the utmost the self-possession of the most iron-nerved of men. Upon brain-weakened, nerve-shattered Tom Webb it was simply overpowering; he essayed to cry out; but the vocal chords were paralyzed by terror, and naught but a gurgling sob issued from his lips. With a tremendous effort he brought himself to jerk the cloak so as to cover the dead man's face, and then, as though himself stricken by a mortal blow, he staggered towards the door. His brain was a blank, his one guiding instinct to escape from that ghastly presence. His hat chanced to meet his eye, and he put it on. Then he slunk out of the room, as though fearful of disturbing him who lay upon the sofa, crept to the hall door, and fled forth into the darkness and fog. Fled, he knew not whither. Fled, blindly, wildly, in a mad effort to escape the haunting stare of two great, protruding eyes!

CHAPTER II.

Ralph Weston Opens the Case.

I, Ralph Weston, junior partner in the firm of Hawkins & Weston, private inquiry agents, have been requested to set down in narrative form such circumstances connected with the so-called Arnewood Mystery case as came under my own personal observation. The task is, in some respects, an easy one enough, inasmuch as I have ample notes and an excellent memory to work upon; but my literary experience being by no means on a par with my knowledge of the case, I fear that I must crave an abundant indulgence for inartistic use of the ample material at my disposal. With which brief preamble I now proceed.

The night of Thursday, Nov. 19th, was one of the foggiest and bleakest nights I ever was out in. On my way home I ran across a former schoolfellow, Tom Webb, who had given away badly to habits of intemperance, and in whose welfare I was strongly interested. His teeth were chattering with cold; and, despite the bitter weather, he had no overcoat.

I could see he was not sober; indeed, he seldom or never was, I fear. Still, I could not well refuse his request for a drink, and took him with me to my chambers. There, in addition to helping himself freely to liquor, he contrived (as I afterwards discovered) to purloin half a bottleful of whisky.

He refused absolutely to stay over night. So I lent him a spare overcoat, and he started homeward just as the clock of St. Martin's church was striking 2 a. m. I felt somewhat uneasy after he had gone, especially when I noticed the disappearance of my whisky; but, of course, I could do nothing, and had to content myself with hoping that he would reach his lodging in safety. He lived at No. 18 Cato street, Soho.

The contents bill of the early editions of the evening papers next day made the not very uncommon announcement of a "Tragedy in Soho;" but I was greatly startled to find that the scene of the said tragedy was the identical house in which Tom Webb lodged. The first details published were very meager. The dead body of a gentleman, unknown, had been discovered in a room rented by a lodger, whose whereabouts were not at present known, and upon whom, of course, the gravest suspicion rested. I at once hastened to Cato street.

I should here state that although I was at that time only head clerk to my present partner, Mr. Hawkins, I had frequently come into contact, in the ordinary course of our business, with many of the leading Scotland Yard officials, and could usually count upon securing admission to places closed even to the most insinuating of Press reporters. Upon the present occasion, I happened to be well known to the inspector in charge, and was promptly passed through the cordon of police stationed in front of the house.

A simple question to the landlord elicited the reply that the name of the missing lodger, in whose room the body had been found, was Webb; and this information embarrassed me at first as to the course I should follow. I felt under no Spartan obligation to volunteer statements as to his condition and movements the night before which might do him harm. Yet, upon the other hand, these very statements might be of the utmost importance to the police in their efforts to get at the truth of the unfortunate gentleman's death. I therefore decided to await further developments.

The room was poorly furnished and very untidy, as might be expected from an occupant of Webb's bohemian habits. The bed, I noted, had not been slept in overnight, though the appearance of the counterpane indicated that some one wearing very dirty boots had lain on it. Upon an old-fashioned, broad-seated sofa lay the corpse, so entirely covered in a long cloak as to leave nothing visible except brown leather leggings and thick-soled boots. A constable was seated a yard or so away, evidently in especial charge of the remains.

"No clue yet, I suppose, as to his identity?" I remarked to Inspector Traill, who had accompanied me into the room, as I glanced toward the sofa.

"No," was the reply, "except that the style of the clothing seems to indicate a foreigner or one recently returned from abroad. The post-mortem this afternoon may reveal something; but, so far, we only know that a stranger was found here a few hours ago strangled to death."

"Strangled!" I repeated. "That is rather out of the common nowadays, isn't it?"

"Perhaps so," he rejoined; "but the indications are too plain to be mistaken in this case." So saying, he made a sign to the constable, who removed the cloak sufficiently to expose the dead man's face and throat. The inspector was clearly right. The unnaturally prominent eyes, the partly-protruding tongue, the discolored skin of the throat, pointed to the cause of death plainly enough. The marks upon the throat had for me an especial interest, and I studied them so long and carefully that Inspector Traill looked at me inquiringly when my examination was over.

"The man who effected that job must have very large as well as very powerful hands," I remarked, "judging from the length and width of his grip."

Inspector Traill pricked up his ears, so to speak, and nodded approvingly. We had often had friendly discussions as to the value of deductive methods in difficult cases, and, although he was wont to wax very scornful over the fictitious triumphs of Vidocq and Sherlock Holmes, he was not above taking what he termed a "common-sense hint" upon a point that had escaped his own observation.

"That's so," he said, quietly, producing his note book. "Anything else?"

"Yes," I continued. "He is a member of the working class, probably an artisan in one of the so-called 'black trades.'"

"What makes you think so?"

"A well-defined thumb-mark upon the strangled man's collar," I explained. "A dirty, coarse-grained thumb-mark, such as could only be produced by a thumb well-stained by iron-filings or other metallic dust."

"H'm!" growled the inspector. "You are pushing your inference rather too far, I think. However, I'll have a good look at the mark myself, presently. And now, I'd like to know, Mr. Weston, why you seem to be so interested in this case? Murders are not much in your line, as a rule, are they?"

"No," I answered, "they are not. But I'm an old friend of the missing tenant of this room—Tom Webb—"

"The deuce you are!" he interrupted. "Then I'm afraid you're the friend of an extremely bad lot!"

"You're wrong!" I protested, warmly. "There is no radical badness in the man, though he has wrecked himself through drink. I daresay the landlord here has given him an evil character as a frequenter of low pot-houses, and who is always in arrears with his rent. Likely enough; but I'd stake my life he is utterly incapable of harm or part in a crime like this."

"Then why run away like any other guilty man?"

"I don't believe he was able to find his way back here at all in last night's fog," I said, confidently. And, without further preface, I narrated how Tom had left my rooms drunk, and with a further supply of purloined whisky, at 2 a. m. I added my conviction that either some accident had befallen him, or that he was lying in some lock-up, too hopelessly intoxicated to give any account of himself.

Inspector Traill heard me out, and then quietly produced a latch-key. "It was found upon the carpet here this morning, and the landlord identifies it by a private mark as the one used by Webb. So that, innocent or guilty, it is clear he found his way back here; and, although that scarcely convicts him of having choked a man to death, still, taken in conjunction with his flight, it looks rather black against him."

The discovery of the latch-key was certainly a deadly blow to my theory that Tom had never reached his home at all; and I was beginning to realize that the experienced detective's suspicions were, after all, in strict accord with all the available evidence. But I still utterly scouted the idea of Tom having had any active share in the crime.

"Tom Webb choke a man!" I exclaimed, indignantly. "Why, he hasn't strength in his wasted, skinny hands to choke a chicken! And, besides, the marks upon that poor fellow's throat indicate the fingers of a giant."

"That's right enough," assented Traill. "From your description of this Webb, he simply couldn't have done this job himself. But, as you know well enough, this is one of the worst districts in London for scoundrels of every sort and race. Your friend's drunken habits seem to have led him into all sorts of low 'dens,' that is, all sorts of rascally company, and I'm afraid you'll find he was persuaded or entrapped into complicity, at all events, into this affair. Then, I suppose, he took fright and ran away. However, we shall probably soon learn his version of the matter. He cannot have got very far away, and a full description of him has already been circulated."

Neither the exact results of the post-mortem nor the verdict of the coroner's jury had any special interest for me; and, moreover, they would be published in late editions of the evening papers. So I thanked Inspector Traill and pushed my way, not without some trouble, through the dense crowd of loafers and disreputables that always seem to gather around the scene of a crime. I had other important inquiry work on hand, which I could not afford to neglect in order to indulge in speculation as to the exact cause of Tom Webb's disappearance.

Not until late that night did I have an opportunity of scanning a "special" 'Westminster,' from which I learned that the inquest had resulted in a verdict of "Willful murder against Thomas Webb and some other person, or persons unknown."

CHAPTER III.

At Fault.

I saw Inspector Traill several times during the following week, and he seemed more and more worried and anxious each time we met. The reason was simple. The Cato Street case had been intrusted to his special charge, and had proved to be one of unexpected difficulty. It had seemed to be a foregone conclusion that the missing tenant, Tom Webb, must inevitably be traced and captured within a few hours. Yet, so far, not the faintest clue to his whereabouts had been obtained; while, as for his supposed accomplices, they were equally undiscoverable.

This, from a detective's point of view, was a most aggravating state of affairs; but, perhaps, worse still, he had, despite the most strenuous efforts, entirely failed to establish the identity of the murdered man. I attempted to console him by pointing out that the entire police force was equally responsible for these failures; which were due to the stupidity or laziness of an army of constables scattered all over the country; but he found no comfort in my words.

"That sounds reasonable enough," he remarked, idamly; "but it won't go down with my chiefs, nor with the public, either, for the matter of that. The man in charge of the case is the man the chief looks to for results. I am in charge of this case. I have got no results, and I'll be hanged if I see any way of getting any!"

"Then you deem this case to be an exceptionally difficult one?"

"Yes, now I do; though I did not think so at first," he acknowledged. "Webb's capture seemed certain, and I counted on hearing something in the Soho slums; especially as I believed in your theory as to the murderer being a workingman. You ought to know, by this time, Mr. Weston, that in tracking down a criminal, we rely, almost entirely, upon what is officially termed 'information received.' And, of course, this simply means information extorted by bribes or threats from the suspected man's pals. But very careful inquiries have satisfied me that, in the present case, no such information will ever be forthcoming; because the man I want had no pals, at least among the known law-breaking lot."

"Well, but what about Webb?" I asked. "I am convinced he did not leave the house in Cato street by himself, otherwise he could not possibly (in his drunken condition) have escaped the search that was almost immediately made for him. It was the other man—the man with the strong grip—who got him away; and it's very long odds against his being alive now. It stands to reason that the murderer would not intrust the safety of his neck to the keeping of a nervous drunkard, who might, at any moment, blab the fatal secret. No, no! The reason Webb has not been found is that he has been made away with."

There was a ring of conviction in Traill's voice which, backed up by the obvious force of his reasoning, made me feel very despondent as to poor Webb's fate. Let me frankly admit that it was not from any especial love I bore the man. I doubt if it were possible for any one (except, perhaps, some poor martyr-wife) to care long for a confirmed drunkard. But I was very fond of his youngest sister, Madge. We were tacitly, almost avowedly, engaged to be married; and, in every letter I received from her, she begged for news of her brother, who had long ceased to correspond with any of his own people. Hitherto I had managed to evade telling her the truth as to Tom's downfall. Why make her, and the kindly old couple, her parents, miserable by telling them that the hope and pride of the family had gone utterly to the dogs? And so I had kept back the real facts, hoping (almost against hope) that he would turn over a new leaf and be a man again.

I had latterly felt more awkwardly situated than ever with respect to Madge, and had put off writing to her because I simply had not the moral courage even to hint at the disaster which had overtaken her vagabond brother. I preferred, somehow, to let her get the first news of the trouble through some other source—say, a chance newspaper paragraph. Yet I felt now that I could not well remain silent any longer in the face of Inspector Traill's conviction that Tom had met with foul play. The question simply was, how I could best break the sad news.

As so often happens in real life, the problem solved itself. By the last post that night I received two letters, one of them from Madge. It was very short, but very much to the point. She implored me to ascertain, and let her know at once, that the inclosed cutting from the 'Dorset Courier' had no reference to her brother. The inclosure ran thus:

"Another London Mystery—The corpse of a gentleman, believed to be a foreigner, has been discovered in a Soho lodging house. The medical evidence shows death to have resulted from strangulation, and as neither money nor valuables of any sort were found on deceased, it is inferred that plunder was the motive of the crime. The tenant of the room in which the body was found was a man named Tom Webb, described as a journalist and as of notoriously intemperate habits. He, however, has not been seen since the eve of the gruesome discovery, and the coroner's jury had no hesitation in arriving at a verdict of willful murder against him and other persons unknown. The police are of opinion that several persons must have been concerned in the affair, but are very reticent as to such clues as they possess. We understand that the deceased has not been identified."

Poor little Madge! I could quite realize her anxiety. She knew, of course, that Tom's profession was that of a journalist, and I daresay she more than suspected his weakness for strong waters. And, now, here was a man, thus closely tallying in description and of the same name, charged with murder! Poor Madge! My heart bled for her! But what could I do to comfort her?

I did my best. I wrote her a long letter, stating the case as hopefully as I could. Of Tom's absolute innocence of any deliberate share in the atrocious crime I expressed my absolute conviction; but there was no blinking the facts that the body was found in his room, and that he had himself disappeared.

"Of course," I added, "this was bound to direct a certain amount of suspicion against him, and, as you must see yourself, justified the verdict of the coroner's jury, in the absence of other evidence. But it will console you to know that even the detective officer in charge of the case no longer believes in Tom's guilt, though he thinks he was made a tool of. So be a brave girl, Madge, and don't fret. You know that, from the very nature of my business, I am in a good position to watch the course of events; and I need hardly assure you that I will leave no effort unmade to clear up this distressing affair. I shall, if I possibly can manage it, run down to Dorchester within a few days, and it is quite on the cards I may bring you some good news. Meanwhile, keep up a brave heart, and believe steadfastly in poor Tom's innocence."

The other letter was a somewhat bulky one. It was from Inspector Traill, and the contents proved to be of most absorbing interest. Apparently, the inspector had been very busy when he sent his dispatch, which contained merely a few words, scrawled in pencil, on a scrap of paper, to explain their drift. "See what you can make of inclosed notes," the message ran, "and let me know results as soon as possible." Apparently, Mr. Traill was coming round to deductive methods, after all.

The notes were somewhat voluminous and in a very disconnected order; but they included everything that had so far been discovered, and amply repaid perusal. Personally, I was rather methodical in my habits, and, as I read, I took down some more condensed notes of my own.

Nature of Case—Murder by strangulation of man unknown, reported by Constable Dwyer, at 10:20 a. m. Nov. 20th, as having occurred at 18, Cato street, Soho. From statement of the landlord, George Marsh, it appears that he entered a room on the ground floor occupied by one Thomas Webb, a journalist, who was in arrear with his rent. Webb was not there, nor had the bed been slept in; but upon the sofa lay the dead body of a stranger covered by a cloak. Webb's latch-key was found upon the floor.

Description of deceased.—Length, 5 feet 10 inches. Strong build; well-nourished, apparently about thirty-two years of age. Hair: dark-brown. Eyes: grey. Teeth: sound, regular; somewhat discolored, as by chewing. Dressed in blue serge suit, with brown gaiters and heavy boots, all, seemingly, of foreign make. Linen marked L. A. No valuables or papers whatever. Two holy-marks: letters L. A. tattooed upon left forearm, with small anchor; on right breast a floating spar, also tattooed, with R. N. upon it.

The Missing Lodger, Webb.—Aged about thirty; but looks older. Average height, thin, round-shouldered, slouching gait. Dark hair, grey in places. Blue eyes, usually bloodshot. Reputed to be habitually a drunkard, but nothing known against him otherwise.

Result of Inquiries.—So far, practically nil. Webb has not been traced, nor is there any clue to the identity of the murdered man. Webb would seem to be physically incapable of the crime; and the theory gains ground that he, too, has been made way with by the actual perpetrator.

There are very copious notes regarding the post-mortem and the inquest, but they did not throw any fresh light upon the subject, so far as I could judge.

Lastly, there were two poorly-developed photographs of the murdered man's ghastly, swollen face, pasted on two pieces of white card board. They might, of course, some day prove of use as a means of identification, although I doubted whether the unfortunate gentleman's most intimate friend would ever be very positive in recognizing those distorted features.

Now, all this was very interesting, but it did not help much towards the elucidation of Tom Webb's fate; and such was the opinion I expressed to Mr. Traill when I took him back his notes and photographs.

"H'm! Perhaps not," he assented, somewhat gruffly. "But I think it improves my chances of finding out who the dead man was, and my only hope of working the case lies through him. It seems most likely, judging from the tattoo marks, that he was, or had been at some time, a sailor by profession. Indeed, one might almost go to the length of believing him to have been in the Royal navy."

"Why so?" I inquired.

"That's how I interpret the letters R. N. on his right breast," was the reply, given with a certain amount of self-complacency. "How does the idea strike you?"

"It sounds reasonable enough," I assented, "though they are just as likely to be the initials of his own name."

A PENALTY FOR BEING POLITE.

They Put You Off the Car in Hamburg for Giving Seat to a Lady.

It is more difficult to be polite in the city of Hamburg than in any other place in Europe. There the most chivalrous man has to think twice before giving up his seat to a lady, as he may be turned off the car for politeness. It seems that the Hamburg trolley cars will seat, according to size, twenty to twenty-eight persons, ten to fourteen on a side. In addition, four persons are allowed on the front and five persons on the back platform. When the car is full the conductor hangs out a sign, "Besetzt," which means "occupied," and is absolutely forbidden to take up another passenger until some one gets off the car.

Sometimes when the conductor is in the front collecting fares, a lady will step on the car, which is already "occupied." As there is no conductor on hand to prevent her, the lady steps inside, and the gentleman who may offer her a seat comes out and takes his stand on the platform. When the conductor, after going his rounds, returns to his post, he promptly requests the gentleman to step off the car, as he has forfeited his seat, and the car is fully "occupied." Should he refuse to leave the car, he is put off. The policemen on the streets are instructed to watch the cars sharply, and if they find a car carries even one more passenger than its proper complement, the conductor is fined 72 cents, which is paid to a charity fund of the street railway company.—Philadelphia Post.

Not That Time.

"I—I changed a ten-dollar bill for a man on the train," said an old man who arrived at the union depot in Cleveland the other day.

"And you got two counterfeit fives for it, of course," said the depot policeman. "Well, it serves you right. A man of your age ought to have some sense about him if he's ever to get any. I can't help you any, and I wouldn't—"

"Oh, but I don't want any help," interrupted the old man. "What I was goin' to say was that I changed a ten-dollar bill for a man, and somehow or other he gimme back three fives, and all as good as they make 'em. Didn't know but you'd like to hear of it, you know. Got bayseed on my hat and turnip tops in my pockets, but I don't always get left—not hardly ever."

Still Harder Work.

Mr. Close, Sr.—What! more money? You seem to think that dollars are picked up in the street. I want you to understand that I had to work hard for every cent I've got.

His Son—Yes; and I have to work harder for every cent I get.—Life.

A XMAS PAINTING.

Diomede was a painter. He belonged to the Impressionist school. True, the word "school" is an insult to an Impressionist. The very fact of his existence is a protest against schools; he can never be encompassed by a school; it is against his canons to take instruction in anything. He must discover everything by intuition, drawing, composition, coloring, lights and shadows.

And then, also, Diomede was a good-looking fellow.

Handsome women liked him. He liked lampreys, oysters, jellied snipe, champagne and Bordeaux.

But his ambition exceeded all his other passions. It was boundless.

He didn't care a snap for the old masters. He ignored the Italians. In his eyes Rubens was a play-card painter, Rembrandt a sign-painter, De La Croix a dauber. Of his contemporaries, Meissonier was a bon-ton colorist, Makart not a painter at all, nothing but a kalsominer.

Nothing but rubbish, all that has ever been put on canvas.

Poetry was nothing! The ideal was insanity! Impression—that was everything!

Diomede's pictures were creations, all of them, of extraordinary conception!

His "Sleeping Wench" was something wonderful. Only the soles of her feet were visible. Her head was out of sight. It was hanging down over the further side of a cot. The rest was concealed by her raised knees, for her feet were propped up against the spring-board. A long arm extending the whole length of the picture and a fish clutching a whisky flask bore witness that the woman sleeping there was a sailor-wench.

His animal paintings were still better. His "Drinking Cow" represented a large dairy stable from which two horns and two ears protruded. The rest of the head was in the stable—quite naturally. Above it a serpentine growth stretched, which, had it been worked out more carefully, might have been discerned to be the cow's tail, with which she was switching the flies away while she was drinking.

His landscapes, too, were quite original. Conspicuous among them was a sunrise at midnight on the isle of Ava Saxa, at sight of which a friend of his once exclaimed:

"I say, old man, I hardly think your uncle's face is quite as red as all that." He thought it was a portrait. But it was only the sun's orb, and what seemed to be the shoulders were two black cliffs on the isle of Ava Saxa, and the white expanse in front, which looked like a pique waistcoat, was a field of snow.

His placards of still-lifs were famous on account of the circumstances that they could be hung with any corner up without detracting from their excellence.

The picture of his that created an especial sensation looked, when viewed from a distance of ten feet, like a contemplative thought floating before the disk of the rising moon. On closer inspection it proved to be a rat crawling out of a hole and making for an overturned copper stewing pan, the bottom of which formed the background.

His ability was also exemplified in battle pictures. Notable among these was the "Cossack Charge." One hundred horses in a row, just as many Cossack heads—the shoulder of the furthermost one also appearing—and the same number of lances, all making for a trench the opposite embankment of which was so far that each Cossack of them, together with the horses, was inevitably doomed to suicide the very next moment. But it is precisely this which constitutes the genius of conception. For the second line of Cossacks, pressing on behind, shall thus be enabled to gallop comfortably across the ditch evened by the bodies of their self-sacrificing comrades.

Despite this versatility, he could not succeed in getting a picture hung in the Salon. Old painters are narrow-minded.

The "Exhibition of the Rejected" gave him all the space he wanted. A much larger public admired his paintings there than if they had been accepted at the Salon. But, somehow, nobody seemed anxious to buy. And yet they were offered at a high enough figure. Not one of them was marked below 10,000 francs. This is also a dogma of impressionism, that none of its disciples shall dispose of his pictures cheap.

They represented a whole treasury. But whenever M. Diomede inquired about the prospects the art dealer who had given him an advance upon them always scratched his head and looked dubious.

"Do you know, M. Diomede," said M. Luchs, the art dealer, one day, "I have met somebody who is making all sorts of inquiries about you?"

"A European?"

"No. An American."

"If it were a European I wouldn't care to waste any time on him. Is he an oil king?"

"No. It is a queen, the owner of a silver mine. Miss Deborah Stopps."

"Ah! Miss Deborah Stopps, who is so celebrated on account of her diamonds, and likewise on account of not permitting any cooking to be done on Sunday and not frequenting the theaters! You see, that's a woman I esteem."

"She is a zealous Methodist. She keeps a pastor of her own, and is homilied by him every Sabbath."

"Well, and what does she like best about my pictures?"

"The signature."

"Pshaw!"

"She admires the creator of the pictures. She would be even willing to make you a present of her hand and her millions."

M. Diomede jammed his hat upon his head.

"You are joking."

"Never. The lady is very handsome."

"So much worse. If she were homely she might at least serve as an interesting study for me."

"You are not asked to paint her, but to take her."

"That is to say, vice versa. I am to sell myself to her. Now look here, M. Luchs, I can't work myself up to an impression on such a thing. A young man who allows himself to be taken by a rich young woman and afterward rides behind his wife's team is a pup. I don't fancy that style of love-making, a marble-heart and silk-clad woman beside it: a young woman who reads aloud, an old man who drinks coffee, a waiter who serves with a tray, a lap-dog, yawning with tedium. I detest that sort of pictures. I shall not marry until the whole world recognizes whom I am. When connoisseurs begin to vie with one another for the purchase of my pictures; when I have reached that point at which I shall be able to come to you with a blank canvas on which nothing has yet been painted except my name, and I ask you, 'What is this canvas worth?' and you say, 'Twenty thousand francs,' and I reply, 'It shall be ready for you in a week,' then I will be ready to wed. My own self-respect demands that I be able to say to Miss Deborah Stopps, the silver queen, 'I take you.'"

"Nobly spoken!" said M. Luchs. "That's the kind of youth I like."

A few days later M. Diomede was awakened at 10 o'clock in the morning. He was told to hurry to the art dealer. A purchaser had come for one of his pictures.

"Who is he?"

"An American."

"What is he?"

"A cotton king."

Diomede hurried to get to the art dealer. He was there within three hours. The American was waiting for him. M. Luchs introduced them to each other.

"M. Diomede—Mr. Vonderguld."

Mr. Vanderguld was a tall, thin old man, pale, with that complexion which goes with total abstinence from spirituous drink.

"Are your pictures for sale?"

"That's why they are placed on exhibition."

"What is their price?"

"You can see. The 'Sleeping Wench,' 10,000 francs; the 'Drinking Cow,' 11,000 francs; the 'Sunshine,' 12,000 francs; the 'Still Life,' 13,000 francs, the 'Battle Picture,' 14,000 francs—total—I don't know how much. Just add them together."

Mr. Vanderguld shook his head.

"In my gallery, my dear sir, in which Europe's most famous artists are represented, there is not a picture that has stood me less than 15,000 francs."

"That's easily remedied. Let each of the five be 15,000 francs, then."

"We can place the 'Battle Picture' at 20,000."

"So that in round numbers it shall all foot up 80,000 francs? Agreed!"

Mr. Vanderguld took out his check-book and gave M. Diomede the amount. Then he stuck his visiting card into the frame of each of the five pictures as evidence of his having purchased them. He directed the art-dealer to adjust the figures on the price-list tacked on at the lower part of each frame and to leave the pictures on exhibition for another week, after which he would take them with him to the New World.

The report of this wonderful sale spread rapidly through the metropolis. And now the public rushed with a vengeance to admire the pictures which America had captured. And everybody now discovered the hidden beauties which nobody had been able to detect before. And from that day M. Diomede became one of the most celebrated artists of Europe, whose pictures are shown only for an admission fee, and are placed on pedestals beneath canopies and illuminated with electrical effects.

Now he could proudly step before the silver queen and ask for her hand. He got it, too, and became a universally envied husband.

Thenceforth the Salon did not reject his productions, either. And no matter what price was placed upon them, there was certain to be a card stuck into their frames the very first week of the exhibition: "Purchased by Mr. Vanderguld."

M. Diomede now possessed fame, a brush every stroke of which was well paid for; a handsome, loving, cultured, good-natured wife, a magnificent palace and a still more magnificent studio; a coach, a hunter and a chef.

But geniuses have a way of never being content with their lot. However, there are others, too, who when they are very fortunate in love fall a prey to jealousy. M. Diomede could never understand why Mrs. Deborah would not allow her cook to work on Sunday, nor the horses to be harnessed, nor why she never went to the theater. His wife told him curtly that she was a Methodist and a strict observer of the Sabbath.

But what worried him more was the secrecy in which his wife shrouded one of the rooms. Its door was always locked, and Diomede was never permitted to enter. His wife withdrew regularly every Sunday to this room and spent much time there. Eavesdropping servants ascertained that she would speak with a man in there. When M. Diomede took her to account for it she replied that she was engaged in pious exercises in the locked room according to the precepts of her religion, and the man whose voice was heard through the double door was a Methodist preacher.

"I should like to take a look at that preacher?"

"You would regret it exceedingly."

"Has the preacher such a terrible look?"

"He has."

"And are you not afraid of him?"

"He does not seem terrible to me."

"If you continue this mystery I shall institute proceedings for divorce."

"You have no ground that will hold water before the law."

"Well, I'll discover it yet."

From that time on M. Diomede surrounded his palace with spies, who were instructed to give him immediate notice as soon as the mysterious visitor called again. He determined to break into his wife's secret chamber with witnesses and police, so that he might have absolute proof of her faithlessness.

He was just then engaged on a painting which was to be the ne plus ultra of impressionist art. Christmas morning the picture was all but finished. There was only the sky and the star to be touched up with a finishing grace.

Mr. Vanderguld again came from America. He inspected the picture before it was taken off the easel.

"The price of this one will be 150,000 francs," said Diomede carelessly.

"I will pay the price."

When a painter's brush can conjure 150,000 francs out of nothing he may proudly cast aside a wife who has millions.

He was busy at his work when the spies came running in to him to announce that the mysterious preacher was again in the secret room alone with Mrs. Deborah. Diomede ran there immediately in his working jacket taking two friends along. On the way from the studio to the palace they picked up a policeman and a locksmith. The whole crowd of them rushed into the palace. The secret chamber's door was locked now, too.

"In the name of the law!" thundered the policeman.

There was no response. The door was then forced by the locksmith. Beyond was another door. M. Diomede himself knocked and thumped at this.

"Let me in. I am here. Your husband!"

Mrs. Deborah replied:

"Go away from here. Do not come in. You will feel worse than if you died."

The inner door was locked with a spring. At Diomede's order it was battered down—Diomede, his two friends, the policeman, the locksmith and the servants.

Before him Diomede saw Mr. Vanderguld.

"Mr. Vanderguld!" he stammered, faintly.

"I am not Mr. Vanderguld, but Ellis Stopps, the father of Mrs. Deborah. I purchased all your pictures. You can see them hung around the walls here. 'The Sleeping Wench,' the 'Rising Sun,' the 'Battle Picture' and all the others. They remain hidden from the world. Here they are seen by nobody. I was just now considering with my daughter where we could hang the sunset picture, as it is rather large. When it is done send it here. I'll pay for it."

Diomede was turned to stone. His good friends almost split with suppressed laughter. The policeman entered in his notebook the circumstances of the case for his official report. And Mrs. Deborah, going to M. Diomede, said:

"Now, sir, I shall institute proceedings for a separation. A man who has made himself ridiculous does not deserve a wife."

The World Will Join in Christmas of 1900.

It is planned to have a great Christmas celebration in 1900, which will be begun with the ringing of the "Peace and Liberty Bell" in Jerusalem. It is expected that this will be the most joyous Christmas since the first one, and that on the first Christmas of the new century the whole Christian world will join simultaneously in a grand chorus, "Peace on earth." It will be one of the most novel ceremonies ever conceived, and preparations are now being made for its successful consummation. The committee having the celebration in charge has invited the Peace Bell committee to meet in the Holy Land Christmas eve, 1900, on the spot where the shepherds received the message: "Glory to God in the highest." Upon this occasion, and at the same time, the corner stone of the great temple to be erected in the Holy Land will be laid. A large number of people is expected to attend this ceremony, as the celebration will be one of the most memorable events in the history of the Christian world.

As now proposed, the bell will be connected with the cables reaching to all parts of the earth. Then, half hour before the time is set for its ringing, all telegraphic business to be stopped, and every system in the world will be connected with the Jerusalem wire. The thousands of wires will speed the message to millions of waiting people when the bell is rung. Every congregation in Christendom will be assembled in its place of worship. When the bell is rung the message, "Peace on earth," will be flashed over the world at the same moment, and a grand glorious chorus singing the doxology will rise from millions of throats. Never in the world's history has such an idea been conceived and carried out and never has there been such a grand chorus as will raise their voice in praise and rejoicing at the same time. The entire Christian world will take part, and those who evolved the idea are busying themselves preparing for the greatest Christian demonstration ever known.

Her Query?

What shall I give him? Oh, dear, oh, dear!
It's the same old worriment every year!
Men hate pocketbooks—bless their souls,
They slap their money around in rolls!
Slippers? They're looked on as a joke.
Pipes and tobacco? He doesn't smoke.
Neckties and collars? He has a lot.
Ivory poker set? I guess not!
Watches and chains? He possesses two.
What does he want? If I only knew!
"What does he want? Why, my dear, my dear,
What but this white little hand right here.
Often he's asked it in prose and rhyme."
"Yes, he shall have it—at Christmas time!"

One Cause of Trouble.

She—I wish Christmas really was a season of general peace and good will.

He—Well, it might be if somebody hadn't introduced the custom of giving Christmas presents.—Puck.

Christmas.

Comes yearly;
Cost dearly;
Broke—nearly.

"No city Christmas for me," said Uncle Jeduthin, from New Canaan, the other day. 'He'd one once an' ats' got over it yit. Dinner at eight o'clock at night—the idee of sich a thing, pratty near bed time—an' a French bill o' fare that I couldn't make head or tail on. Turkey stuffed with chestnuts, instead o' bread stuffin' with thyme in it, an' tastin' jest as if 'twas stewed! No punkin pie—yes, there was, an' it had sugar all over it, b'gosh! No sweet cider, no nuts an' raisins, no nuthin' that was worth eatin'."

His Card.

A commercial traveler on his trip called on a well known chemist. He was nervous as he put his hand in his pocket and handed out a card.

"I represent that concern," said the young man.

"You are fortunate," replied the chemist.

The commercial traveler was encouraged, and said:

"I think so, sir; and the chemist who trades with us is even more so. My firm has the finest line of cosmetics in the country."

"I shouldn't have thought it," slowly replied the chemist. "Her complexion looks natural."

And he handed back the photograph, which the young man had given him by mistake. He took it and left without making any farewell remarks.—London Tit Bits.

Feminine Intuition.

Amy—These yachting terms beat me. Now, what on earth did Bob mean when he said they did their best to pinch up the Shamrock, but couldn't get her within a point of the Columbia?

Susie (with a sudden inspiration)—Why, I have it. They must have been in stays.

Amy—That's it, of course; and you know the Shamrock's waist—I mean beam measure—is so much more than the Columbia's. No wonder they did not succeed.—Brooklyn Life.

Other Sorrows.

"It is cruel," said the woman who had just got back from the matinee, "to force a girl to accept a man she does not love as her husband."

"That's right," rejoined Mr. Blykins. "Monopolize all the sympathy. Don't you feel sorry a minute for the worried father when he looks over what the women folks are trying to ring in on the family as a son-in-law. That's one of the tragedies of life which don't count."—Washington Star.

He Doubtless Was.

Henderson—Why did you invite Jackson to spend Sunday with you? It nearly broke his heart when you married Mildred Wilkins.

Williamson—I know it. I thought if Jackson came up and saw how Mildred and her mother rule things in the house over which I am supposed to preside, he would be rather glad of it himself, after all.—Ohio State Journal.

A TAILOR-MADE MAN.

Eustace Kehogan was a man whose ankles turned under the weight of his own responsibility. He went downtown on one side of the street in the morning and came home at eve on the other. He did this to do the right thing by the street and also to keep the earth balanced.

On this cold and cheerful Christmas day that we introduce him to our readers he is attired in one of our nobby pearl-gray tweeds, the overcoat being in our fashionable surtout style, the trousers full and not creased too sharply. His hands are gloved in our special drive in $1.98 walking gloves, backstitched in black. He carries a malacca walking stick. The necktie is to match the suit and the pin to match the necktie. He also wears one of our $7 silk hats and he looks neither to the right nor the left nor to either side of him. For is it not today that he is to meet Aurelia Montravers?

He paces restlessly up and down, and his short pants—of respiration, for his trousers are a perfect fit—show but too plainly his excessive agitation.

"She should have been here long ere this," he mutters. "I could have sworn, too, that she would have been here, for until now she always ran on schedule time." And he taps the ground impatiently with his neat and glossy patent leathers. We have these in congress, button or lace. With the low cuts we are offering a novel idea in gentleman's hose—black silks with miniature Ansonia clocks. They are bound to go.

At last the one for whom he waits appears in sight. It is Aurelia Montravers, the one he loves most deeply.

She is tastefully attired in one of our street toilets—a skirt of striped twilled surah, with a basque of tan and brown plaid-faced cloth. The basque has the favorite coat-skirts which characterized the Louis XVI. period, over which large pocket laps are laid.

She greets him with a gesture of disdain and declines his proffered hand.

"I had half a mind not to come," she says, "so I am here."

"And why do you treat me thus?" he asks. For he is proud of his tailor and knows there are no cantharides on his costume.

"Today, Eustace Kehogan," she answers, "today you saw me standing in an elevated railroad car. You sat there, with others of your kind reading, and you let me stand as if I were a tired shop girl. You let me stand, the woman you profess to love nor proffered me a seat. Does this do honor to your boasted Norman blood?"

"And is love so selfish that it demands a sacrifice such as this?" he asks. "You know, Aurelia Montravers, that I am pictured in all the fashion plates as 'a typical New Yorker.' To get up and give a lady my seat! None but Jerseymen do that. As a typical New Yorker I could not do that. I could not establish a precedent."

She knows his argument is just. She falters and forgives. He sees he is forgiven and would embrace her were it not that he fears it would spoil the set of his surtout.

This is one of the things a well-dressed man should be most careful of. The cloth may be of the best. The cut and fit may be as classic as a sculptor's vision and yet, one careless moment, one instant of forgetfulness, may ruin all. Get our handbook, "How to Fold a Coat; or, the Art of Care for Clothes."

She looks at him, her eyes brimming with tears. "Eustace," she says softly, "is my hat on straight?"

* * * * * * * *

It is Christmas night. They are seated in our property conservatory. They are wearing our property evening dress. She holds her property feather fan, he holds his property opera hat. But 'tis not to pose for our artists' society skit for our next week's issue. They are there on their own hook, like the hat in the hall.

"And, Eustace," she is saying, "I will have my complexion changed to suit your suit." But Eustace Kehogan starts back in horror at her words.

"Never, never!" he cries. "That has happened to me when I have been engaged before. The day preceding my wedding my fiancee changed her complexion, and my frock coat and lavender trousers that matched her former style of beauty fell back a dead loss on my tailor's hands. A week later"—he was sobbing bitterly now—"I saw them exposed for sale in front of Mose Levy's Misfit Clothing Parlor!"

"I know the whole sad story, Eustace," she murmurs. "I was that girl." She notes his astonishment and resumes. "Yet you will do as any swell dresser would—give me another chance to redeem myself?"

And she thinks of how she will look in her handsome bridal toilet of pearl-colored brocade, in low knot design, and plain satin, with embroidered chiffon to match, the Medici collar of gold brocade lined with satin and wired at the top and turned back from the throat. And she does not notice the thick coating of silence which he breaks at last.

"To think that we, us, you and I, me and you, should meet again, and like this!" he mutters. "To think that this should happen, and in society. Society, where nothing ever happens except things. Society, that gives out column dress descriptions to the reporters of green journals who bungle up the terms when writing them out and no one knows the difference! It is too much to believe!"

"Believe a little at a time, Eustace," she whispers softly.

* * * * * * *

Three hours later Eustace Kehogan swayed down the street singing, "He Kissed Her 'Neath the Mistletoe."

He sang it in this wise: "He missed her 'neath the kisstletoe."

But who could tell if it was love or liquor or the consciousness that he was arrayed in garments of exceptional cut and finish, made of strictly high grade English bird's-eye worsted, our own importation?

And this was the meeting between Eustace Kehogan, the man of fashion, and Aurelia Montravers, the rich heiress, that gave society something else to talk of save the Dog Show.

CHRISTMAS CUSTOMS.

"Gift-making is one of the most gracious features of Christmas, and one that I pray may survive all other outgrown customs," writes Florence Hull Winterburn, in the Woman's Home Companion. "When love and sympathy are close counselors there is little fear that we shall make the mistake of leaving out of our little one's stocking the particular thing he has set his heart upon getting. And if his choice is beyond us to gratify, let us come as near to it as we can, and not convert this season into a sort of convenience for ourselves, thrusting upon his reluctant acceptance such prosaic articles as shoes, hats and other essentials of the toilet. For prettier is the German custom of bestowing gaudy trifles that have no use in themselves but are part of the glitter and fashion of the holiday. When it is possible nothing is so good to have as the traditional Christmas tree. In after years memory hangs upon it fondly, and we bless in our hearts the kind hands that took so much trouble to give us pleasure.

"Then the stocking hung up on Christmas eve has a romance all its own. The breakfast table dressed with holly-berries and gifts piled under snowy napkins is a graceful custom, and is far nicer than the blunt handing out of our gifts. Some trouble should be taken to create the welcome element of surprise. We all like it, but it is one of the greatest delights in a child's experience. He finds out before we would choose to have him that what is looked forward to most eagerly seldom turns out well. It is sad philosophy, yet true, that it is dangerous to set one's heart on anything in this world. But the love that hides its intention until the hour of fulfillment, and then lets out its secret in an outburst of generosity, is the best substitute that is ever offered for the special Providence—Santa Claus, and all other gracious myths.

"An example of generosity is seldom lost upon children if it is true, not artificial. They are very willing to live up to their little knowledge, if we allow them the chance, and part of our duty to the day is to encourage in our young people the same kindness we cultivate in ourselves. It is so much easier to learn in youth to be genial, sympathetic and generous than it is after embittering experiences have hardened our hearts."

The Christmas Dinner Table.

Place the table for the Christmas dinner in the center of the room under the chandelier if there is one, and then see that it is perfectly level and the leaves well fitted, writes Mrs. S. T. Rorer in the Ladies' Home Journal. From the chandelier hang a large spray of mistletoe or holly tied with scarlet ribbon. If there be a mantelpiece in the room, bank it with holly and ferns. Arrange a pretty corner, blending all the greens used in decorating. Cover the table first with a heavy cotton flannel cloth, and place over it the spotless linen tablecloth. Place in the center of the table a mat of Christmas ferns, in the center of which stand a high fruit dish filled with polished red apples, grapes and such other fruits as may be obtained. Cover the base of the dish with sprays of holly; on each side of this place cut-glass or china dishes filled with bonbons, olives and salted almonds. The water bottles and a dish or two of celery may occupy the other places.

Christmas.

An old song preserved in the Harleian manuscripts, in the British museum, asserts that it is peculiarly lucky when Christmas falls on a Sunday. "That wynter shall be good," it says; "the somer shall be faire and drye," and the year that follows Christmas will be a "good tyme all thyngs to don."

If there is any virtue in the old superstition, 1899 should be a cheerful twelvemonth. For our own nation, indeed, it promises well. And it would seem singularly fitting that a happy year should begin with the year's happiest day.

"Luck" alone will not ensure prosperity or contentment. But the Companion, while wishing its readers a merry Christmas, assures them of a "good tyme" to follow, if through all the months they cherish the Christmas spirit—the disposition to make the most of one's blessings and the best of one's troubles, and to be thoughtful, hopeful, generous and kind.

Distinct Christmas Influences.

The savor and flavor of "Tiny Tim's" turkey would have been far less subtly delicious had it been set upon the illusion of the novelist, nor fancy of the churchman, that there are influences at work at Christmastide which make ordinary things extraordinary, and common things precious, and little things great. That leaven which has changed the face of the world, and moved the heart of man, and made peace where there was no peace, is in every Christmas present, thought and happy gathering.

The First Celebration of Christmas.

Christmas was first celebrated in the year 98, but it was 40 years later before it was officially adopted as a Christian festival; nor was it until about the fifth century that the day of celebration became permanently fixed on the 25th of December. Up to that time it had been irregularly observed at various times of the year—in December, in April and in May, but most frequently in January.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Hint.

The best of Christmas joy,
Dear little girl and boy,
That comes on that merrymaking day,
Is the happiness of giving
To another child's that living
Where Santa Claus has never found his way.

"Rag time!" said Mrs. Fewclothes grimly; "nothing new about that. It's been 'rag time' with me ever since I married. Why, I haven't had a new dress in fifteen years!"

Saw Her Mistake at Once.

"Uncle Reuben," inquired a city young lady, who was spending a few days with country relatives, "is that chicken by the gate a Brahma?"

"No," replied the farmer, "he's a Leghorn."

"Why, certainly, to be sure!" exclaimed the city girl. "How stupid of me! I can see the horns on his ankles."—Ohio State Journal.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury,

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. "You have a curious custom here," remarked the educated heathen from somewhere in Central Asia, "of boarding up the windows of vacant houses. Is it to show that they are for rent?"

"Not at all," responded the native American. "It is to keep the boys from breaking the panes of glass."

"How odd!" mused the visiting heathen. "I do not remember that I ever heard the missionaries speak of that."—Chicago Tribune.

Getting a Start.

"What makes you so happy this evening, Robby?"

"I got a lickin' in school to-day."

"Well, I shouldn't think that would be likely to make you happy."

"You wouldn't huh? How could a boy ever expect to be a hero if they want any teachers that could say they licked him wuost?"—Chicago Times-Herald.

READ WHAT A PROMINENT PHYSICIAN

Has to say who has had 35 YEARS of active Practice of Medicine:

I have never before in my 35 years of practice of medicine given my testimonial of recommendation to any patent medicine, but there is a remedy, the result of which has come under my own observation; for there is no Disease which has so baffled the medical skill of all ages as Rheumatism and to find a Reliable remedy for the same. At last we have found it in "5 Drops," manufactured by the Swanson Rheumatic Cure Company, Chicago, Ill. The "5 DROPS," has proven itself wonderful for its curative power in Rheumatism, not as a Temporary Reliever only, but to give a Permanent Cure even in chronic cases. Sometime ago, I had among others several Rheumatic cases under my treatment and prescribed for these patients the very best Remedies which I skillfully selected, but without desirable results. I then heard of "5 DROPS" and of its Wonderful Cures, and prescribed it in a few patients who found relief from its use within a few days. After that I prescribed it to a great number and to my surprise, I will say that in the course of Two or Three Weeks after they had used "5 DROPS" and "5 Drop" Plasters they were Cured. Among these were a few who had, for a number of years, been suffering with Chronic Rheumatism, who had piloted themselves around on Crutches. They came to my office without Crutches and told me they were perfectly Well. They give all the credit to "5 DROPS" and to "5 Drop" Plasters and this is their testimony to the Swanson Rheumatic Cure Company for their kindness and for the conscientious way in which they are placing these Wonderful Remedies among suffering humanity, which they told me to write to the Company as an acknowledgement. As I have seen the Curative Power of "5 DROPS" and "5 Drop" Plasters, in a great many instances, I can Truly recommend them and also that the firm is perfectly honest and reliable to deal with.

Headache

Sick headaches! Always trace them to a lazy liver or a sick stomach. Poisonous matter, instead of being thrown out, is reabsorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, awful, throbbing, sickening pain. CASCARETS remove the cause by stimulating the liver, making the poison move on and out, and purifying the blood. The effect is almost instantaneous. Ladies, whose sensitive organisms are especially prone to sick headaches, do not suffer, but find relief in CASCARETS Candy Cathartic.

BULLER REPULSED

BOERS ADD ANOTHER TO THEIR STRING OF VICTORIES.

Attempt to Cross the Tugela River Is Frustrated and Buller Retires in Order to Avoid Greater Losses, Leaving Eleven Guns Behind—British Losses Reported to Have Been Heavy—Enemy Suddenly Opened a Galling Fire at Short Range—Another Division Will Be Mobilized.

London, Dec. 17.—The war office has received a dispatch announcing that Gen. Buller has met with a serious reverse, losing ten guns. Gen. Buller was attempting to cross the Tugela river. Finding it impossible to attain his object he retired in order to avoid greater losses. He left eleven guns behind. The following is the text of Gen. Buller's dispatch announcing his reverse:

"Buller to Lansdowne: Chieveley, Dec. 15, 6:20 p. m.—I regret to report a serious reverse. I moved in full strength from our camp near Chieveley at 4 o'clock this morning. There are two fordable places in the Tugela river, and it was my intention to force a passage through at one of them. They are about two miles apart. My intention was to force one or the other with one brigade, supported by a central brigade. Gen. Hart was to attack the left ford, Gen. Hildyard the right ford and Gen. Lyttleton was to take the center and to support either.

"Early in the day I saw that Gen. Hart would not be able to force a passage and I directed him to withdraw.

"He had, however, attacked with great gallantry, and his leading battalion, the Connaught Rangers, I fear, suffered a great deal. Col. I. G. Brooke was seriously wounded. I then ordered Gen. Hildyard to advance, which he did, and his leading regiment, the East Surrey, occupied Colenso station and the houses near the bridge. That moment I heard that the whole artillery I had sent to support the attack, the One Hundred and Sixty-fifth and One Hundred and Sixty-sixth field batteries and six naval twelve-pounder quick-firers, under Col. Long, had advanced close to the river in Long's desire to be within effective range.

"It proved to be full of the enemy, who suddenly opened a galling fire at close range, killing all their horses and the gunners were compelled to stand to their guns.

"Some of them took shelter in a donga, and desperate efforts were made to bring out the field guns. The fire, however, was too severe, and only two were saved by Capt. Scofield and some drivers, whose names I will furnish.

"Another most gallant attack with three teams was made by an officer, whose name I will obtain. Of the eighteen horses, thirteen were killed, and as several drivers were wounded, I would not allow another attempt, as it seemed they would be a shell mark, sacrificing life to a gallant attempt to force the passage.

"Unsupported by artillery, I ordered the troops to withdraw, which they did in good order.

"Throughout the day a considerable force of the enemy was pressing on my right flank, but was kept back by mounted men under Lord Dundonald and part of Gen. Barton's brigade. The day was intensely hot and most trying on the troops, whose conduct was most excellent. We have abandoned ten guns and lost by shell fire one. The losses in Gen. Hart's brigade are, I fear, heavy, although the proportion of severely wounded, I hope, is not large. The Fourteenth and Sixty-sixth field batteries also suffered severe losses. We have retired to our camp at Chieveley."

Worst Since Indian Mutiny.

London, Dec. 17.—The news of Gen. Buller's reverse was received so late that general comment of the morning papers is confined to perfunctory remarks of regret and hopes that Gen. Buller will be able to regain his position. This last check is regarded as the most serious check to British arms since the Indian mutiny. The Times says:

"Since the days of the Indian mutiny the nation has not been confronted with so painful and anxious a situation. Plainly Gen. Buller's advance is paralyzed for the moment, as are also Lord Methuen's and Gen. Gatacre's."

The depression over the defeat of Great Britain's trusted and idolized commander is all the greater as, during the last forty-eight hours there has been reports of the relief of Ladysmith. On receiving the news the war office decided to mobilize still another division and to replace the lost artillery. The reinforcements will be rushed off as speedily as possible. Fifteen transports are due to arrive at Cape Town between Dec. 15 and Jan. 8, with about 15,000 troops of all arms, but unless Gen. Buller is able to renew the attack, which is extremely doubtful, the British generals will be compelled for another fortnight or more to remain practically on the defensive. The latest dispatches indicate the continued bombardment of Ladysmith, whose position is now perilous.

Steamer on the Rocks.

Chicago, Dec. 17.—News reached here that the big steamer Arthur Orr is wrecked on the rocks at the entrance of Georgian bay. Tugs were immediately sent from Port Huron to the wreck. It is reported that the vessel is in an exposed position and will be a total loss if not rescued soon. The vessel cost $225,000.

Recruiting for the Boers.

Lima, Ohio, Dec. 17.—Jerome Shine, a strong anti-British sympathizer and a prominent business man, has opened an office here for the receipt of names of those willing to go to South Africa. He already has several hundred applicants, nearly all of whom are of Irish or Dutch descent.

Killed by a Train.

Marfa, Tex., Dec. 17.—A freight train ran into a hack at East crossing. Two persons were killed and two others severely injured.

Royalty to Assist at Vatican.

Rome—The Duchess of Sweden and Norway has notified the Vatican that she will assist at the opening of the holy door. It is also reported that the Duke of Norfolk is conducting the first English pilgrimage.

To Tax Department Stores.

Berlin—The Prussian finance ministry has completed the department store tax plan. All dry goods departments will be counted as one branch. The tax will be according to the number of other separate branches.

BRITISH REPULSED.

Most Serious Event of the South African War.

London, Dec. 15.—The war office has received the following dispatch from Gen. Methuen, dated Tuesday, Dec. 12:

"Our artillery shelled a very strong position held by the enemy in a long, high kopje, from 4 o'clock until dusk Sunday. It rained hard last night. The Highland brigade attacked at daybreak on Monday the south end of the kopje, but failed. The Guards were ordered to protect the Highlanders' right and rear. The cavalry and mounted infantry, with a howitzer artillery battery, attacked the enemy on the left and the Guards on the right, supported by field artillery and howitzer artillery. They shelled the position from daybreak, and at 1:15 I sent the Gordons to support the Highland brigade. The troops held their own in front of the enemy's intrenchments until dusk, the position extending, including the kopje, for a distance of six miles toward Modder river. To-day I am holding my position and intrenching myself. I had to face at least 12,000 men. Our loss was great."

British Forces Retire.

London, Dec. 15.—Gen. Forestier-Walker, telegraphing from Cape Town at 3:30 p. m. yesterday, sends the following dispatch from Lord Methuen, dated Modder River, Tuesday, Dec. 12, 7:30 p. m.:

"As the Boers occupied their trenches strongly this morning I retired in perfect order here, where I am in security.

"I have gathered from some of the prisoners and from our men with the ambulances who talked with the Boers that the enemy's losses were terrible, some companies being completely wiped out. The Boers have been most kind to my wounded."

Highlanders Mowed Down.

Modder River, Dec. 15.—The British casualties include the marquis of Winchester, major of the Second battalion Coldstream Guards, who was killed, and Col. Downham, of the First battalion Gordon Highlanders, who was mortally wounded.

When the Highlanders met the murderous point blank fire of the Boers about two hundred were mowed down. The Black Watch regiment, on reforming, was able to muster only 160 men. The Boers lost heavily in the trenches and also in the wire entanglements when they came into the open in an attempt to make a flank attack on the British.

The terrific British artillery fire provoked no response except from the Boers' rifles until near 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when the Gordon Highlanders formed to renew the attack on the intrenched kopje. They advanced with the utmost gallantry to attack the Boers, close to the place where lay their dead and wounded comrades of the Highland brigade.

The enemy opened with a heavy shrapnel fire as the British advanced, and it was found physically impossible to take the Boer trenches. The British got within 300 yards but could get no nearer. Col. Downham fell. The Boers had free recourse to barbed wire entanglements, which offered great obstacles even after the damage inflicted by the British artillery fire.

This (Tuesday) morning both sides occupied the positions they held before the battle. The greatest bravery was displayed by both officers and men.

Most Serious Event of the War.

London, Dec. 14.—Each important battle seems to bring a worse reverse for the British, and the papers this morning sorrowfully admit that Lord Methuen's check at Magersfontein is the most serious event the war has yet produced. The Morning Post says:

"We have had our day of humiliation appropriated for us. Let us accept humbly, soberly and steadily and be the stronger for the lesson it has taught us. This last reverse will make us a fresh butt of Europe. There was a more appropriate occasion to prove to Europe what we are worth."

It is reported that Lord Methuen's force amounted to 11,000 men, and perhaps more. No reliable estimate of his losses has yet been received. They are believed to have been at least 450.

All the papers comment upon the extreme gravity of the situation and upon the momentous decision Lord Methuen has to take, whether to remain at Modder River or retire on Granga river. The Times says:

"At least 3,000 additional troops must be sent out. The entire available reserve must be called out and the militia and volunteers turned to account. Efforts must be made to increase the local colonial forces and offers of further troops from Canada and other colonies must be sought and accepted."

A dispatch from Boer sources says that Kimberley remained quiet during the battle at Magersfontein.

Mobilize Another Division.

London, Dec. 15.—The press understands that the war office yesterday decided, in consequence of Gen. Methuen's reverses at Modder River, to mobilize an Eighth division in reserve and send the Seventh division to the front. Several foreign stations will probably be garrisoned by militia and if necessary volunteers will be called to take the place of militia at home. It is likely the militia reserve will be sent out to join their respective battalions.

Shelling Ladysmith.

Frere Camp, Natal, Dec. 15. — The Boers are still shelling Ladysmith. The heat is terrific.

Believed to Be Lost.

San Francisco, Dec. 15.—The French ship Louis Pasteur, now out 131 days from Limerick for this port, is believed to have been lost. She is known to have been in a fearful storm with the ship Blanca, which was lost.

Four Killed in a Fight.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 15.—The Commercial has received by mail from its correspondent at Whitesburg a story to the effect that four mountaineers were killed near there in a fight among themselves.

War Footing of the Army.

Washington—Tables have been prepared at the war department showing the total strength of the military force employed during the late war. An immense amount of work was involved in preparing the tables, which show an aggregate force of 10,017 officers and 213,218 men on the rolls during the war, or a grand total of 223,235.

To Unveil New Huge Statue.

Rome—A colossal statue of Christ, sixty feet in height including the pedestal, will be unveiled in 1900 on the top of Mount Bargone, which is 2,300 feet high, at a place near Vercelli.

WORK OF CONGRESS

Washington, Dec. 12.—There is such great pressure for time on the part of members on both sides of the house who desire to participate in the currency debate that three night sessions have been ordered. Interest in the debate is not keen, judged by the attendance in the galleries, although the members themselves are listening attentively to the speeches. Only one Democrat thus far has spoken in favor of the bill, Mr. Driggs of New York, who announced that he had pledged himself before election to support the gold standard, and proposed to redeem that pledge. He will be joined by several of his Brooklyn colleagues and probably several others. The features of the debate were the speeches of Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio, for the bill, and of Mr. Cochran of Missouri and Mr. Newlands of Nevada, against it. The other speakers were Messrs. Parker (N. J.), William Alden Smith (Mich.), Prince (Ill.), Lawrence (Mass.) and Powers (Vt.), for the bill, and Messrs. Shafroth (Colo.) and Sims (Tenn.) against it.

In the Senate.

Whether Admiral Dewey, acting for the United States government, formally or informally, recognized the Philippine republic at Manila, is a question which Mr. Pettigrew of South Dakota desires the navy department to answer. He introduced a resolution directing the secretary of the navy to supply the senate with information on the subject, but Mr. Chandler of New Hampshire objected to its immediate consideration. Following this objection Mr. Pettigrew and Mr. Chandler had a sharp tilt over the resolution offered the previous day by the former demanding from the secretary of war an explanation of certain charges against Gen. Merriam in his conduct of the Coeur d'Alene trouble. Politics were injected into the controversy and the personal references made by each senator against the other lent some liveliness to an otherwise quiet session.

Washington, Dec. 14.—The currency debate in the house lasted from 11 o'clock yesterday morning until 10:30 last night, with a recess of three hours for dinner. The pressure for time to speak continues as most of the members desire to make contributions to the literature of the occasion. Much of it, however, seems to be for home consumption. There has been very little cross-firing thus far and no exciting or dramatic incidents. So far as known twelve Democrats, eight from New York, two from Pennsylvania and one each from Maryland and Massachusetts, will vote for the bill. The speakers before the recess were Messrs. Fowler of New Jersey, Lacey of Iowa, Cushman of Washington, Hamilton of Michigan and Burton of Ohio, Republicans, for the bill, and Messrs. Brundige of Arkansas, Wheeler of Kentucky, Bentine of Missouri, Fox of Mississippi, Pierce of Tennessee, Sulzer of New York, Cowherd of Missouri, Otey of Virginia, Gaines of Texas, Democrats, and Mr. Bell of Colorado, Populist, against it.

The house adopted a resolution for a holiday recess from Wednesday, Dec. 20, to Wednesday, Jan. 3. Mr. Richardson, the minority leader, asked that the house adjourn over Thursday to give the members an opportunity to participate in the Washington memorial exercises, but Mr. Payne, the majority leader, objected, saying George Washington, if alive, he thought, would be in favor of the house proceeding with the transaction of its business.

In the Senate.

Yesterday's session of the senate consumed only a few minutes. Some routine business was transacted, but beyond the introduction of bills nothing of consequence was accomplished.

Washington, Dec. 15. — The senate yesterday, by a decisive vote and practically without discussion, laid on the table the Pettigrew resolution of inquiry as to whether or not United States forces had recognized the Filipino insurgents' flag and had turned over Spanish soldiers to the insurgents. It agreed to the house Christmas recess and agreed to meet to-day to receive reports on the composition of its committees for this congress.

In the House.

The debate on the currency bill in the house yesterday was tame and prosaic. The attendance both in the galleries and on the floor was light and none of the speeches made attracted especial attention. Mr. Sibley of Pennsylvania, Dem., who has publicly announced his change of views on the money question and who, it was thought, might vote for the bill, stated that he would vote against it. Mr. Thayer, a Massachusetts Democrat, was the only one of the opposition who made a speech for the bill. The other speakers were Messrs Crumpacker of Maryland, Lovering of Massachusetts, Olmstead of Pennsylvania, McCleary of Minnesota, Boutelle of Illinois and Graff of Illinois, Republicans, in favor of the bill, and Messrs. Cox of Tennessee, Lewis of Georgia, Lanham of Texas, Sibley of Pennsylvania, Burke of Texas, Terry of Arkansas, Ball of Texas, Gilbert of Kentucky, Smith of Kentucky, Berry of Kentucky, Atwater of North Carolina and Jett of Illinois, Democrats, against it.

Washington, Dec. 19. — The closing day of the general debate on the financial bill proved to be one of exceptional interest. At the outset a sharp personal colloquy occurred between Representatives Wheeler and Berry of Kentucky over the recent Kentucky election and the charges growing out of it. Considerable feeling was shown. Mr. Bailey of Texas, until recently the Democratic floor leader, received close attention in an hour's speech vigorously expressing the Democratic views. In marked contrast with Mr. Bailey's utterances, Mr. Scudder of New York, who followed him, announced that as a Democrat he believed in the gold standard and would vote for it. Mr. Payne of New York, Mr. Morris of Minnesota and Mr. Dalzell also spoke during the day. Debate until the five-minute rule occurs to-day.

At the evening session Mr. Clayton, Dem., of New York, announced his intention to vote for the financial bill. In response to unfavorable references which had been made to gold Democrats, Mr. Clayton said there were many of that belief in New York, and the number was growing constantly. Others who spoke for the bill were Messrs Sulloway of New Hampshire, Bingham of Pennsylvania, Mudd of Maryland and Minor of Wisconsin. Those who spoke against the bill were Robinson of Nebraska, Thomas of North Carolina, Lloyd of Missouri, Snodgrass of Tennessee, Rucker of Missouri, Robb of Missouri, Davenport of Pennsylvania, Lamb of Virginia, Caldwell of Illinois, Stephens of Texas, Gordon of Ohio and Neville of Nebraska. At 10:15 the house adjourned.

In the Senate.

The practical completion of the senate committees for the Fifty-sixth congress were announced yesterday by Mr. Aldrich of Rhode Island. He presented to the senate an order fixing the committees and it was adopted without dissent. A few vacancies in the minority representation are yet to be filled. They will be disposed of in a few days. No other business of importance was transacted by the senate.

Washington, Dec. 18. — The six-day debate upon the currency bill closed Saturday in a sensational manner. The Republican leaders had evidently set a trap for the minority to show that discord existed on the money question, and it was timed so as to make the scene as dramatic as possible.

Just at the close of the debate three of the heavy-weights—Gen. Grosvenor of Ohio, Mr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania and Mr. Dolliver of Iowa—were put forward to call the attention of the country to the fact that in the long debate very little had been heard about free coinage of silver at 16 to 1 from the minority side of the house, and that not one had offered an amendment containing such a proposition. Mr. Grosvenor said it was one of the signs of the coming regeneration of the Democratic party. Mr. Richardson, the minority leader, indignantly denied any intention of abandoning silver and called attention to the fact that under the special order under which the house was operating, neither a substitute nor a motion to recommit was in order.

Then Mr. Dalzell challenged a member of the opposition to a free coinage amendment. In response half the Democratic membership rose and demanded the privilege, but here and there was an Eastern Democrat shouting his disapproval.

There were shouts of "bluff" from the Democratic side, but the Republicans, after the parliamentary obstacle had been removed through Mr. Overstreet, who was in charge of the bill, asked unanimous consent for an amendment to the rule to permit the amendment to be offered. Then Mr. Driggs and Mr. Levy, two New York Democrats, blocked the game with objections.

No amendments were offered to the bill and only one section of the bill was read. The whole time was occupied in five-minute speeches. The incidents of the day were a sensational speech by Mr. Lentz (Dem., Ohio) denouncing the prosecution of the war in the Philippines and charging an alliance between Great Britain and the United States to subvert liberty, one in South Africa and one in the Orient, and an attack upon the memory of ex-President Hayes by Mr. Clark (Dem., Mo.). Mr. Brown, an Ohio Republican, warmly defended the memory of Mr. Hayes.

The vote upon the currency bill will be taken immediately after the reading of the journal on Monday. Mr. Overstreet, in charge of it, says it will have 35 majority. He says 8 Democrats will vote for it and 7 will not vote either way.

One man known as Collins, who was in the personal charge of the chief, resisted on the bridge and refused to go further. Drawing a revolver he shot Murphy through the abdomen. St. Paul, Dec. 25, 1899.

Christmas greeting of the Anglo-American alliance:

"Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men," —except those of brown skins in Luzon, and those of Dutch extraction who have builded republics in South Africa!

Preparations for the great annual political refreshing period of Jackson's Day are in progress at Minneapolis by united Democrats and Allies, and Jan. 10, 1900, bids fair to be set down as a reference date when was held one of the greatest of the political demonstrations. The occasion may be thus summarized. Jackson's Day proper, anniversary of the victory over Great Britain at New Orleans, falling on Jan. 8, our observance is made the 10th to accommodate Mr. Bryan, who speaks elsewhere on the 8th. The banquet feature is to have the addition of an Exposition mass meeting, both arranged so that the banqueters can enjoy both. For both general invitations are extended to all members of the new Democracy, and to its Allies, and the Reform Press of the state are especially invited, and are to be the guests of the banquet management. But no personal invitations will be issued, beyond those on the programme for speeches. Banquet tickets cost $1.50 each, and are obtainable of William Baldwin, Esq., West Hotel, but the members of the Reform Press will receive tickets from George S. Canfield, secretary of the Reform Press association, through whom the invitation to editors is extended.

Chairman L. A. Rosing of the Democratic state central committee has called the committee to meet on that day, and also called all county chairmen to be present. The attendance is also requested of all party workers and friends of the cause.

The members of the Peoples party committees are also invited.

Headquarters for all meetings of the occasion and for the Reform Press will be the West hotel.

And, for gatherings, the Twin Cities are to be strictly in it this winter. Following the Minneapolis political affairs, St. Paul will have her carnival programme on, set for Feb. 3 to 12. The more the merrier.

The Democratic National committee has been called to meet at Washington on Feb. 22, Washington's birthday, a most fitting day, to decide on the time and place of the Democratic convention. The outlook is that Chicago will be the place, and the time immediately following the Republican convention. A Chicago convention would best reaffirm the Chicago platform and shape the issues for victory. The desertion of the West and Northwest by the Republicans in going to Philadelphia, will go a long ways toward giving us the state of Illinois. And appropriately, too, since the principles of Lincoln are so prominent on the Democratic and Reform banners of 1900.

Lawton, Logan, Diggles, and the long list of brave soldiers who have fallen in the Philippines—and in what a cause!

The cause is so bad, that in all the utterances from officials upon Lawton's death, from McKinley down, not one could make a reference to the principles for which he gave up his noble life. Whenever before was it not possible to refer to our fallen soldiers, as having given their lives for liberty and human freedom?

Hanna's call is out for the G. O. P. convention for June 19 at Philadelphia. The proposition to reduce southern representation was shelved by Mr. McKinley, on account of the large colored vote in Ohio and Indiana.

Imperialism, as shown in the Philippines, and English infamy as shown in the South African war, are twin bedfellows, and deserve, as they will receive, the condemnation of the liberty loving people of the United States.

Judge Collins takes his Hanna-Merriam medicine with many a grimace and squirm, but there are a great host of state Republicans who won't have it!

We have a letter from Captain Patrick O'Farrell, Washington, the brave Irish soldier of the Union, the only blemish on whom, and he admits it, is the fact that he stumped five states for McKinley, in 1896, in which he says:

"I have no doubt of our ability to defeat McKinley in the presidential election. We must have faith in the consciences of the common people of America. McKinley, Pauncefote and Chamberlain, cannot fool all the people all the time. McKinley could not play the part of a Tory any better if he had a seat in Salisbury's cabinet."

Rev. Riley's prayer is still troubling the goppites. What do the said goppites know about prayers anyhow? They are themselves past praying for.

Before departing for South Africa, General Roberts, the new commander-in-chief, issued an address thanking the American people "for their interest and sympathy in the British cause." My Lord Roberts is misinformed. He and his cause have not the "interest and sympathy of the American people," only the interest and sympathy of the present administration of the American people. Not one true American but sympathizes with the Boers, and not ten people in a hundred, take them as you find them, are with England.

Hurrah for the Boers, Lord General Roberts!

And Canada, too, sympathizes with the liberty fighters, so much so that a serious schism is said to be on foot in the Canadian government, and a rising tide of opposition to sending any more troops to South Africa. Glad to know it.

In London concert halls the taking thing is the waving of the American and English flags, while singing "God save the Queen," in recognition of the jobs in which both countries are engaged, of killing out the spirit of liberty.

True to their colors, the leaders of the Silver Republican organization, Towne, Teller, Pettigrew, Cannon, Wilson, Hartman, Shafroth and Du Bois, embracing those who departed from the St. Louis convention, are out in an address denouncing the Republican party for its open espousal of gold and the surrender to the banking monopoly in the financial bill. Events have justified, the address shows, every position taken by the silver men. The dangers they forecast have been realized. The hypocrisy of international bimetallism is fully shown, and all the wickedness of the pending bill exposed, which would destroy the greenbacks, perpetrate a national gold debt, and erect a great money trust more powerful than all the rest, which are even now overshadowing the republic. The address thus concludes:

"Thus, fellow citizens, the scheme we denounced in 1896 is nearing consummation. The policy that was denied by the Republican party in that campaign stands now confessed. Millions of you who voted the Republican ticket in 1896 would not have done so had you believed your party was destined so soon to be the agent of the forces that now dominate it. Millions of you were bimetallists in 1896 and remain so today. Now that the promises then made you are clearly seen to have been insincere; now that, as a consequence of the deception practiced upon your honest confidence, your country is about to be handed to the ownership and control of the great speculative banks and their associated trusts and combinations; may we not appeal to you to come to the rescue of the liberties of the people and their imperilled institutions? In the spring of 1897 the undersigned took the steps leading to the organization of the Silver Republican party. Against the betrayers of the Republicanism of Abraham Lincoln that party resolved to wage unending war. Today the necessity for its work is more evident than ever. Come with us and help us. We believe that the highest devotion to the Republicanism you once venerated demands that you oppose to the uttermost the present tendencies of the party which still wears the name, but has forsaken the principles of its heroic days."

Was it the glowing prospect of Democratic success in the presidential campaign in 1900, or was it the passage of the gold standard bill by the Republican congress which shook the confidence of the investing public to such an extent as to cause the panic in Wall street?

Twin City bankers, discussing the panic, "gave the whole snap away," as when President Raymond of the Minneapolis Northwestern said that the trouble was largely due to the South African war, for, said he:

"The financial interests of the United States are so closely allied with the English that whatever affects the markets on one side inevitably affects those on the other."

And also Banker Foss of the Nicollet National, admitting the same thing, that—

"Now comes the heavy demand from Europe for money. London money has been tightening and keeping gold at home, and now they are coming over here and paying a premium for ours."

Thus the British financial system which we follow, and its gold standard, are at the bottom of it. And our lower house of congress rushes through the gold bill, and the bill placing full control in the banks, and the senate fixes an early date for consummating the iniquity—all by the Republican party, at command of the gold power!

Secretary Gage remarks, in apology for forcing the gold standard legislation, that many of our citizens, "have long had the desire for restoration of the double standard." Right you are, Mr. Gage, and they still have the same desire, and now know how to realize on it.

Well put and timely were the remarks of Hon. S. M. Owen, E. S. Corser and Senator S. A. Stockwell, in connection with the bankers' interviews. If, said Mr. Owen, this condition follows the greatest gold production the world has ever seen, from the mere stoppage of $70,000,000 of South African gold, what disasters may we not have expected from continued loss of one-half of our primary money (silver) during that time? The production of gold, large as it is, cannot keep pace with our increasing activities. The world's distressing conditions would not exist if silver were supplementing the world's trade as basic money, says Mr. Owen. The struggle for gold is the primary cause of the troubles and conditions.

Mr. Corser added the point that our supposed improved conditions are largely overestimated, and that not only will the further fixing of the gold standard upon us be injurious, but the proposed surrender of government sovereignty over its money to the banks will make financial panics certain of occurrence, and unspeakably hurtful.

Mr. Stockwell gave as the cause of the panic, the combinations built up under laws for special privileges conferred on private individuals and corporations which control the financial world. The completion of these monopolies and powers for evil is secured in the Republican financial bill which, establishing the gold standard, surrenders the issue of paper money to such banking monopoly.

Good stuff. G. S. C.

LAWTON IS KILLED

STRUCK DOWN BY A FILIPINO BULLET.

Gallant Commander Was Leading His Men in the Charge Against San Mateo—Was Shot in the Breast and Died Almost Immediately—Americans Enter the Town and Drive the Insurgents Into the Mountains—Profound Grief of the Men at the Death of Their Brave Leader.

Manila, Dec. 21.—Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton has been shot and killed at San Mateo. He was standing in front of his troops, was shot in the breast and died immediately.

Gen. Lawton left here Monday night, having returned from his northern operations Saturday, to lead an expedition through Mariquina valley, which has been an insurgent stronghold throughout the war. The valley has several times been invaded, but never held by the Americans. Gen. Germino was supposed to have there the largest organized force north of Manila, and Gen. Otis wished to garrison Mariquina. The night was one of the worst of the season. A terrible rain had begun and is still continuing. Accompanied by his staff and Troop I, Fourth cavalry, Gen. Lawton set out at 9 o'clock in advance of the main force, consisting of the Eleventh cavalry and one battalion each of the Twentieth and Twenty-seventh infantry, which started from La Loma at midnight. With a small escort he led the way through an almost pathless country, a distance of fifteen miles over hills and through canebrake and deep mud, the horses climbing the rocks and Sliding Down the Hills.

Before daybreak the column had reached the head of the valley. San Mateo was attacked at 8 o'clock and a three-hours' fight ensued. This resulted in few casualties on the American side, apart from the death of Gen. Lawton, but the attack was difficult because of the natural defenses of the town. Gen. Lawton was walking along the firing line within 300 yards of a small sharpshooters' trench, conspicuous in the big white helmet he always wore, and a light yellow rain coat. He was also easily distinguishable because of his commanding stature. The sharpshooters directed several close shots, which clipped the grass near by. His staff officers called Gen. Lawton's attention to the danger he was in, but he only laughed with his usual contempt for bullets. Suddenly he exclaimed: "I am shot," clenched his hands in a desperate effort to stand erect, and fell into the arms of a staff officer. Orderlies rushed across the field for surgeons, who dashed up immediately, but their efforts were useless. The body was taken to a clump of bushes and laid upon a stretcher, the familiar white helmet covering the face of the dead general. Almost at this moment the cheers of the American troops were mingling with the rifle volleys. After the fight six stalwart cavalrymen forded the river to the town, carrying the litter on their shoulders, the staff preceding with the colors and a cavalry escort following. The troops filed bareheaded through the building where the body was laid and many a tear fell from the eyes of men who had long followed the intrepid Lawton. The entire command was stricken with grief as though each man had suffered a personal loss. Owing to the condition of the country, which is impassable so far as vehicles are concerned the remains could not be brought to Manila to-day. Mrs. Lawton and the children are living in a government residence, formerly occupied by a Spanish general. San Mateo lies between a high mountain behind, and a broad shallow stream in front, with wide sandbars, which the insurgent trenches and buildings command. The Americans were obliged to fire over this stream and they were lying in a rice field and volleying across the stream preparatory to crossing when Gen. Lawton was shot. All except the officers were behind cover. A staff officer was wounded about the same time and one other officer and seven men were wounded. After three hours' shooting the Filipinos were dispersed into the mountains. Col. Lockett took command when Gen. Lawton fell.

Rushing Into San Mateo

Washington Is Shocked.

Washington, Dec. 21.—Gen. Lawton's death was a great shock to the officers of the war department, to nearly all of whom he was personally known. Hitherto his luck in battle had been marvelous. He had been in hundreds of skirmishes and midnight attacks. He was regarded as a man of action and of splendid courage, but was not considered reckless. He never exposed his men without due consideration of the risks and the stake. His men knew this and would unhesitatingly follow his lead under what seemed to be the most desperate conditions. The Indians came to know him as the most active, vigilant, wary and determined of foes, and his pursuit and capture of Geronimo, the famous Apache chieftain, has gone down into history as one of the most remarkable campaigns ever undertaken with the small force in hand. Gen. Miles picked out Lawton to lead the chase after the Indian chief and for three months, day and night, without a pause, through all sorts of vicissitudes of weather and personal suffering Lawton hung on the trail like a bloodhound until the game was run to earth and for the first time in a quarter of a century Southwestern Arizona was pacified. Secretary Root and the president each expressed his profound grief at the confirmation of the report of the death of the gallant general.

Americans Were Repulsed.

Manila, Nov. 21, via San Francisco, Dec. 21.—Belated mail reports have reached Manila of an expedition to the island of Cebu last month by a small force of American soldiers of the Sixth infantry which was repulsed by insurgents mainly through the desertion of native allies upon whom the Americans depended. Two of the Americans were killed and two wounded, and in the force of native police accompanying them, one was killed and four wounded. No official report of the affair has reached Gen. Otis, consequently the censor refused to permit the incident to be cabled.

Confirmed by Otis.

Washington, Dec. 21.—The war department last night received the following official confirmation of the killing of Gen. Lawton:

"Gen. Lawton engaged in driving insurgents from San Mateo section of country northeast of Manila was killed instantly at 9:30 yesterday morning. A great loss to us and his country.

—"Otis."

MABINI'S OPINION.

Future Peace of the Philippines Depends on the Government Set Up.

Manila, Dec. 21.—Mabini, formerly a member of the Filipino cabinet, and considered the strongest and most intellectual of such ministers, said to a representative of the Associated Press yesterday:

"The future peace of the Philippines depends altogether upon the style of government the United States sets up. We are vanquished because we lacked funds and munitions of war, and of mismanagement of our affairs, but the craving of independence still exists. If the government eventually established here is liberal, sure and free, the satisfaction and contentment of the people will result and there will be no trouble. If it is otherwise the people will be dissatisfied and will aid every revolutionary movement, which will surely occur sooner or later.

TROUBLE IN NEGROS.

Was Instigated by the Hongkong Junta.

Washington, Dec. 21.—Gen. Otis has cabled the war department as follows:

Manila, Dec. 20.—Information from Hongkong and Negros shows that the late Negros uprising was the work of the Hongkong junta. Three junta agents visited Negros in the latter part of November and took three hundred Tagals from Panay and much junta literature which they circulated. They announced great victories in Luzon, that insurgent independence would be recognized soon by the United States and warned the Negros of punishment in store, and directed an uprising throughout the island for Dec. 2. The result was the gathering of a few hundred of the ignorant masses and robbers and consequent fright of the better element. Gen. Smith has imposed on the towns concerned a fine to be paid into the general treasury. He reports the guilt of two priests and says American clergymen are needed; that Negros would be easily controlled if left to itself, but fears of Tagal vengeance when Aguinaldo fully establishes himself by driving the Americans out of Luzon. The most improbable statements are believed by ignorant natives.

MORE MOUNTED MEN.

Large Force of Yeomanry to be Mobilized.

London, Dec. 21.—The government at last consented to mobilize a force which Gen. Buller is credited as having demanded all along as essential to success in South Africa, namely, 10,000 mounted infantry. It is just announced the government has decided to mobilize a force of mounted infantry to be called "Imperial Yeomanry," and to be drawn from yeomanry, and persons meeting the next requirements. The men must be between twenty and thirty-five years of age and of equal physique to the ordinary cavalry soldiers. These arrangements are expected to result in a considerable force. The enrolled strength of the yeomanry forces, which originated in the troublesome period of the French revolution, is now 10,433. Their services have never before been called for in war.

The lord mayor of London, the Hon. Alfred Newton, is now raising and equipping a corps of volunteers among the city companies. The entire city volunteers are contributing liberally to the expense. Mr. Howard Vincent has also offered to raise a regiment of a thousand picked marksmen. The enthusiasm of volunteers continues and promises to give the government ample material.

The queen has announced her intention of entertaining at Windsor castle Dec. 26 the wives and children of soldiers serving in South Africa who reside in the neighborhood. Tea will be served, her majesty probably presiding in person, and a Christmas tree twenty-five feet high will be loaded with gifts.

The British second-class cruiser Isis will convey Gen. Lord Kitchener from Egypt to the Cape. She has been ordered to steam at 16 knots.

Special reports regarding the fighting at Tugela river are still filtering through, but all the newspapers complain that these are severely censored, and it is still impossible to get an accurate idea of the battle. From the latest accounts, however, it appears that Gen. Buller was in personal command.

A correspondent of the Associated Press at Chieveley Camp says the Boers excuse themselves for firing on the stretcher bearers by asserting that two companies of the Connaught Rangers took cover under civilian bearers of the Red Cross, and this act drew the Boer fire, three being killed and several wounded. Much anxiety is caused by the fact that the war office has not yet received a full list of the casualties at Tugela river.

The Standard hints editorially that if Portugal continues to allow supplies of war materials and foreign volunteers to reach the Transvaal through Delagoa bay England will have something to say in the matter. Statements are published from Boer sources in Brussels and Berlin that President Kruger is willing to conclude peace on the basis of the status quo, but otherwise will call upon the Boers in Cape Colony to join in proclaiming the independence of the Cape territories of Great Britain.

Houses Were Shaken.

London, Dec. 21.—A special from Berlin says: Sharp earthquake shocks were felt about 9 o'clock yesterday morning in the Rheingault region. The houses were shaken. No loss of life is reported.

Atlas Tank Property Sold.

Boston, Dec. 21.—The property of the Atlas Tank corporation was sold at auction yesterday to K. I. Harrison of New York for $200,000. It is understood Mr. Harrison represents Standard oil interests.

Stabbed by a Beggar.

Cincinnati, Dec. 21.—Charles C. Condon, a letter carrier, was fatally stabbed by Jim White, a beggar. When Condon refused to buy a beggar's card White stabbed him.

FOR LAWTON'S SAKE

SUBSCRIPTIONS POURING IN FROM ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTRY.

Sympathy of the People Showing Itself in the Prompt Response to the Suggestion Made in Behalf of the Widow and Children of the Gallant Commander — Handsome Amount Will Be Realized—Several $100 Contributions Already Received — An Unknown Gives $1,000.

Washington, Dec. 23. — Adjt. Gen. Corbin, the head of the committee charged with the collection of funds for the benefit of the family of the late Gen. Lawton, is in receipt of expressions of sympathy and of willingness to co-operate from all quarters of the country. Some of these are accompanied by contributions of money, and, altogether there is promise of a generous response to the committee's appeal.

Gen. Charles King telegraphed from Milwaukee that the committee could count on a proper response from that city to the appeal.

The brokerage firm of Worden & Co., New York, have voluntarily undertaken to collect funds of the stock exchange. The committee aim to collect at least $25,000.

The first subscription in Washington came from a clerk in the war department, who contributed $2 from his salary to start the list of contributions.

Gen. Corbin received a telegram from Gen. R. A. Alger, saying: "I send $100 for the Lawton fund."

Maj. Gen. Shafter, at San Francisco, telegraphed that he would do everything in his power to help Mrs. Lawton.

A telegram was received from Mr. C. H. Hamilton of Milwaukee, saying that the citizens of that city authorized him to offer $1,000 as a nucleus for a fund for the widow and family of Gen. Lawton.

Gen. Corbin received a telegram from a gentleman in Pennsylvania, who does not wish his name made public, contributing $1,000 to the Lawton fund.

Other contributions received are as follows: Secretary John Hay, $100; Assistant Secretary H. A. Taylor, $100; Mrs. Addison Porter, $100; McCoskey Brutt, New York, $100.

The Riggs National bank of this city has been designated as the depository of the Lawton fund.

Lieut. Col. Clarence Edwards, who was temporarily acting as Gen. Lawton's chief of staff, has been instructed by the secretary of war to superintend the transportation of Gen. Lawton's remains and accompany them to this country.

LAWTON'S SUCCESSOR.

Will Not Be Named Until After the Funeral.

Washington, Dec. 23.—It is said at the war department that the vacancy in the list of major generals of volunteers caused by the death of Gen. Lawton will not be filled until after the funeral services over his remains at Manila, prior to their transportation to the United States. It is said among well informed officers of the army in this city that the appointment will go to either Gen. John C. Bates, Gen. S. B. M. Young or Gen. Lloyd Wheaton. These officers have the rank of brigadier general of volunteers and each has distinguished himself in active military service in the Philippine islands. It is also understood that Brig. Gen. A. R. Chaffee, who has been chief of staff to Gen. Brooke, commanding the division of Cuba, is likely to be relieved of duty in that division in a short time and given an important command with the army in the Philippines.

Gen. Lawton held the office of inspector general with the rank of colonel in the regular establishment. His death makes the following promotions in that department: Lieut. Col. Peter A. Vroom, to be colonel; Maj. Charles H. Heyl, to be lieutenant colonel. A vacancy is thus created in the list of majors and inspectors general which probably will be filled by transfer from the line.

LAWTON'S RESTING PLACE.

National Cemetery at Washington Most Appropriate.

Indianapolis, Dec. 23. — Gov. Mount expressed himself in favor of the burial of Gen. Lawton's remains at Arlington, Washington. "Of course, the wishes of Mrs. Lawton should be consulted," said he, "but it would be most fitting and appropriate that Gen. Lawton should be buried in the National cemetery near the seat of the government he served so long. It would be a grand thing could all of our heroes be buried there."

FIGHT IN MISSISSIPPI.

Blacks and Whites Dispute About the Right of Way.

Meridian, Miss., Dec. 23.—Word has just reached this city of a fight between a party of whites and blacks on the Kemper county overland road about six miles north. One white man, Oscar Ford, was mortally wounded and two others were more or less seriously injured. It appears that the whites were without arms, while each of the nine negroes carried a revolver. The two parties met on the highway and a dispute over which was entitled to the right of way precipitated the difficulty. A posse consisting of the sheriff and twenty-five deputies is being organized to go in search of the murderous blacks. There is much excitement.

Spell It Puerto Rico.

Washington, Dec. 23. — The government has finally adopted "Puerto Rico" as the official spelling of the name of that island, and hereafter all official documents will adhere to that form. The board of geographic names decided in favor of this some years ago, but the usage has not been uniform.

Paper Currency.

Sydney, N. S. W., Dec. 23.—The assembly has passed a bill authorizing the issue of treasury bills to the amount of £4,000,000.

Chicago engineers are designing an earthquake-proof steel palace for the crown prince of Japan. It will mark the advent of American steel construction in the Mikado's land, and the imperial government has appropriated $3,000,000 for its erection. Foundations are being laid with a view to rearing the framework in February. Around the skeleton of beams and bars will be built a house of granite and marble expected to eclipse in beauty of design anything the orient has ever known. The palace will adjoin the royal home of the Mikado in Tokyo, and it will spread to extreme dimensions of 270 by 400 feet, rising to a height of sixty feet. The architectural plans partake of the French renaissance.

There will be only one serious objection to the proposed $200,000,000 sugar trust-glucose trust amalgamation—namely, that not all of the capital stock will be water. The projectors of the enterprise must realize, with sadness, that out of the proposed $200,000,000 capitalization there will be several million dollars of bona-fide stock issued against an actual investment of tangible property. Perhaps their ingenuity is equal to the occasion. They may find some way of skimming this cream of tangible property off the ocean of water so as to leave the latter in its original simon-pure condition. With another five years of trust promotions under the most modern methods the man who can produce a share of capital stock which represents an actual investment will be entitled to a prize.

The attempt of the Russian government to adopt in that country the Gregorian calendar, which is in use in nearly all the rest of the civilized world, has failed. The reason given is that it has been found impossible to establish an agreement between the dates of religious festivals appearing in both the Julian and the Gregorian calendars. That is to say, the people want to keep on celebrating Christmas and Easter and the other days on exactly the same dates as at present, and will not be reconciled to a change. Yet precisely such a change was made in the English-speaking world a century and a half ago, when the calendar was shifted twelve days, and what had been Christmas became Twelfth-day. There were popular protests against it, and in England not a few riots. But the authorities insisted upon the reform, and it was effected. It seems strange for the supposedly despotic Russian government to show itself more sensitive to popular prejudices than were the British and American government.

The contention of Benjamin Kidd, the author of "Social Evolution," that white men cannot become acclimatized in the tropics has stirred up a wide discussion. Dr. Manson, who has written a book upon this subject, and Dr. Rho, director of the medical department of the Italian navy, are thorough believers in the possibility of tropical acclimatization. The death rate of European troops in the tropics, which used to be from 100 to 129 per 1,000, is now as low as 12 per 1,000 in India. In Trinidad and Barbados the sickness and mortality among European soldiers are actually less than at home. The Boers are physically the finest men in South Africa. The Portuguese under favorable social conditions have been totally absorbed in India, but in Guiana and Brazil they have thrived remarkably well. Spaniards and Italians have become completely acclimatized in the tropical parts of both North and South America. The death rate of Spaniards in Cuba is less than in Spain. It is to the microbe of the tropics rather than to the heat that attention should be directed, according to the New York Medical News. The different experiences of the men in ships and the men on land at Santiago, it thinks, proved this beyond question. They endured the heat but not the malaria.

The sirdar says of Khartum will be open to tourists in January. African travelers will be grateful for the information, but it might be as well to give the Sudan time to settle down to peaceful life before calling upon it to endure a tourist invasion.

THE NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS.

Make 'em, make 'em; even though you break 'em!
Good resolves are comforters, aye,
even for a day;
Strive a little longer, it will make you
stronger;
And perfection never yet was found in human clay.

Make a firm resistance, pray to have assistance;
Give the demon that you dread a tussle—and you can!
Push the foe behind you; do not let him bind you;
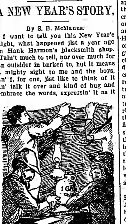
And begin the new year, better woman, better man!

A NEW YEAR'S STORY.

By S. B. McManus.

I want to tell you this New Year's night, what happened jist a year ago in Hank Harmon's blacksmith shop. 'Tain't much to tell, nor over much for an outsider to harken to, but it means a mighty sight to me and the boys, an' I, for one, jist like to think of it an' talk it over and kind of hug and embrace the words, expressin' it as it were, and hold the sentences like a bitter sweet morsel under my tongue. My strength don't in any wise lay in relatin' things and incidents, and it will be a good precaution, when I warn you not to break in into me and accordingly interrupt me, for it will take fine-haired and top sawyer work to make my story look as if it had any sense or meanin' at all, except to me and the boys as understand it complete.



PUT THE HOSS BLANKET UP.

Jist a year ago tonight we met in Hank Harmon's blacksmith shop to celebrate the day by gettin' so paralyzin drunk, that we could disremember the miserable homes we had sneaked away frum and the heart-broken and down-lookin' wives and children we hod left in them. We hung a hoss blanket over the biggest cracks in the sides after Hank hod fastened the door, and then we was in shapeful condition to guzzle and pour down our red-hot, thirsty throats, jist as much of Joe Howard's red-hot, pizen-hot whisky as we could manage to get with our tremblin' hands, to our weak, waterin', disgraced mouths. After this, we know what would most likely happen, judgin' of course by what had happened before—we would fall over amongst the cinders and hoss hoof jeelins and old wagon tires and drag-teeth and scrap iron, where we would sleep like hogs—hogs as had lost their self-respect—until the cold and the uncomfortableness would wake and sober us enough to crawl home to our wretched houses, which we would make wretcheder and miserabler by our comin'.

We talked of this tonight, and we all remembered everything that was done and said, as if it was writ on the black walls of the shop with white heat runnin' iron from the forge; and we all agreed too, never to try to disremember that night—the night when God or some of his shinin', holy angels come down to us and shamed us into bein' decent, sober, Christ-lovin' men.

"There is recollections," Jim Cameron said, "that allers ought to be recollected and kept like a blazin' torch in front of us. Some of them fer safety sake and some fer shame sake," and Jim furthermore said we ought to wear the memory of them disgraced and wicked days about us as an ancient sailor or some old salt, wore a dead goose about his neck as a keepsake that he had been low down and sinful.

But drunkards as we all certainly was, and what is more, vergin' clost onto bein' har-fer-keeps, old drunkards as was no likely salvation for, we wa'n't any of us so very happy and comfortable and easy into our minds, at the beginnin' of that night a year ago in Hank Harmon's blacksmith shop in the alley, jist off the Rudy—something, bullygard in the city of Sardinapolis, where we boys lived. We put the hoss blanket over the gapinest cracks to keep the wind frum flarin' out the smutty lamp that stood smokin' and wobbly on an old table where Hank writ his accounts, amongst a lot of nails and bolts and rivets and small gearin', with a jug of Joe Howard's cheapest, hellishest whisky in the middle as a kind of devil center piece. O, can't I, and can't all of us cronies jist remember exactly, how that jiggly, trembly, dirty old table looked and I am bound that it had the delirium tremens, if anything in the world harrin' a man can have them. I can smell the oil that Hank spilled when he filled the lamp with his nervous, shaky hands and it run along amongst the old iron and under Hank's day book and dropped over the edge onto the floor and went down a crack. And there was the white jug with the blue letterin': "1 gal.," with a sheaf of blue wheat below to make it look tasty and sell.

And this was our New Year's table! Four men—made in the image of God! And men for their folks and neighbors to be proud of—except they was drunkards. There was Jim Cameron, one; me, two; Jim Green, three,—whose father had been a preacher—and Hank Harmon, as owned the shop.

As I said we wa'n't over happy and comfortable that night, considerin' we had such a reckless layout and an early start. I have frequent noticed, that you can't always kick conscience under the table or settee as you can an unruly dog that whines and barks when he has no call to. And somehow conscience has a habit of gettin' around and in the way on such doin' days as New Year's, Christmas and the like. And four consciences as hadn't had their just deservin's nor innings for many a month, slipped their halters that night a year ago and managed to make things unpleasant for their owners. I suspect the troubled waters mentioned in the scriptures means somethin' like this. But any way we was troubled onaccountably.

Not so onaccountably either, for we wasn't so old and hardened and crusted in sin and drinkin', but whot we all could think when we give ourselves a chance, which we made sure not to do over frequent, because it was not agreeable.

One thing that made us feel a trifle down and dismal was that the keeper of the Happy Home saloon, Joe Howard, had jist moved a day or so back, out of his old house down by the gas works and the tannery, into his handsome new residence frontin' the park and the library buildin'. It was the prettiest, tastiest, impoein'ist house in the Circle and he had made every dollar of it out of such fellows as me and the rest of us.

And then Jim Cameron had moved that very day—New Year's day—from the home his father had given him and every brick and board in it was like a livin', lovin' thing to Jim—had moved into a little old untidy froway house with a bowed in roof and hangin' shutters, in a part of the town where self-respectin' folks didn't generally try to get. And Jim knew, and we all knew that he and the rest of us and a lot more had built Joe's house in the park, and that every nail in it if it was counted a dozen times, wouldn't count up as many ner a tenth as many as the tears shed fer its puttin' up!

We calulated that one of us had handed enough hard earned money over his counter to pay for the grand stairway, every inch of which was the premium work of an artist and a man as made grand stairways for a livin' and never botched, and I reckoned, jist makin' a rough, unfigurin' estimate, that I had traded enough with Joe one time and another to as much, or may be more, than pay for the plate glass windows, not mentionin' the stained ones, that looked like flower beds set into his walls, with wreaths and roses and young children and blue sky and grass and things. And there was my wife and youngsters at home—if such a place as we had finally got to could be called a home—with the windows filled with old quilts and cushions and not enough in the cupboard to eat to much more than prevent them from goin' to bed hungry. And this was New Year's night! It wasn't a cheerful, glowin' outlook, no odds how perseverin' one tried to be chirk gleeful over it.

Hank Harmon remarked as he took his place at the table, with his back agin the door to prevent anyone from droppin' in onexpected, that likewise, makin' a rough, uneducated callation, he hed helped Joe Howard in the buildin' of his mansion, as the newspaper called Joe's house—quite a considerable, even to the pinchin' of his family for provisions and clothin'. Hank callated he had done as much toward the house, as the puttin' in of the plumbing — pipin' — chandeliers, with the furnace throwed in for fair measure and good feelin'. And speakin' of the furnace, Hank happened to recollect that there wasn't a stick of wood or a pound of coal in his house, and his wife was sick and his children not sweatin' with bein' overclothed or overfed. And reminescening along this line, we naturally got dismal and down-hearted and some of us—it was me—for I needn't pretend to confuse or forget anything that happened that night—moved that we unanimously take a drink and I accordin' pulled the cork from the white stone jug, with the blue letterin' and wheat sheaf. But Jim Cameron nor Hank nor Jim Green held up their cups, but I filled mine in a manly, don't-care way and set close to the edge of the table by me.

Jist then, Jim Green began to cry. And it wasn't a drunk, maudlin' swashy cry that makes one tired, but a great, man, heart-breakin'—heart full cry, not loud nor noisy, but low and heavy with bitterness and remorse and the useless wishin's that you hadn't done some things. And while Jim cried we all looked away and kinder above each others heads and I sneaked my cup of whisky from the table and emptied it without makin' any splashin' in the pail where Hank tempers his hoss shoes. After a spell, Jim got where he could speak, and we was all willin' he should have the floor. He said he didn't know how many houses he had helped to build, but expected he had done his share, but he did know, with a sad certainty of one heart he had broken by his wayward wicked ways. Jim didn't say whose heart it was, but we all knew it was his mother's. And she had died alone and neglected jist a year ago. So many things happen just a year ago! Then Jim begun again, (he could talk like his father I suspect) and said that while he knew he had killed the one who loved him best and the one that he loved best in the world, killed her with cruel shame and sorrow—with God's help he was resolved to make her glad in heaven tonight, that he would never touch another drop of liquor as long as he lived.

JIM BEGAN TO CRY.

There was stillness for a time and the edges of the old blanket flapped like big, ragged evil wings and the uncorked jug sent out a smell that put one in mind of venomous snakes and close by danger, while the smutty, cracked lamp flared up and then almost went out as if even that little puny, crippled light was ashamed of its company. Pretty soon, Jim Cameron pulled his legs out from under the trembling table, and straightening himself up as best he could, bein' so tall and standin' as he did right under the eaves of Hank's shop—said, "Boys, I have a notion that amounts to dead certainty, that my wife and I will move back to our old home before long. We are both homesick for the grass and geraniums and big trees in the front yard, and the stone dog on the door step, and the little room where our babies died. I think we shall go back pretty soon, because you see with God's help and God for a witness and Hank Harmon and my neighbor, William Wren, for witnesses, I now solemnly promise—with my dead children to hear, too—that I, like our friend who has jist left us, will never touch another drop of intoxicating liquor so long as I live." And he picked up his hat and went away.

And me and Hank was left alone. But Cameron hadn't much more than shut the door, when Hank, as owned the shop, kicked the box out from under him and come nigh to upsettin' the infirm old table and while he put on his ragged overcoat, kind of careless remarked—only anyone that knowed Hank would have known that he was in solemn, awful earnest—that it didn't look neighborly nor civil to leave company like this, but he guessed—no, I'll be damned if I guess—(Hank wasn't a swearin' man, never) he said, I know I must do as Jim Green and Jim Cameron have done, and with God to help me and God and you, William Wren, to be my witnesses, I, Henry Harmon, will never drink another drop of intoxicating liquor so long as I live. And the rickety old door dragged back to its place and he was gone, and I alone.

There was but one decent, manly thing left for me to do, and by this time it was the only thing I wanted to do and standing up with only God for witness—and He was enough—I promised as the other boys had promised, and then, with a thread of a prayer that would tangle itself with my other thoughts, I took the jug and smashed it upon the anvil.

While it come to us unexpected that we should begin a new and decent life—jist like a message from God, almost, it was put upon us to help ourselves, jist all that was possible. God stood clost by us, though, and was always in reach when we most needed Him. It was a hard won victory, but we won it.

HAPPY NEW YEAR

THERE WAS NEW YEAR'S DINNERS TODAY.

"In conclusion," as they say in story books, it is only fair to mention that Jim Cameron and his wife have possession once more of their stone dog and geraniums, and Jim Green lives with them, and there is another baby in the house whose name is James G. Cameron. There are no blankets in the windows of my home today, and Hank Harmon is as happy and prosperous as a decent, hard-workin' God-fearin' man can well be, and in every one of our homes there was New Year's dinners today, that makes my mouth water to even think of now.

A NEW YEAR'S CALLER.

A year ago, around last New Year's, I was called upon by a gorgeous young creature—a saving beauty—who bore a letter of introduction from a mutual friend in St. Louis.

The substance of it was:

"The girl is stagestruck. Can you do anything for her?"

She was the most artificial thing I had ever seen. I doubted whether she could sneeze naturally.

"Have you had any stage experience?"

"Only with amateurs."

"Ah! Have you any money?"

She looked at me much as a well-posted countryman would gaze at a "bunco steerer."

"My dear girl, I don't want your money, but it might be to your advantage to take a course in some good training school, and that requires cash."

Her nose went up.

"Oh, I don't wish anything like that," she said disdainfully. "I want an engagement where I can get a salary."

"Well, you might possibly begin by playing very small parts," I replied. "Mr. Daly generally has a corps of fifteen or twenty young girls connected with his theater who are occasionally selected."

"No, no!" she interrupted, "I must do better than that. Will you hear me recite a speech from 'Parthenia?'"

This was pretty hard, but I was prepared to go some lengths "in friendship's name," as the gentleman sings in "Iolanthe."

"Go ahead," I said hoarsely.

She went ahead.

It was pretty bad.

"My dear," I said, "there is no call for Parthenias unless they have cash galore, and even then the 'call' comes principally from the manager, who wants his rent guaranteed, and the actors, who need their salaries. We are also overstocked with Juliets and fairly reek with Rosalinds."

She rose impatiently.

"Then you don't give me any encouragement?"

"Not in that line; no."

"You don't think I spoke well?"

"Let us talk of something else."

"No. I should like an answer please."

"Well, then, if you must insist, I didn't care for you in the speech."

She walked out, trembling with indignation.

Yesterday I met her.

Beautiful still, but with a look of hard experience in her eyes and her dress quite shabby.

My heart warmed toward her, and I seized her poorly gloved hand with fervor.

"I am sorry you were offended with me," I murmured.

She heaved a sigh.

"You were quite right," she said, "and I wish that I had known it then."

"You have been on the stage?"

"Been on the stage?" she echoed, with a bitter smile. "Why, I've hardly been off it for the last four months."

BEEN DOING SMALL PARTS.

"Well?"

"Well. I've been doing small parts in a 'twice a day performance' company, and I'm half dead. We even played on Sunday, and the mornings were given up to rehearsals. I tried important parts just twice—when the leading woman was ill—and made a botch of them both! And one was our old friend Parthenia." She laughed cynically.

"But your experience will count in the end," I ventured.

"No. It won't," she retorted. "I'm one of the actresses who 'don't offend.' I haven't any talent, and fourteen performances a week is a little too much! I'm going back to St. Louis to get married."

"Very sensible."

And she sped away and was lost in the crowd of Thespians that decorate Broadway and Fortieth street.

THE CHRISTMAS ROSE.

'Twas Madelon, the little maid,
Alone upon the wintry hill;
Tho stars were bright, the wind was still,
Grief at her heart, she wept and prayed.
The shepherds passed her on their way;
The magi, by the omen led,
She saw their gifts, heard what they said;
But she must wait, and weep and pray
The while she grieved a shape drew near,
And stood in glory at her side—
The "warrior angel," wise and tried,
Gabriel, in heaven without a peer.
Sweetly he spoke and very low,
He laid his hand upon her head.
"I have no gift to give," she said,
"And cannot with the shepherds go.
'Tis winter, and the cold wind blows,
And summer is far away;
And if she heard me weep and pray,
She could not come, and bring the rose."
A burst of glory burned around,
Flashed up and down the barren hill;
"Run, Madelon, pluck where you will Along the warm and blossom ground!"
Flying along the flowery sward,
She plucked a flower (the summer goes
But still it stays), the Christmas rose
A gift for Him, the Infant Lord.

STOP IT

Resolve upon this New Year's day
To "stop it," whatsoe'er it be!
Perhaps you like "the cup that cheers,"
Perhaps you gamble recklessly;
Perchance you're libellous in tone;
Perhaps you're 'prone to sigh and groan;
Perhaps you're temper's very bad;
You talk enough to drive folks mad;
You think that no one else is right;
You flirt with everything in sight;
You have an overbearing way,
Or tell your "symptoms" night and day;
Perhaps you dye the hair that's gray
Perhaps your debts you do not pay;
Perhaps—oh, well, whate'er it be,
If with your world it don't agree,
And brings you care or misery,
Strike now the blow that sets you free

To lure the wily trout;
They reached a bushel basket down
And simply yanked them out.
And in about an hour or two

At least, so father says.

In short, they caught so many fish

A SUMMER NEW YEAR

By M. S. Jameson.

"Well, if those fellows are coming around to see the old year out they had better show up pretty soon," yawned H. Parker Baxter as he slammed down the cover of a ponderous and gruesome medical book and turned a pair of sleepy eyes to the clock, which was complacently ticking away the last fifteen minutes of '98. No other sounds were to be heard, save the occasional settling of the fire in the grate, for the snow lay deep and soft over the cobble and flagstone outside. The old year, after a stormy life, was dying calmly and beautifully.

To our friend Baxter, one of these unimpassioned, dusty men who never "join in," this ancient ceremony of seeing the old year out appealed but feebly. He used to say of New Years, "an arbitrarily fixed point in time which has become the inaugural date for good resolutions, to the necessary neglect of all other dates for their formation," but most of his friends thought this simply a speech that he was gratified to make. He was trying hard to pose as a "rising young physician," and was really acting the part to himself, as many an ambitious man will do.

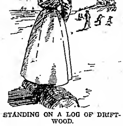
But however this may be, as the seconds ticked along, H. Parker grew more and more drowsy. He settled himself back in the chair, stared at the fire, and blinked. Then his eyelids dropped.

"This will never do," says he, straightening up with a jerk and reaching out to the table for something to read or look at, "I must keep awake a few minutes longer." Chance put a stack of photographs under his hand, and though they were stale enough he began to look them over again—incidentally yielding to the comfort of lying back in the big chair. Some were portraits of his friends at school and college, some were old faded prints that ought to have had romances attached, but which were really very prosaic, even to him. Others bore the brand of the amateur's first attempt—these to be passed by quickly; a few were the products of his own photographic skill at Granite Head last summer—bathers in the surf, the hotel, a clam bake, etc.—all very fair photographs in their way—but hold! here is one that might be studied critically. There is no hurry. It is too late now for the revellers to come. H. Parker shifts to a still more comfortable position and the soft lamp light shines over his shoulder upon as pretty a little picture as you would ask to see.

It is the picture of a dark-haired girl, dressed in a suit of duck. She is standing on a log of driftwood with her hands behind her and her handsome, happy face turned squarely to the camera. In the developing of this picture H. Parker had conceded that more care was required than in ordinary work; he had watched its delicate lines appear with the enthusiasm of a true lover of the chemist's art. With any other passion? Possibly, but that was past and gone four months ago.

The young doctor liked that photograph, somehow. He had examined it time and again until he knew its every detail. It did not grow stale like the others. But tonight there seemed to be a new light upon it, a new tone in the unfocused background of sand and sea, an undefinable change of expression in those brown eyes looking out of the albumen paper. Our imagination is subject to such unhealthy flutters as this, yet most interesting grew that picture, and H. Parker's eyes and heart were won, if his reason sanctioned not.

Preposterous and incredible! The duck skirt began to move slightly, as if stirred by a breeze from the sea, and the margins of the picture drew farther and farther apart, until on one side a row of bath houses came into view, while on the other the broad, blue ocean sparkling in the summer sunlight! More than this, H. Parker was conscious of a slight odor of salt in the air, as of seaweed and wet rocks left by the tide. The distant boom of breakers, soft at first, grew louder and nearer. When the girl stepped down from the drift log to the sand before his eyes, the doctor's smile of incredulity suddenly expired. When she looked at him and spoke he felt a tremor in the very marrow of his bones, and not a tremor wholly of surprise either.



STANDING ON A LOG OF DRIFTWOOD.

There he was—on the beach with her again; not Baxter of surgical treatises and test-tubes, but the summer-clad, sun-tanned devotee of Granite Head, and the very ardent, though unassuming, admirer of Grace Marston. Her first words confused his thoughts, he felt a ghostlike atmosphere about him, but after that the glaring August sun warmed him through, the sea breeze exhilerated him, he was filled with energy and real live happiness.

"Dear me," she was saying, "to think that there is nothing better for you to photograph than a summer girl making a guy of herself on an old log! There go those Sewall girls from the 'Place;' if you hurry you can catch them to pose in a group for you. I've heard they are great at it."

"At posing, I suppose," he answered. "No, Miss Marston, I have graduated from the snap-'em-whenever-you-can class and have entered the art school—hence I have chosen you for the picture."

"Ha-ha-ha! I appreciate that," laughed the girl as they began to saunter down toward the cliffs, "but have you considered, Mr. Baxter, the probability of my breaking the plate?"

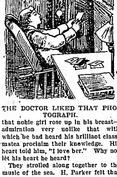
"What! An angler, too? I shall not humor the weakness in you, still, if you are a summer girl, as your own confession would indicate——"

"Pardon me, Mr. Baxter, "you know I like the assertion better when you let me make it."

"Of course. Observe that I advance no statements on the subject myself. I was merely going to say that if you are a summer girl of the approved, newspaper-joke sort, your likeness upon the plate could not fail to produce the effect that it has upon—er—men's hearts, to wit—complete fracture."

"Why, I am surprised at you," said Grace, a faint blush hardly perceptible under the healthy tan which she had found no difficulty in acquiring at Granite Head.

H. Parker studied her face in its mock severity and watched the dainty little hand go up to push back some annoying hair that blew across her eyes. A great wave of admiration for that noble girl rose up in his breast—admiration very unlike that with which he had heard his brilliant classmates proclaim their knowledge. His heart told him, "I love her." Why not let his heart be heard?



THE DOCTOR LIKED THAT PHOTOGRAPH.

They strolled along together to the music of the sea. H. Parker felt that there was melody even in the screaming of the gulls overhead. He wondered why it had never seemed so before.

"Let us sit up there under the big rock," suggested Grace, pointing to the nearest of the cliffs which leaned forward over the sand and made a cosy shelter from the sun. Here the sand was cool, the glare softened and the view of cheap cottages and decrepit bath houses cut off, while the whole stretch of beach on the right lay before them like a broad white highway. Grace sat with her back against the rock, and at her side reclined the doctor, full length upon the sand.

"Are you ever serious, Miss Marston?" quoth he, with but a trace of that quality in his own tone.

"Sometimes."

"On what rare occasions would it be possible for one to find you in that mood?"

"Oh, well, I'm not naturally so, you know, but once in a while when something goes wrong to induce it I get very serious—even blue—and as I always end by finding out what a silly, useless creature I am, there is very little enjoyment in being serious. Please let's not be serious, Mr. Baxter."

"Never more light-minded in my life, Miss Marston—never. But tell me how you deduct your conclusion which proves you a silly, useless creature. I am very clever at showing fallacies in reasoning."

"Well, unless because I live a useless life. Just look at my diary for a winter. Just look it through and see if you find anything accomplished, anything improving or worthy. Dances—calls—teas, over and over again. Do you call that sort of thing living? The people I meet day by day there; do I know them, are they friends, do they know me? No, it's all vanity—artificial—a waste of time."

Grace was serious enough now and stared out to sea with a frown upon her brows as dark as any that ever hovered there.

A pause and her companion spoke.

"It may be vanity for some, but not for you, Miss Marston. Society furnishes a field for superficial character to breed and thrive in, but yours is good and strong and sincere."

"I have begun to forget and disregard what it naturally is. I am tired of that life. I love the woods and the sea—the open air and the sense of freedom; freedom to go where I please, be as I want to be, choose companions that I like."

"Then the view of cliffs and breakers is pleasanter than the brilliant ballroom with its music and flowers? That cottage half buried in the pines seems a truer home than many a brown stone front on the avenue?"

"Ah, a thousand times," answered Grace with the frown dying out of her face. His words were slow and earnest, but she seemed not to connect them with the speaker. They put her into a brown study and she fell to examining a handful of sand for garnets. Watching the search, he continued even more quietly than before.

"Would there be happiness for you, in a little home such as that cottage, far from town, with all its parties and things, where you would be with real people, where you would be loved and served by real friends?"

Closer scrutiny of the sand.

"Would you give up that luxurious life that you have followed for this, and for a fellow whose every energy would be turned to your happiness—such a fellow, in fact, as I?"

The sand slipped away, and the garnets were lost.

"Oh, Grace, Grace, would you—could you——?"

Ding, dong—ding, dong—ding, dong; twelve o'clock.

H. Parker Baxter awoke with a great start and looked around astonished. He had seen the New Year come in August.

THE NEW BABY.

Ring! Ring! Ring!
Out on the New Year's air,
With clash and clang the New Year's song;
The birth of right, the death of wrong;
All eighteen, nine and ninety strong;
Ring! Ring! Ring!

Ring! Ring! Ring!
The message everywhere.
The baby year that's born to-day
To help the century away
Will never let injustice stay;
Is strong for peace, though girt for fray.
Ring! Ring! Ring!

Ring! Ring! Ring!
Of hope's best promise sing
May "ninety-nine," which now appears,
The last before one hundred years,
Not leave a record blurred with tears.
Ring! Ring! Ring!

NEW YEAR'S DAY IN KITCHEN.

Cook will probably have her New Year's callers, and if you are wise you will close eyes and ears for the nonce, nor investigate too closely the contents of dish or demijohn. For her friends are hale and hearty, with old fashioned ideas on the subject of hospitality and an aversion to such foolish fripperies as tea or coffee!

If you have a few flowers or ribbons that you do not need, they will be well bestowed upon her, and will add to her attractiveness as she sits in state behind a well filled table in her kitchen presiding over some such scene as this:

Ting-a-ling-ling!

"Mary, there's the basement bell. G'wan now an' open the dure."

The kitchenmaid does so, and reports:

"It's Mr. Duffy."

"Arrah! come right in, Mr. Duffy. It's th' first ye are, an' good luck to you."

"Good luck to you, Miss Kelly. Shure it's a fine night, God be praised!"

"Awin! Sit down."

Duffy does so, and stares around in awkward fashion.

"An' are ye makin' many calls, Mr. Duffy?"

"This is the first. Shure I didn't lave the dumps till siven."

"True for you. An' what will you have to drink? There's sherry wine an' port wine, an' claret wine an' some whisky."

Mr. Duffy's dull eye brightens.

"I'll take a little of th' ould stuff," he says with a grin.

He takes it, but not a little.

"Will yez have some cake or a sandwich?"

"Have yez erah a corn bafe san'wich in th' house?"

"Shure I have! Take two of thim."

He does so, and munches till the bell rings again.

The maid announces "Mr. Geohogan."

Duffy rises with some show of perturbation.

"I think I'll be goin'."

"Arrah don't hurry. Ye know Mr. Geohogan?"

"I know no good av him."

"Arrah, phat talk have you more?"

Duffy moves to the door as the newcomer enters, and the two men nod to each other in a surly fashion.

"Good night," says Duffy.

Cook follows him to the door, and her sibilant whisper can be heard plainly.

"Why don't you like him, Mr. Duffy?"

"Shure he's a scab! An', besides, he's from Tyrone. I niver give a county Tyrone man more than th' tip av me finger."

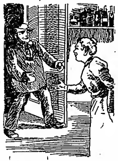
And the basement door clangs behind him.

Mr. Geohogan partakes freely of refreshment, and is proposing marriage when a new batch of callers arrive.

"Givan wid you now," says Cook, pleased and flustered, "an' come back whin your sober tomorraw. Here comes the Donnelly's."

From this time on the room becomes a rendezvous for Cook's many acquaintances.

The policeman looks in the door to exchange his good wishes for "bite and sup," the grocery clerk drops in, the ice man calls, and as the new year is ushered in with bells and songs and horns and shouts, Cook's guests are there, to aid in the "send off."—New York Herald.

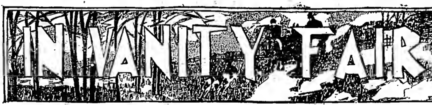


FOINE NIGHT, GOD BE PRAISED.

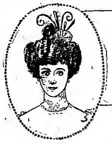
Utah Man Constructs a Wonderful Clock.

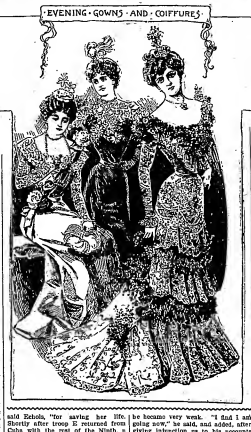
Joseph Jenson, a clockmaker of Richfield, Utah, has just completed a wonderful clock, which, in addition to striking the hours, halves and quarters, and showing the phases of the moon, tells just what time it is in every city of the world. This is done by means of a globe, which revolves inside a transparent globular glass. On this glass is marked a line which represents 12 o'clock noon. As the globe revolves this line is always over that part of the world in which it is noon at the time. Other lines represent the other hours, and in this way it is easy to get the exact time in any given place.

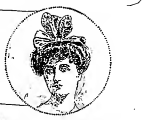
IN VANITY FAIR



·EVENING·GOWNS·AND·COIFFURES·







One of the leading New York merchants recently made a window display of artificial flowers which caused much pleased feminine comment. At the same time women wondered how they were to be used. Certainly not as hat trimmings. Milliners are putting posies on bonnets gingerly. What then? The exhibition was made to give us suggestion for decorating our winter evening gowns. Lovely laces, shimmering satins, sparkling sequins, billows of tulle and chiffon are insufficient for such full dress toilettes as fashion requires this season. And natural blossoms cannot be depended upon to keep their life and charm in the heated atmosphere of a reception or ballroom. So the best possible imitations of the real flowers are sanctioned again, to add the soupcon, bouquet, wreath or garland of desired color. Velvet is the material frequently used for blossoms and leaves. Perhaps one shade or another of purple oftenest is repeated in the blooms, which appear in familiar forms of pansy, violet, heliotrope; not so frequently to the morning glory and petunia. And for novelties there are plenty of lavender-purple orchids, trumpet and passion flowers, besides tulips. After these come strange blooms never grown on bush or tree. One needs to know her botany, and much else besides, to account for the flowers and the inspirations of imitations which she may wear on her new evening gowns. Black flowers of curious invention are commended as contrast with fellows with delicate hue. Thus, a frock of white China crepe is touched up at the corsage with a nosegay of warm pink carnations and their foliage and two or three blooms of the same sort in dead black, sometimes satin, again velvet. Black tulips are in demand since the play of this name, current in London, has achieved a certain vogue. Knots of black velvet are preferred to black flowers by certain fastidious women who cannot abide distortion of nature. A dress from shell pink faille francaise, made with no attempt at eccentricity in being cut simply a carefully fitted skirt with spoon-shaped train, has a decollette bodice of Honiton point lace over shell pink satin. Panne velvet ribbon in the hue of the gown has knots on the left shoulder, with a rose of black satin and another from soft pink. At the corsage top the ribbon stops in its creasways downward course to entwine another pink flower or two, and at the belt the ribbon finally ceases to wander, consents to knot side by side with two big loops from the artificial rosebush, one black, one pink. A finish ever so pretty is given to the parted, waved coiffure by a pink rose with two transparent, iridescent butterflies hovering over it. Notice, by the way, that wee pearl earrings, pendant, are worn with confidence, and perhaps beauty, with this effective gown. The invariably popular violet forms a rich decoration for a gown of fine white applique lace. The small flowers, in violet and satin, are strung by their stems from a garland of more violets joined invisibly. The lengths end at the sides of the skirt under handfuls of artificial maidenhair ferns. Another wreath and more ferns encircle the low neck and form floral epaulets at the shoulders.

No evening coiffure is complete without a touch of something related to the gown. This particular toilet is finished by a couple of witching knots in the hair, done from black baby ribbon and furnishing a setting for a little growth of white violets. Tiger lilies are strange favorites in a hot-house age. Yet they ornament one or more gowns done from black and yellow. Other homely garden blooms, including big blue bachelor's buttons, are on a dress of harmonizing blue satin.

The new permission to enjoy imitation flora needs to be enjoyed with care lest it be revoked. Nothing is uglier than badly made flowers of a crude line, unless it is shabby ones.

Dragon flies in fine silver net touched up with sequins are of later coiffure favor than butterflies. A tinsel-winged thing in black and silver which never was lends movement to a coiffure of the new fashion, parted at the side.—Margery Daw.

A New Heat Process.

An illustration is given in the Chemical News of the new heat process brought forward by a German investigator: A rivet, such as is employed in bridgemaking, is imbedded in a mixture of oxide of iron, sand and aluminum powder and the whole plunged in sand in a wooden box. On top of the aluminum mixture which must just emerge from the sand in the box, is placed a small lump of a mixture of aluminum powder and an easily reduced oxide, in which is fixed the end of a short piece of aluminum ribbon. The reaction is started by lighting the free end of the magnesium, more sand being immediately placed on the top of the mixture, so that as little heat as possible may be lost. If at the end of a few moments the contents of the box are emptied out, the rivet will be found to be quite redhot and ready to be forged. Working in an analogous manner, the inventor claims, steel tubes may be welded together at the most trifling cost, and even two bars of soft steel can be fused together. Indeed the temperature obtained under these conditions may, it is asserted, be higher than that realized in the electric furnace.

SAVED SQUAW'S LIFE,

And She Presented a String of Beads to the Trooper.

Kansas City Journal: Men who wear necklaces are not common, consequently J. W. Echols, a trooper of the Ninth cavalry, stationed at Ft. Apache, Ariz., attracted a great deal of attention at the union depot yesterday. Echols is on the way to his home in Boston, after three years in the service of Uncle Sam. He was honorably discharged a few days ago. A little romance lingers upon the string of beads, which lay tightly against the tall trooper's neck in five or six coils. "I got them from a Moqui Indian girl," said Echols, "for saving her life. Shortly after troop E returned from Cuba with the rest of the Ninth, a sergeant and twenty men were detailed to accompany a track train from the railroad station to the fort. On the way to the station we stopped in an Indian village for dinner. A lot of squaws gathered around with beadwork and Mexican trinkets to sell, and we joked and laughed with them and made a few purchases. We had our horses picketed just outside the village and when we went after them the squaws followed us. The Moquis are notoriously ugly, and whenever we saw a squaw who was even passably good looking we became quite attentive to her. I had picked out the one I considered the best looking—she was quite a young girl—and we were walking side by side. We had just reached the place where the horses were picketed, when I heard an ominous rattle in the bunch of grass. I turned, and as I did so I saw a monster rattlesnake coiled up ready to spring at my companion. I grabbed her by the shoulders and gave her a shove which landed her ten feet away in the grass. She didn't know what struck her; neither did the rattler when I fired a 44 cartridge into it. As soon as the Indian girl regained her composure and saw what I had done for her she put her arms around my neck, and I actually had to scramble to keep her from kissing me. In lieu of the kiss I gladly took this string of beads which she wound around my neck. I prize the beads highly, but I'm going to take them off, for they are always slipping up so that everybody can see them."

The Prince of Wales' Insurance.

From Tit-Bits: The prince of Wales is the heaviest risk of any patron of the insurance business, and his death would cost English, German, French and American companies not less than £2,000,000. "No other person," said a big insurance man, "carries 20 per cent of the insurance, but comparatively little of it is for the benefit of his family, perhaps not more than £200,000. It is a curious fact," continued the insurance man, "that £400,000 or £600,000 of insurance, perhaps more than that, has been placed on the life of the prince of Wales as a speculation by persons who do not know him and have never had any relations with him whatever. This would not be possible under the insurance laws of the United States, but it is allowed by some of the English companies. In England any man may secure a policy on the life of a neighbor, provided that he can persuade the neighbor to submit to a medical examination, or find a company which has recently had him examined. Thus, when the prince of Wales undergoes an examination for insurance, lots of speculators apply to the same company for insurance on his life, or get certified copies of the report of the medical examiner and use them with other companies. It is pure speculation. They pay a high premium—a margin, so to speak; or, to put it in another way, they book a wager with the insurance companies that the prince will die before the total of their premiums exceeds the amount of their policy. Therefore many persons would be financially benefited if Albert Edward should drop off suddenly one of these fine days."

Last Moments of George Washington.

When George Washington felt that death was drawing near, he asked his wife to bring him his wills from his desk, and indicated which of the two should be destroyed. Toward night he became very weak. "I find I am going now," he said, and added, after giving injunction as to his accounts and papers, "It is the debt which we must all pay." Occasionally he made such remarks during the evening as, "Doctor, I die hard, but I am not afraid to go, and you had better not take any more trouble about me, but let me go off quietly; I cannot last long." Dr. Craik could do little more than press the hand of his old friend and then sit by the fireside in the simply furnished room, sadly waiting for the end. Mrs. Washington, seated at the foot of the bed, listened in silent grief. At ten o'clock the dying man, after much effort, made those around him, who included four servants, understand that he wished to be buried decently, and that his body might not be put in the vault until three days after his death. The last words he was heard to say, when he was told that he had been understood, were: "'Tis well." Not long after his breathing became easier; he rested quietly; he even made a movement to feel his own pulse, but his countenance changed, his hand fell, and he died without a struggle or a sigh. Major Lear motioned that the end had come. "'Tis well," said the widow in a composed voice. "I shall soon follow him."

Giovanni Segantini.

Giovanni Segantini, the celebrated landscape painter, whose death was recently announced, was engaged on a panorama of the Alps, a colossal work, for the Paris exhibition. His early life was singularly romantic. He was born in 1858 at Arco, in the Tyrol, on a slope of the Alps overlooking Italy. His mother died when Giovanni was five years old, and his father handed him over to the charge of a sister at Milan. He ran away when he was seven years of age and set out on a long tramp to Paris. One evening he was found exhausted by fatigue and hunger, and was taken compassion on by some farm people, and set out to look after the pigs. He delighted in this pastoral life, and like Giotto he began drawing his humble companions on pieces of stone and slate. This was the beginning of his career as an artist.

The Red Ribbon of Honor.

Among the honors which can be won by citizens of France is the right to wear a tiny bow of red ribbon in the buttonhole. The Legion of Honor was founded by the first Napoleon as the reward of distinguished services to France in civil and military life. The order of the red ribbon, which carries with it the right to a pension in cases of poverty and old age, is not for men alone. The first woman who wore it was Virginia Glosquiere, who served as cantonaiere under Marshal Junot in Portugal. Many others have been likewise honored, but only one woman has ever worn both the ribbon of the legion and the military medal of the same order. Juliette Dodu is still alive. When the Franco-German war broke out in 1870 she was employed as a telegraph operator at an office in a frontier town. An invading army corps speedily took possession of the place, and as the German staff wished to send the Crown Prince Frederick immediate information of the advance, a dispatch was given to Juliette to transmit. She was scarcely 20 years old at the time, but she was shrewd and intelligent, and perceiving the importance of the telegram, she transmitted other words and secretly destroyed the dispatch. The poor girl's stratagem was soon discovered, for an answering message came from the prince. She was arrested and sentenced to be shot. But the next day, before the drums beat for the execution, the prince himself arrived. He heard the story and, struck with admiration, ordered Juliette's instant release, and with chivalrous courtesy, complimented her upon her courage. An incident so honorable to both sides in the midst of a fierce and bloody war deserves long to be remembered.

SHOE-BUCKLE HISTORY.

How the Gentlemen of Many Years Ago Dressed Their Feet.

Once on a time your shoe was nothing without the buckle. Indeed, it was a case of the "tail wagging the dog," for the buckle was the attraction and the shoe but the accompaniment. Be it observed that at first, however, it was not the size, but the costliness of the buckle which was conspicuous. Thus among royalties, people of high rank, and those who were the glass of fashion, and the mold of form at court, wore diamonds. Needless to say that then, as now, those who desired to imitate them wore paste buckles, happy, perhaps, in that self-complacency which imagines nobody else shrewd to estimate possibilities. In 1720 a leader of fashion would wear a full flowing curled wig reaching in ringlets half way down back and arms, a laced coat cut straight, with buttons put on in every possible place—thereby, by the way, affording a remarkable similarity to the "pearlies" of the popular and up-to-date costermonger—and square-toed, black shoes with an enormous flap on the instep, high heels, and on the flap a small but brilliant buckle. Next to the buckle of brilliants came those of gold. Rich landowners and equally rich merchants, men whose reputation for being "warm"—or in the then recent Alsacian fashionable slang "rhinocerial," a quite obsolete synonym for moneyed—wore gold buckles larger than the diamond ones, but still small in proportion to the shoe flaps. Your thriving shopkeepers wore buckles of silver, and your opulent farmers those of shining steel, and the poorer classes had buckles of brass or iron; but of some material every one wore buckles on the shoes. Indeed, so wide-reaching was the depreciation in bucklemakers' work when, at the epoch of the French revolution, people in general followed "Roland the Just's" example and took to shoe ribbons, that the bucklemakers actually, in their desperation, petitioned George III. and parliament that shoe ribbons should be forbidden under penalties, clamoring for a renewal of the sumptuary laws of Plantagenet and Tudor with an apparent inability to read the signs of the time. A spasmodic attempt was made by the princes and their entourage to benefit the bucklemakers by wearing buckles as ostentatiously as possible; but ribbons, decidedly far more unpicturesque though much more practical, carried the day.

"Not If It Were My Boy."

Some years ago the late Horace Mann, the eminent educator, delivered an address at the opening of some reformatory institution for boys, during which he remarked that if only one boy was saved from ruin, it would pay for all the cost, and care, and labor of establishing such an institution as that. After the exercises had closed, in private conversation, a gentleman rallied Mr. Mann upon his statement, and said to him: "Did you not color that a little, when you said that all that expense and labor would be repaid if it only saved one boy?" "Not if it were my boy," was the solemn and convincing reply.

Tossed on the Floor.

"How's copy?" The busy fellow in his shirt sleeves, rushing through his work, has asked the question of the "copy cutter" in the composing room, where the printers are setting the paper. It is late, and every nerve is strained to the utmost. Reporters are hurrying, telegraph instruments are clattering, and whole hooks of copy are being fired up to the "copy cutter's" desk.

"Crowded to death," comes the answer.

"All right; I'll be up in a moment and help you out."

In a little while the busy fellow in his shirt sleeves is sorting a mass of copy, leaving one story out of the paper entirely, laying another aside to be "cut down," tossing this and that on to the floor and making space for the important news that must go into the paper.

What is that loose sheet that he has tossed aside? You pick it up and a glance shows that it is headed with a single line, "A Baby's Death." How unimportant it seems; just three or four lines. Can such news as that crowd out the telegraph, politics, police news or even the gay doings of society? It is only a baby—toss it on the floor.—Josiah Carter in Atlanta Journal.

A Japanese Secret.

The Japanese gardeners make a secret of the means by which the miniature trees are produced; but, like many other mysteries, the secret has been discovered by the curious occidental. It is simple enough, consisting only in the cutting of the roots when they first begin to sprout.

Suppose a miniature oak tree is desired. The Japanese gardener takes an acorn and an orange. He carefully scoops out the interior of the orange and fills the skin with rich mold. Exactly in the center he places the acorn, leaving a round hole in a line with the sprouting point. He puts his orange in a sunny place and waters it every day.

Soon after the first shoot appears, and in a very short time afterward the roots break through the orange skin. These are shaved off continually. The tree grows to about five inches high and then stops. In a year it is a perfect miniature oak. When the roots cease to grow, the ends are varnished over and the orange imbedded in a pot or vase. The tree becomes more gnarled and stunted every year and is trained to whatever shape is desired.—New York Times.

The Last Opportunity.

The late Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, the famous skeptic, told many stories of experiences which grew out of the common knowledge of his skepticism. One of these related to a visit which he once made to Rev. Phillips Brooks before Dr. Brooks became a bishop.

Calling on Dr. Brooks, he was refused admission because, as the servant said, it was "sermon day," and some of Dr. Brooks' own home people had already been denied admission. But Dr. Brooks learned that Ingersoll was at the door and sent out word that he should come in.

After the interview, and as Colonel Ingersoll was about to leave, he said: "Dr. Brooks, your man told me that you had denied yourself to some of your home people this morning. Now how is it that you have admitted me, a stranger?"

"Oh, that's quite easy," said Dr. Brooks, laughing. "They are my church members, and I shall see them again, here or in heaven, but isn't right for me to consider your belief and that I shall probably never meet you again!"—Youth's Companion.

Trouble in Teaching Monkeys.

An experienced animal trainer says: "As a rule, monkeys are readily trained, but occasionally there is one, as in the human species, who is a dunce and won't learn anything, is positively stupid and refuses persistently to become educated. The trouble in teaching monkeys is largely that they are mischievous. They try to overdo things and do things which are not wanted of them, so that in order to make them perform as desired steady drilling is necessary, although they grasp an idea quickly. The only two species of animals which can be taught by precept and example are the chimpanzee and the orang outang. They are imitators, and to instruct them in doing a thing it is only necessary for the trainer to do it first himself, and then either one of these will imitate him."—Washington Post.

Necessary Precaution.

"What a fine looking little boy!" exclaimed the good natured woman to her traveling acquaintance. "How old is he?"

"You're not connected with the railroad, are you?" asked the suspicious mother.

"Certainly not."

"Not in any capacity whatever?"

"No."

"Well, just wait until the conductor gets out of hearing and I'll tell you."—Chicago Post.

The Impressionist.

Connoisseur—It sounds mean to repeat it, but he declared that your landscape did not look a bit like nature.

Artist—Ah, that was high praise! The true impressionist does not have to indulge in servile imitation of the object he depicts.—Boston Transcript.

An Absorbing Topic.

Dick—Miss King is so reserved and has so little to say that I can't keep conversation with her from lagging.

Jack (her former beau)—Mention pearls, and you will have nothing to do but listen—and buy.—Jewelers' Weekly.

A WARM RECEPTION.

He Arrived Home Too Soon and Did Not Make a Good Impression.

This resident of Alfred street came home at the end of one week instead of three, as he intended when he started on his business trip. He had his valise in his hand and rang the doorbell with a vim.

"Pity you couldn't bring a gong with you," snapped the sour faced maid who answered the call. "What's the sense of making such a racket? We don't want anything today." And she slammed the door in a way that showed she didn't mind noise if she made it.

"Open that door!" shouted the angry owner.

"Go on, now. We don't buy nothin of peddlers, we don't. I has my orders. Quit kickin that door, or I'll telephone for the police. Don't you think you kin skeer me. Git a chase on yourself."

"Let me in at once. I'm the proprietor of this place, the husband of your mistress."

"That's a likely story, sich a lookin ole frump as you are. Make yourself scarce now fur a baldheaded ole fraud."

He was ten times madder, because he is 15 years older than his pretty wife, and jumped up and down on the veranda while he shouted, waved his valise and vowed all kinds of vengeance.

Before he was placid enough to see straight the virago was upon him with a flatiron, and there was nothing for him but ignominious flight. He was just well under way when his wife appeared from down town and called a halt. Of course he sailed into her for having such a girl, gave the maid five minutes' notice, went through the house like a storm and could only smile the sickliest smile when he saw the new servant scudding through the back gate.—Detroit Free Press.

FULTON'S STEAM WARSHIP.

The Recommendation to the Government Signed by Noted Men.

It is interesting in the light of the achievements of our navy in recent years, especially those of the splendid fighting machines propelled at the rate of 20 miles an hour, to read the following report made during the war of 1812 on a proposition made by Robert Fulton to build a steam vessel for the protection of our harbors and seaboard cities:

NEW LONDON, Jan. 3, 1814.

We, the undersigned, have this day examined the model and plans of a vessel of war, submitted by Robert Fulton, to carry 24 guns, 24 and 32 pounders, and use redhot shot, to be propelled by steam at the speed of four to five miles per hour, without the aid of wind or tide. The properties of which vessel are: That, without masts or sails, she can move with sufficient speed; that her machinery being guarded she cannot be crippled; that her sides are so thick as to be impenetrable to every kind of shot, and in a calm or light breeze she can take choice of position or distance from an enemy. Considering the speed which the application of steam has already given heavy floating bodies, we have full confidence that, should such a vessel move only four miles per hour, she would, under favorable circumstances, which may always be gained over enemies' vessels in our ports, harbors, bays and sounds, be rendered more formidable to any enemy than any kind of engine hitherto invented. And in such case she would be equal to the destruction of one or more seventy-fours or of compelling her or them to depart from our waters. We, therefore, give our decided opinion that it is among the best interests of the United States to carry this plan into immediate execution.

Peel's Advice to Young Men.

Mental discipline, the exercise of the faculties of the mind, the quickening of your apprehension, the strengthening of your memory, the forming of a sound, rapid and discriminating judgment, are of even more importance than the store of learning. Establish control over your own minds, practice the economy of time, exercise an unremitting vigilance over the acquirement of habit. These are the arts, this is the patient and laborious process, by which, in all times and in all professions, the foundations of excellence and of fame have been laid.—Extract From Sir Robert Peel's Address to the Students of the University of Glasgow; From Charles Stuart Parker's "Life of Sir Robert Peel."

Advertiser.

A new and verdant postmaster in a small rural town had received instructions to advertise all letters uncalled for at the end of a certain length of time. He obeyed orders by inserting the following advertisement in the village weekly paper at the end of the first week of his term of office:

"There are ten letters in the postoffice that nobody has called for. If them they belong to don't take notice and call by the end of the month, the letters will be sent to the dead letter office. Anybody expecting letters they ain't got can come and see if any of these letters belong to them. All take notice."

People Who Sharpen Their Teeth.

Recent studies of the Koders, a race of short, dark skinned, curly haired natives living in the Anamalai hills of southern India, show that they possess a remarkable custom not elsewhere known in India—viz, the sharpening of the incisor teeth. This they accomplish by chipping the teeth to a point, giving them the form of cones.

The first Australian newspaper, the Sydney Gazette, was published March 5, 1803, 15 years after the rise of the colony. The delay was caused through there being no printers among the convicts, who represented every profession, including the legal.

The art of self defense is inculcated early among some of the wilder tribes of the Caucasus, who instruct their children as soon as they can walk in the use of the dagger.

The Army and Navy.

Have covered themselves with glory during the war. The Army and Navy vest pocket memorandum book published by the Northern Pacific is a compact digest of information relative to the navies and armies of Spain and the United States at the beginning of the war. It has a map of Cuba, illustrations of naval ships, glossary of navy and army terms, translation of Spanish words, etc. Send ten cents to Chas. S. Fee, general passenger agent, N. P. R., St. Paul, Minn., for a copy.

NEW YORK WORLD.

THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

Practically a Daily at the Price of a Weekly.

The striking and important events of the last year have established the overwhelming value of The Thrice-a-Week World to every reader. For an almost nominal sum it has kept its subscribers informed of the progress of all our wars and, moreover, has reported them as promptly and fully as if it were a daily. With our interests still extending throughout the world, with our troops operating in the Philippines and the great Presidential campaign, too, at hand, its value is further increased.

The motto of The Thrice-a-Week World is improved. It strives each year to be better than it was the year before, and public confidence in it is shown by the fact that it now circulates more than twice as many papers every week as any other newspaper, not a daily, published in America.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and The St. Hilaire Spectator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.50.

As soon as there is sufficient snow to make good sleighing, the Red Lake Express, a freight boat plying the river between Thief River Falls and the Agency for the past three years, will be hauled over to Grand Forks and do service on Red River. The party taking the contract will load it on logging sleds and with the aid of sixteen horses haul it over.

A Wedding Announced.

Mrs. Louis Fontaine entertained a number of lady friends at a five o'clock tea to-day. The affair was a pretty one, and was given as an occasion at which the hostess might announce the approaching marriage of her daughter, Miss Blanche, to Mr. William Clinton Stranahan, which will occur during Christmas week.

The bride is known to nearly every one in Crookston as a young lady of charming personality and rare musical accomplishments, and the groom is known as a young man of exemplary habits and character. After their marriage the young couple will reside in Aberdeen, S. D., where Mr. Stranahan will represent the Marshall-Wells hardware firm of Duluth.—Crookston Times Thursday Dec. 21.

Will go to Roseau.

Persons who should be in a position to know claim to have inside information that the Great Northern will build from Thief River Falls to Roseau next spring. We have heard similar pipe dreams before, but this time the story seems to come with more authority. The proposed road will not touch the Thief lake country, but will swing to the north and west to avoid the swampy land near the river and pass through the towns of Excel, Holt and Newfolden. A large grain elevator will be errected at some point at or near Newfolden.

The same authority informs us that the Great Northern expects to extend the Red Lake Falls branch to Dugdale at about the same time thus connecting this branch with the Fosston extension. When these roads are completed trains will be run from Dugdale to the Lake of the Woods and the Crookston and St. Hilaire branch will be used merely as a freight cut off.—Thief River Falls News.

Always to the Front.

The announcement recently make by The Minneapolis Times that it had secured for exclusive use in the northwest, the New York Hearld's special and unrivalled cable news service (at a price which would stagger a less enterprising newspaper), is but another proof that it is at all times the leader of the northwestern dailies and is determined to furnish to its readers the very best reliable news obtainable, and to publish it first at whatever the cost.

This new cable and domestic service together with the Associated Press service and The Time's own corps of special correspondents, places that enterprising newspaper easily in first place among the twin city dailies.

The Times' readers can now be assured of just as complete and reliable a service as if they lived in New York or London. We congratulate The Times on its enterprise.

The Cosgrove Merry-Makers held down the boards at Brink's hall last night to a rather small but appreciative audience, this owing to the fact that three different gatherings took place around town the same evening. The entertainment was very pleasing to say the least. The first part of the program was principally of a musical nature, all of which was good. The little girl that came out with her skirt dance and song more than pleased the audience—the child being about four years old. Harry Fay in his character songs and impersonations were also good. The delsarte poses by the Cosgrove sisters were exceptionally fine. Miss Ada Cosgrove songs, assisted by stereoptican views of which were beautiful and suggestive. The kinetoscope effects closed the evenings entertainment. The Merry-Makers will again show tonight with an entire new change of program, and we bespeak for them a full house.

A janitor in a neighboring school, says an exchange, threw up his job the other day. When asked what was the trouble he said, "I'm honest and won't stand being slurred. If I find a pencil or handerchief about the school I hang it up. Every little while the teacher or some one who is too cowardly to face me, gives me a slur." "In what way?" asked the officer. "Why a little while ago I saw written on the board, 'Find the common multiple.' Well, I looked from cellar to garret and I wouldn't know the thing if I met it on the street. What made me quit my job? Last night in big writin' on the blackboard it said, 'Find the greatest common divisor.' Well I said to myself, both them darn things are lost now, and I'll be blamed for swiping 'em, so I'll quit."

Said He Was Too Poor!

A man who smokes four cigars a day and chew 25 cents worth of tobacco a week, said he was too poor to take a local paper. He is a smart man, too, and economical, well, I should smile. This same fellow was getting a Maine story paper and found that by sending a dollar he could get a cure for drunkeness. Sure enough he did: It was "take the pledge and keep it." Later on he sent fifty two cent stamps to find out how to raise beets successfully. He found out: The answer came, "just take hold and pull." Being single he wished to marry and sent thirty-four one-cent stamps to a Chicago firm to learn how to make an impression. When the answer came it read, "Sit down in a pan of dough." That was a little rough but he was a patient man and he thought he would succeed. The next advertisement he read, "How to double your money in six months." He was told to convert his money into bills, fold them and he would see his money doubled. But he was bound to get some useful secret that he could make money on so he sent $5 to find out how to write without a pen and ink. The answer was "Try a lead pencil." Then he sent a dollar to learn "to get rich?" "Work like the devil and never spend a cent." This was discouraging, but he decided to try just once more and sent a two dollar bill to learn to live without work and was told to "fish for suckers, as we do." He takes the home paper and is now happy.—Hutchinson Independent.

The Arnewood Mystery

BY MAURICE H. HERVEY.

Author of "Dead Man's Court," "Somerville's Crime," "Dartmoor," "Maravin's Money," etc., etc.

CHAPTER III. (Continued.)

"We have the L. A. on his left arm to do duty for that," insisted the inspector.

"I fancy sailors more often tattoo themselves with their sweetheart's initials than their own," I remarked, "and I have always understood that they use the anchor as an emblem of Hope in connection with their chosen fair ones. However, it is quite possible that you are right, and, in any case, the initials furnish a very strong clue. Why don't your people offer a reward?"

"They are about to do so," he rejoined. "That is to say, the Home Office has sanctioned the offer of £100 for information leading to conviction. I am absolutely certain there are no 'pals' to be bribed in this case. The offer of £100 for proof of the identity of the murdered man might, perhaps, result in something; but this, of course, is hopelessly out of accord with all official precedent. And red tape does not stretch much, Mr. Weston."

"No, I suppose not," I made answer. "The description will, however, be circulated, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes! In the ordinary way, through the police force, and I daresay the Press will help with here and there a paragraph; but I can't say I feel hopeful as to results. Anyhow, I've done my best."

"And no one can do more," I added, cheerfully. "Besides, you ignore the greatest factor of all in the solution of a difficult case—the Chapter of Accidents." And my words were soon destined to be verified.

CHAPTER IV.

Mr. O'Flynn, of Dublin.

I soon found an opportunity of carrying out my intention to visit Dorchester, or rather the suburb of Dorchester, of which Madge's father was perpetual curate; and it is from that visit I date my first really determined effort to solve the strange case of which these memoirs form a partial narrative.

I went down, prepared to find Madge in great grief and tribulation, but I certainly did not anticipate the very unjust and harsh treatment I received at her hands. I could not have believed it possible that she, ordinarily so even-tempered and reasonable, should have taken so unfair a view of my action with respect to her brother. I can only account for it, even now, upon the assumption that when a woman's mind is deeply stirred about anyone very dear to her, she ceases to be guided by ordinary feelings of fair play and kindness towards others. And, of course, I felt the sting of her conduct the more keenly, inasmuch as I was almost her affianced lover.

I went over the whole story of Tom's disappearance again, with every detail since discovered, and I prefaced it by as gently-worded a reference as I could frame to his gradual but fatal lapse into habits of intemperance. Madge had scarce patience to hear me to the end.

"Tom went to London," she said, with nervous emphasis, "under your advice, and, as we all understood here at home, very much under your guidance. You promised me over and over again to do your utmost for him."

"So I did," I put in, eagerly. "Had he been my own brother, I could not have done more for him. I introduced him to many men of influence in literary and press circles, and I rejoiced in the success that at first rewarded his efforts. Then, when I saw that he was beginning to fall under the influence of the demon, Drink, I used every species of argument and advice I could think of to win him back to a steadier life. Sometimes, for a day or two, my arguments would seem to prevail, but only to be once more swept away by his insatiable craving for alcohol. And so the deadly mischief went on; I hoping almost against hope, for reformation on his part, and he sinking steadily deeper and deeper into the mire."

"Yes; and all this time you left us in almost entire ignorance of the change for the worse that had come over him," she rejoined, bitterly. "An occasional hint that he was not so steady in his habits as formerly was all that we were told of poor Tom's miserable downfall."

"There I confess I was, perhaps, to blame," I acknowledged; "but I could see nothing to be gained, and a great deal of pain to be inflicted, by telling you the full, bitter truth. Moreover, he purposely kept out of my way, and made it plain, whenever we did meet, that he had a strong distaste for my company."

"You should have ignored that," persisted Madge, "knowing that the poor fellow's judgment was utterly warped by drink."

"Impossible, Madge!" I retorted, with some warmth. "One may advise, help, save a man, but only on condition that he allows himself to be advised, helped, saved. You cannot rescue him, as you would a drowning child, by simply plunging in after him and dragging him ashore."

"Can't you?" she echoed, in a tone that was rapidly exhausting my patience. "Perhaps not. It needed a hero to do work like that; and my mistake has lain in supposing that you had aught of heroic in your composition."

"Have you any more unpleasant things to say?" I asked, with forced calmness.

"I have this much to say, Ralph Weston," was her answer. "Whatever truth there may be in your assertion that you fulfilled your self-imposed task of watching over my brother to the best of your ability, the fact still remains that you allowed him to leave your rooms during a blinding, dangerous fog, and when he was in no fit condition to be trusted in the streets alone. As a result, he now lies (if indeed, he still lives) under the ban of a terrible crime; and I, for one, do not hold you to be guiltless of his undoing. Give me back my brother, or never look me in the face again!"

"This may be very dramatic and high-toned," I retorted, stung past endurance, "but it is a monstrously unjust and heartless challenge. Nevertheless, I accept it for the love I have borne, and still bear, you. Make your mind easy upon this one point; that if energy and fixity of purpose can unravel the mystery which at present envelopes your brother's disappearance, that the mystery will be unravelled. Let this assurance satisfy you for the present. Good-bye—Miss Webb."

"Good-bye—Mr. Watson," she rejoined, striving hard to suppress the tremor that would creep into her voice. "Make good your brave words, and I will one day ask your pardon on my knees for having wronged you. Meanwhile, poor Tom's shadow seems to stand between us like a pall, and I can only pray that you may succeed."

She held out her hand as she spoke, and after a momentary struggle with my pride, I took it in both mine.

"If I don't it shall not be my fault," I said. And so, for a time, we parted.

It was late in the evening when I reached town, and I called at our place of business more as a matter of routine than with any expectation of finding my services in request. I was somewhat surprised, therefore, to find a message awaiting me from Mr. Hawkins (then my employer, it will be remembered) asking me to follow him to his private house without delay. I knew him to be the last man in the world to make such a request without good reason. And so, postponing my already overdue dinner, I jumped into a passing cab and hastened to Woburn Square, where Mr. Hawkins resided.

I found him in his study, and with him an odd-looking old man whom he introduced as chief clerk to Messrs. O'Brien & Grudgery, the eminent Dublin solicitors. "Dined yet?" queried Mr. Hawkins, in his abrupt yet kindly way.

"No, sir," was my reply. "I got your message twenty minutes ago."

"All right," he said, approvingly. "Then you'll have to put up with a sandwich and a glass of sherry for the present and take it out in supper later on. Mr. Flynn, here, has to catch the 8:25 from Euston, and I want you to take a note of certain instructions his people are favoring us with. They are the sequel, apparently, of an inquiry case in Australia, which you had almost entire charge of early this year when I was laid up. Remember it?"

"Oh! The Arnewood, or Arnott business," I replied. "Of course, I do. But I thought that was settled; the missing heir found and everybody satisfied? I felt rather proud of our success in that case, sir."

"Bedad, and well you might," put in Mr. O'Flynn, dividing what was doubtless meant as a complimentary smile between Mr. Hawkins and myself. "I never remember a job more nately and quickly put through, as far as it went thin. And that's why I've been sint over here to bespake your help again; for, if you'll belave it, we're no nearer the ind than when we started."

"What!" I exclaimed, "did the wrong man turn up after a bit?"

"Sorra a bit of him turning up, right or wrong," was the quaint reply, "and that's what's bothering us intirely. Sure there's not an Arnewood in Oireland, from Capt. Richard himself (who, barrin' Mr. Luke, is heir by entail) down to ould Mrs. George Arnewood of Tralee, but is clamoring for a share of the estate."

I had previously produced my notebook and was taking down every word the old fellow uttered. But I had not the vaguest idea what he was talking about. Of "Captain Richard" I had never even heard, and who "ould Mrs. George Arnewood of Tralee," might be I could not even conjecture.

"Upon my word, Mr. O'Flynn, I don't quite follow you," I confessed.

"Maybe not," he replied, with a dry chuckle. "And small blame to you, either, seeing the fog we're all in ourselves. Then, too, there are the trustees—"

"Pardon me, sir," I interrupted, "but I must ask you to be precise in any instructions you may have to give, the more especially as Mr. Hawkins knows but very little of the affair we put through for you nearly a year ago."

"That's exactly why I sent for you, Weston," put in Mr. Hawkins, with a trace of irritation in his voice. "I naturally thought you would recollect the details of an affair which passed through you hands so recently."

"So I do, sir," I protested, "and I have abundant memoranda to fall back upon even should my memory prove defective. But Mr. O'Flynn spoke just now of people and trustees I never heard of before. So far as my work is concerned, it ended with the discovery of the missing heir, Mr. Luke Arnewood, in Queensland, and placing Messrs. O'Brien & Grudgery in communication with him. I understand, from what Mr. O'Flynn has said, that Mr. Luke Arnewood has not yet returned to this country—"

"Thrue for you!" broke in the Irish emissary. "And that's just what's bothering us all. He wrote, more than four months ago, to tell us he was on his way back; but sorra word have we had of him since, and, as I'm telling you, the family's raising ructions."

"Then I presume you have come over here to ask us to find the missing man for you, a second time?" I suggested.

"Av coorse!" was the instant reply. "Shure, isn't that what I've been after telling you all the time? And, what's more, the next time you find him you are to send some one to bring him back. Do you moind that, now?"

"Certainly," I assented, briskly. "Can you give me the date and postmark of his last letter?"

"I belave I can," he replied, producing a greasy-looking memorandum book. "Yes; here we have it. 'Royal Hotel, Cooktown, Northern Queensland,' and the date July 7th."

"Did he say by what route he proposed to return?" I asked.

"No; not definitely. He proposed to visit Sydney, but had not made up his mind whether he would travel from there by the P. & O. line, or by way of New Zealand and South America."

One question more, Mr. O'Flynn. Did you remit him funds for the voyage?"

"You may well ask that," he replied, drily, "seeing its the first thing most men would have clamored for. But not he. He had, he wrote, ample funds on hand. Australia must be a wonderful place, entoirely when an Arnewood can save money in it."

This was about all Mr. O'Flynn could tell me regarding the movements of the missing man. But, on the way to Euston Square he favored me with a full explanation of his previous references to the Arnewood family; and, as they proved to have a very important bearing upon the case, it is essential to place them upon record in this narrative. They will accordingly be found in their proper place, in the following memorandum (drawn up by me at Mr. Hawkins' request and by his guidance) of our previous relations with Messrs. O'Brien & Grudgery, respecting the missing heir of Arnewood.

I should premise that the facts, especially those regarding the family history, did not come to my knowledge chronologically, as I have set them down. What I aimed at was to place Mr. Hawkins (and with him, incidentally, any other reader) in possession of every single detail of the Arnewood case known to me at the hour of Mr. O'Flynn's departure for Dublin.

CHAPTER V.

The Heir of Arnewood.

The Arnewoods of Arnewood Hall, like many other old Irish families of good position, were descended from a trooper enriched by Cromwell at the expense of some unfortunate adherent of the Stuart cause. No title had subsequently fallen to them, as to dozens of families of similar genesis, but they had always held a foremost place among the squirearchy of the County Kildare. True, his descendants did not emulate the austere virtue of the Cromwellian soldier; indeed, they were known, throughout the somewhat dissolute Georgian epoch, as among the wildest and most spendthrift frequenters of Dublin gambling saloons and night clubs. But fortune, aided by a few heiress brides, always seemed to favor them; and when the then head of the family, Basil Arnewood, died in 18—, he left an unencumbered estate worth nearly £4,000 a year, and £27,000 in hard cash.

Now, many years before, he had quarreled seriously (and, as it turned out, irrevocably) with his eldest son, George. Reports differed as to the cause of the quarrel. The son was known to be recklessly extravagant, and the general belief was that, in order to meet some exceptionally heavy losses upon the turf, he had forged his father's signature to a bill. Be that as it might, the estrangement proved complete. The young man disappeared, and the story given out was that he had emigrated to Australia, taking with him a circus girl (whom he had privately married) and their infant son.

There remained to Basil Arnewood one other son, Richard, and it was generally supposed that he would profit by the new act to bar the entail in the younger son's favor. Richard, however, also turned out to be a scamp, married beneath him, and died young, leaving behind him a motherless boy, also named Richard. This child the old Squire took charge of, avowedly only because he could not help doing so. He had him well educated, and, in due course, young Richard passed into a line regiment, and with a very scanty allowance to supplement his pay.

Whatever the Squire's ultimate intentions may have been with respect to the disposal of his property, he died practically intestate. A will was certainly found, disposing of his personal estate among a number of more or less distant kinsmen, with some minor legacies to servants and charities. But he had omitted to sign this document, which was, therefore, legally worthless. Nor had he taken any steps whatever to interfere with the entail. Consequently, every acre and every shilling passed to the eldest exiled son, George, or his heirs.

This was a very nice little windfall, of course, for Messrs. O'Brien & Grudgery, the family solicitors; and equally, of course, they made the most of it. They were obliged, however, to take steps to discover the whereabouts of the absent heir, and finally decided on placing the work of inquiry in our hands. It so happened (as already stated) that Mr. Hawkins was very ill at the time, and the case, therefore, came entirely into my hands, as managing clerk.

At the risk of appearing to advertise the firm of which I am now a partner, I will venture to say that our agencies afford us very exceptional advantages for inquiries in the Colonies. These are, in fact, our specialty, and it was a knowledge of this fact which doubtless induced the Dublin solicitors to place the affair in our hands. I had, therefore, very little doubt that if Mr. George Arnewood were still above ground, our agents would find him. In addition to notifying them, I had the following advertisement inserted in the principal Australian weekly journals:

George Arnewood, of Kildare, Ireland, who emigrated to Melbourne in 18—, is earnestly requested to communicate at once with the undersigned. Father dead, intestate. Information respecting whereabouts of abovenamed liberally rewarded. Address Hawkins & Co, 39 Exeter Street, Strand, London.

Somewhat to my surprise, our first information came not through our agents, but as a direct reply to this advertisement, and from the son of the missing heir. It was not a lengthy communication, but was very much to the purpose:

Miners' Arms, Cooktown, Queensland,
March 9th, 1893.

Messrs. Hawkins & Co.—George Arnewood died three years ago in Gulgong, N. S. W. I am his only son, and have ample documentary evidence as to his identity, marriage, etc., and my own birth. My grandfather, Mr. Basil Arnewood, having (as you state) died intestate, I infer that I am heir to at least a portion of his property, though the entail was, I believe, barred years ago. Kindly inform me on this point. I can sail for England at once, if necessary. Yours truly.

—Luke Arnewood.

P. S.—My father, for his own reasons, preferred to be known out here as George Arnott, and that is the name I, too, at present go under. So, when you write, address to Mr. Luke Arnott, as above.

To this letter I replied, stating that we were merely acting as inquiry agents for the family solicitors, from whom he would learn full particulars in due course. I forwarded his letter to Messrs. O'Brien & Grudgery, and there my task, for the time, ended.

The correspondence that ensued between them and Luke Arnewood proved to be entirely satisfactory as to the validity of the latter's claim. He sent a quantity of papers and letters left by his father, the certificate of his mother's marriage at Deptford, and of his own birth in Kensington, portraits of his father taken at intervals during his career (and, of course, easily recognizable by those who had formerly known him), and a variety of other documents sufficient to satisfy a dozen family lawyers. He even sent his own photograph, duly autographed, in order to facilitate their recognition of him upon his return. And, finally, declining all monetary assistance as unnecessary, he wrote to announce his forthcoming departure for England.

So far, all seemed plain enough. But the voyage home, even by the longest route, ought not to take more than six or seven weeks; and as more than four months had elapsed since the date of the proposed departure, the solicitors were becoming anxious and the other claimants to the estate were pricking up their ears. Failing Luke Arnewood, the heir would be his cousin, Richard, then stationed, with his regiment, at Dover; while after Richard, a distant kinsman, Philip Blake by name, stood next in succession. Captain Richard Arnewood's interest in his overdue cousin's fate was easily understood; and, indeed, even the more distant kinsfolk would naturally have their eyes open to possible contingencies.

The written instructions brought over by Mr. O'Flynn authorized me to prosecute our inquiries with the utmost dispatch, and without any special regard to economy in expenses. Consequently, instead of contenting ourselves with the postal service, as upon the former occasion, we made fairly free use of the cable. And this time our Australian agents proved invaluable. They traced Mr. Luke Arnott to Brisbane. Thence the same individual traveled to Sydney as Mr. Luke Arnewood, crossed over to New Zealand, and, after a leisurely tour to that colony, finally booked his passage to England by the N. Z. S. N. Co.'s mail steamer Wairoa upon September 30th. The Wairoa (whose route was via Cape Horn) duly arrived upon November 18th, and an examination of her passenger list showed the name of L. Arnott among the saloon passengers. For some reason or other the wanderer had reverted to the fictitious name for this voyage. But no trace could be found of his movements after he had quitted the ship in dock.

To set the question of identity at rest, Mr. O'Flynn was sent over with called upon us to say that several of the officers and stewards of the ship had at once recognized in it their late passenger.

"May I see it?" I asked.

"To be sure," he answered, handing it to me.

I fairly jumped from my seat in amazement. For, despite the disfigurement caused by a violent death, the face of the man I had seen lying on the sofa in Tom Webb's room was unmistakably the original of the photograph!

CHAPTER VI.

Inspector Traill Steals a March on O'Flynn.

Some surprises are absolutely staggering in their unexpectedness. For fully half a minute I stood staring at the portrait, unable as yet to realize the full importance of the discovery I had just made. Then a doubt arose in my mind as to whether I might not, after all, be mistaken.

"Well?" queried O'Flynn, eagerly. "Do you recognize the face?"

"Yes," I answered; "or, at least, I am almost certain that I do. And, if my suspicions prove to be correct, our search for Luke Arnewood is at an end."

"How so? Where is he?"

"Dead," I replied, laconically. "He was murdered, here in London, some weeks ago!"

Mr. O'Flynn's jaw dropped, and a look of the utmost horror came over his withered old face.

"Dead?" he repeated. "Murdered?—Arrah, thin, and who in the world would want to murder the poor gintleman, and he only just landed from foreign parts? Shure, it's draming you are!"

"I devoutly hope I am mistaken," I said, gravely; but I fear I'm not. However, if you'll lend me this photograph for an hour or so, I'll soon verify or disprove my opinion. Come with me if you like."

The old clerk assented, and we proceeded together to Great Scotland Yard, where we were fortunate in finding Inspector Traill. With just a brief nod of salutation, I silently handed him the portrait. He studied it attentively for some moments; but, clearly, its resemblance to the murdered man did not strike him so quickly as it had me.

"Don't you recognize it?" I asked, a little impatiently, after a pause.

"Not to swear by," he answered, still continuing his scrutiny; "though it's certainly like him—allowing for what happened. Wait a moment."

(To Be Continued.)

Janitor Heir to $300,000.

Stories of vast fortunes which fall unexpectedly on the heads of "poor but honest" toilers are, as a rule, to be received with caution.

Sometimes, however, they prove to be true, and such may be the case with Leonard Vantiffelen of Austinfriars, unless some of his Dutch countrymen, with more imagination than usual, are playing a strange practical joke.

Mr. Vantiffelen has acted as the caretaker of some offices in the stock-broking quarter just mentioned, but he will wield the besom or fill the coal scuttle no longer, for he has received the pleasant intimation that he is the inheritor of a fortune valued at $300,000.

It appears that many years ago a great-uncle occupied the position of admiral in the Dutch navy, and in that capacity engaged in several successful fights with Malay pirates. These exploits brought much money, which he left at his death, over thirty years ago, to his brother, a Java planter. It was invested in plantations, which, being successfully worked, soon became very valuable.

Of this estate Mr. Vantiffelen has now become the inheritor. The fortunate gentleman was once a verger of the Dutch church, and then became a caretaker.—London Telegraph.

An Inimitable Feat.

The sailors of the three men-of-war—American French and British—while in the same harbor, were competing with each other for the best display of seamanship. A Yankee went to the top of the mainmast and stood there with an arm extended. A Frenchman then went aloft and extended both arms.

An Irishman on board the British ship thought if he could stand there with a leg and an arm extended, he would be declared the most daring sailor. Nimbly he mounted to the highest point and attempted to do so, but at the last moment he lost his balance and fell through the rigging towards the deck.

The various ropes against which he came in contact broke his fall, and, when near the deck he succeeded in grasping a rope. To this he hung for a couple of seconds, and then dropped lightly on the deck, landing safely on his feet.

Folding his arms triumphantly, as if it were all in the programme, he glanced towards the rival ships and joyously exclaimed:

"There, you frog-eating and pig-sticking foreigners, beat that if you can!"—Collier's Weekly.

If Thou Wilt Ease Thine Heart.

(Dirge.)

If thou wilt cast thine heart
Of love, and all its smart—
Then sleep, dear, sleep!
And not a sorrow
Hang any tear on your eyelashes
Lie still and deep,
Sad soul, until the sea-wave washes
The rim o' the sun to-morrow,
In eastern sky.

But wilt thou cure thine heart
Of love, and its smart—
Then die, dear, die!
'Tis deeper, sweeter,
Than on a rose bank to lie dreaming
With folded eye;
And then alone, amid the beaming
Of love's stars, thou'lt meet her
In eastern sky.

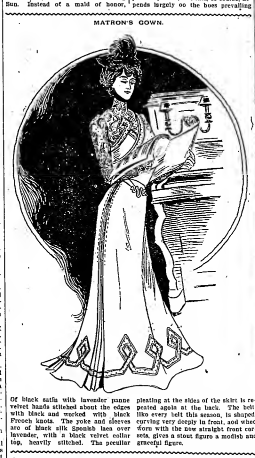
Married Bridesmaids.

Married best men and ushers have for some time been a feature of fashionable weddings; within the last year there have been several instances where the bride's attendants have been married, says the New York Evening Sun. Instead of a maid of honor, there is a matron of honor, and, in one case, the entire set of bridesmaids was replaced by a half-dozen very recent brides. The matron of honor is the more common evidence of the new convention, or whatever it may be called, however, and she bids fair to hold her popularity for some time to come. She undoubtedly had her origin in the sentimental pledge so often made between two girls that whoever married first should have the other for maid of honor, in some one case it having evidently been determined to carry out the vow one degree farther, and to serve each other, whether married or not. History fails to tell us anything about this first original case; all that we know is that the precedent of a matron of honor is now established. There are those to whom this is a cause for regret. The real old-fashioned wedding, such as our grandmothers knew, offered such a fine opportunity for future weddings, the bridesmaids and ushers being invariably young men and young women of a susceptible age and condition and heartily alive to the possibilities of being thrown together in this way. In very suburban instances, the attendants, when the ceremony was over, used to pair off, every Jack with his Jill, and follow after the newly-wedded couple right down the aisle in a way that could but suggest that they follow their example as well. Married ushers and a matron of honor have changed all that. In its secondary capacity of promoting other weddings, the wedding is not what it used to be, say those who know the old way. Not so, say we all of us. The "new" wedding may look less obviously like a matrimonial market, but the chances are, and, in fact, all evidence goes to prove, that young people may be depended upon to be young people under any condition of circumstances.

MATRON'S GOWN.



Of black satin with lavender panne velvet bands stitched about the edges with black and worked with black French knots. The yoke and sleeves are of black silk Spanish lace over lavender, with a black velvet collar top, heavily stitched. The peculiar pleating at the sides of the skirt is repeated again at the back. The belt, like every belt this season, is shaped, curving very deeply in front, and when worn with the new straight front corsets, gives a stout figure a modish and graceful figure.

Lighting the Drawing Room.

There is no room in the house the lighting of which demands more care and attention than the drawing-room. The novelist delights to write of the "brilliantly-lighted drawing-room;" but this is a mere figure of speech—every woman who studies the comfort of her guests knows that a somewhat subdued light is preferable for an apartment in which very little reading or writing is done and where conversation, music, and perhaps a little mild flirtation, are the principal occupation. Whether gas or oil lamps are better for the purpose is a mooted question. If the former is used, the globes should certainly be tinted or covered with colored shades. The light of oil lamps is softer, and the combustion is not nearly so harmful to walls, ceiling, etc., as that of gas; but where lamps are used, excessive care must be taken in cleaning, filling and trimming; for a smoky lamp does more damage in an hour than half-a-dozen flaring gas jets would do in a week. Now, as to the position of your lights. Do, pray, avoid that institution of suburban dwellings, a center gasalier dependent from the ceiling. Not only does this ruin the ceiling, but it spoils, for the time being the appearance of any woman who stands or passes beneath it. Try the experiment. Stand beneath such a light with a hand mirror and see how prominent are the cheek bones; what haggard lines appear on the face; and how deeply dark are its depressions. If you do this, you will agree that the center gasalier is a cruel mistake. All artificial light in a drawing room should come from brackets placed against the wall though standing telescopic lamps are nearly as good, and possess the additional advantage that they can be raised or lowered at will, for the height at which artificial light is placed is of more importance than many people imagine. Carefully adjusted, it is really an aid to beauty. Brackets should be fixed about five and a half feet from the floor, so that their illumination should be about on a level with the face of an individual of an average height. Of course, all such lights must be shaded, the favorite tones being pink or yellow; but this, of course, depends largely on the hues prevailing in the decoration of the room. Rapid strides have been made of late years in the manufacture of shades of all sorts, and the woman must indeed be hard to please who, at a good fancy stationer's, cannot find something pretty to suit her tastes. Just a word as to piano lights. If it is possible, place the instrument so that the light from one of the wall brackets falls on to the music over the left shoulder of the pianist. If this cannot conveniently be done, take care that the candle brackets fixed to the piano itself are a good length, and that the little shades, while shading the eyes of the player from the glare of the candles, reflect the light directly on the music.

The Straight Front.

No one should neglect to have this hook, which is a large one, sold especially for that purpose, and if the person is stout, there should be two also at the back. The long straight effect in front is absolutely necessary in this season's modes. The skirts should have a fitted yoke at the top. The chemise is orange taffeta, with accordion plaited ruffle, decorated by an Egyptian design in black and white silk braid over the surface and along the edge.

Not Good Kickers.

I never heard but one Porto Rican man make a kick about anything. I was sitting on the hotel veranda at Ponce one day when a merchant came down the street to see me. There was a vicious bull tearing about the street and the animal got after the merchant and ran him a block and gave him a toss which landed him on the veranda, almost at my feet. Of course I went to his assistance, thinking him seriously hurt, but it turned out that he had come off almost without a bruise. I began to congratulate him over his escape, but he interrupted me with:

"Senor, I like it not. The bull should have rolled me into the ditch instead of tossing me up here. Never before was I tossed upon this veranda, and can't make it out."—Washington Post.

It struck one of the pillars of the gallery and scattered itself impartially over fifteen or twenty hoodlums.

He took out another egg, but he did not have to throw it. The first one had done the business.

CLIMBS STAIRS FOR HEALTH.

If You Know How to Do It Properly It Is Very Good Exercise.

Persons who live in top flats and who have to climb what seem to them endless staircases to reach their homes should not take the matter to heart, for a well known physician declares that stair-climbing is the very best thing for health when performed in the proper manner.

Usually a person treads on the ball of his foot in taking each step. This is very tiresome and wearing, as it throws the entire suspended weight of the body on the muscles of the legs and the feet. In walking or climbing stairs the right method is to seek for the most equal distribution possible of the body's weight.

In walking up stairs the feet should be placed squarely down on each step, heel and all, and then the work should be performed slowly and deliberately. In this way there is no strain upon any particular muscle, but each is doing its duty in a natural manner.

Climbing stairs in this manner is an excellent form of exercise for the lower limbs, and, provided the chest is thrown well back and the climber does not get into the habit of bending half-double when ascending stairs, it is excellent for the lungs and heart. The latter is excited to a more rapid action and the lungs get full play.

The doctor is in the habit of prescribing systematic stair-climbing for all his patients who are suffering from dyspepsia or lung trouble, and says that many a case of incipient consumption has been cured by the patient having to climb stairs.—Boston Journal.

Miss May Burns Lost Her $2,500 Diamond Brooch.

Miss May Burns, a wealthy young woman of Baltimore, suffered the loss of a handsome diamond brooch at Kinsley, Kan., in a remarkable manner.

She was traveling in a private car, and at Kinsley, where the train made a considerable halt, found a rabbit coursing in progress. She took a fancy to a little girl in one of the other cars and invited the child and her mother into the car.

At the station she bought a rubber balloon for the child's amusement. A few miles further on the child playfully fastened the cord of the balloon to the brooch.

Then the child cought the balloon, and in an instant it had jerked the diamond brooch from the lady's bosom and took flight in the air.

The brooch is valued at $2,500, and the owner has offered a reward of $500 for its recovery. Cowboys are scouring the country in the hope of recovering the jewel.—New York Journal.

A Famous Snake Tamer.

Old John Deer, the rattlesnake tamer of Sullivan county, is dead. Old John's greatgrandfather got the secret of curing rattlesnake bites from a subchief of St. Tammany, for whom Tammany Hall is named, on the Delaware river a hundred years or more ago. Old John never failed to cure. He used a species of violet leaf—the spike-leaved variety. This he made into a poultice, which he bound above and below the bite, and from the leaves brewed a drink. Over and over again countrymen up our way have been brought from points eight or ten miles away to old John's cabin suffering from rattlesnake bite. He always kept the violet leaves handy, and loved to demonstrate his power over the reptiles. He tamed the snakes for New York and Philadelphia museums and tried out oil from those killed. The oil is an effective remedy for some kinds of rheumatism, and diluted it is used by eye doctors. Old John would let a rattle bite him if well paid for it. Then he would go and cure himself. He lived and died at Long Eddy.—New York Tribune.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Sheep for Breeding.

At the request of Secretary Coburn of the Kansas board of agriculture, John A. Craig, professor of animal husbandry of the Iowa Agricultural College, delivered an address before the board's recent annual meeting on "Sheep: Good and Bad." Among other interesting things contained therein he outlines the points that should be found in animals which are to be used especially for breeding purposes, and also the condition they should be in. As Prof. Craig is a recognized authority on all matters pertaining to sheep, the following may be profitably read and considered by all identified with this industry:

The ram should show masculinity in many features. In those breeds that have horns, the latter should spring strong from the head and turn clear from the face. In all rams the face should be broad between the eyes, somewhat short, and with a Roman nose. The crest, or scrag, should be thick and rising, and the neck full. A point deserving emphasis is the depth of the chest. The body should sink deep between the forelegs, and the ribs back of the shoulder should be deep and round, making the girth large and the brisket prominent and wide—two features that are indicative of a strong constitution. A live fleece, that is, one that is springy and not dead to the touch, and especially a dense, thick covering of belly wool, is also indicative of vigor or constitution. For the same reason, in those breeds that are wooled about the head, the more complete and dense this covering is the better it is liked. The legs of the ram should be straight and strong, and short. In movement, the ram should be bold and active. This is often influenced by the condition. A ram should never be so heavy in flesh as to be useless for service, as is too often the case in the show ring. The flesh should be even and firm, and not gathered in masses or rolls at any part of the body. It is very apt to gather at the fore flank, leaving the back bare or raw. Excessive condition is likely to make the ram unwieldy in action, or result in broken down pasterns, which usually render a ram useless for breeding purposes.

The ewe should be rather long in the face, with fine features. The neck should be slender and without any of the thickness noticeable in the ram. The body should be deep, round-ribbed, and specially long, so as to provide room for the growing lamb. The type of the good milking ewe verges strongly toward that which is typical of the good dairy cow. The ewe that milks well, and consequently rears early-maturing lambs, tends toward the wedge shape, deep in the chest, large bodied, and wide across the loins and hips. The condition of the ewe should not be such as to impair her breeding qualities. Excessive fatness, as a rule, is in this way injurious. The flesh should be evenly distributed and not gathered in bunches about the tail-head, and it should be firm and not flabby.

As a result of our consideration of the good and bad qualities of sheep, there arises the more important problem of breeding to reproduce the former and to remove the latter. I have failed to find, up to this day, where success has been obtained by in-and-in breeding, cross-breeding, or any other form, but that there was a man behind the system who knew well the merits and demerits of the animals he was breeding. And further, knowing these, he made his selection to get the best blend. This is the basis of a method of breeding that arises from what has gone before. For want of a better term, I have named it "balanced breeding," and I believe that this method has the means of developing and adding to the good qualities and at the same time lessening and removing the demerits of our domestic animals.

To follow balanced breeding in sheep would mean the selection of rams with the leading thought of removing the weakness of the flock. When one realizes the force of balanced breeding and acts on it in the selection of sires, it is wonderful what strides may be made toward perfection in a few years. With this sire we correct a deficiency of the fleece, and yet retain the good qualities of form; with another, we add a little more bone; another deepens the flesh on the valuable parts, and so on, each marking a new advance; while closer discrimination and riper judgment keep disclosing new features to be attained in each additional effort.

Dairy Notes.

Winter is the time when we hear most about difficulties with the cream to be churned. Sometimes it take two hours to come and sometimes it will not come at all. The cause is generally one of two things: either the cream has not reached the proper state of acidity or the temperature is not right. Cream should be properly ripened before being churned. The putting in of fresh cream just before beginning to churn means loss to the dairyman and probably trouble in getting the butter to come. The temperature is a great thing. A thermometer should be in use in every household where churning is done and the cream raised to say 58 degrees before churning is begun. In ripening the cream the temperature should be kept at about 65 degrees or higher, to allow the ferments to work.

The New Zealand farmers are beginning to experiment with round silos, which they denominate the "Yankee round silos." One of them built one last year, intending to fill it with Indian corn, but had to be satisfied with filling it with oats and tares. It made sour silage, but he reports that the cows ate it greedily. It is expected that many more of these silos will be constructed. The stave silo is, we believe, bound to supplant all other kinds. It is especially adapted to localities where the farmers are in straitened circumstances, but are inclined to experiment with the silo. The great cost of constructing some of the square silos makes it difficult to introduce them into new localities. The round silo will prove to be a pioneer in many parts of the world as well as in a few sections of our own country.

We have before referred to the attempt to be made by buttermakers to get a tax of 10 cents per pound put on oleomargarine colored to represent butter. This seems a just thing to do, as it leaves under the two cent rate all oleomargarine not colored to imitate butter. It is the fact of imitation that must be fought and not the fact of the making and selling of a substitute for butter. Rye and barley are used as substitutes for wheat, and we would not think of making a law to prevent their use as a substitute. It is the deception that is harmful and not the thing, provided the thing is healthful. But now there is a movement on foot among certain dairymen to change the issue. At one or two national meetings of associations that represent more or less the dairy interest, the words "colored to imitate butter" were stricken out, and resolutions passed asking congress to pass a law putting a tax of 10 cents per pound on all oleomargarine. To us this seems a very unwise thing to do. People have a right to purchase oleomargarine if they want it. Some may want to use it for wagon grease. If the National Dairy Union insists in fighting along this line, it is about certain it will fail in obtaining the legislation demanded. Not only will the city people be against them almost solidly, but a very large proportion of the country people have so much regard for justice that they will not indorse the fight. Besides, the National Dairy Union has raised money for carrying on the fight against colored oleomargarine. Have they a right to divert the money to fighting uncolored oleomargarine?

A discussion has been started by a hotel paper on the use of cheese as a diet. It lays the blame on the cheesemakers because the latter do not make cheese that is fit to eat and that is put on the market in a green state. A dairy paper replies that the grocers are as much to blame as the makers, that they do not show enterprise enough to build a curing room and buy up good green cheese and cure it for sale. It appears to us that it is entirely out of the question for the grocers to do this. The writer in the dairy paper quoted knows that the matter of curing rooms is a large one, that it requires a good deal of knowledge along dairy lines for a man to fully appreciate the value of the little things entering into the curing of cheese. If our cheesemakers find it difficult to make proper curing arrangements, what are we to expect of the city grocer? Besides, if the grocer should construct curing rooms he would be never sure that he could get cheese that would cure into first-class salable cheese, for he would be powerless to control the details of making. This question of selling green cheese is discussed at about every cheesemakers' convention we attend. The makers justify their selling of cheese uncured by saying that the grocers demand it, for they know that they can sell that kind of cheese without loss. Most of the cheese that is ripened and put on the market is so sharp that the public will not buy it, and a well-ripened cheese is in the minds of most people a sharp cheese. Our makers do not seem to have learned yet the secret of putting on the market a well-ripened mild cheese. Of course some of our cheesemakers do make such cheese, but we refer to the general mass of cheesemakers. Certainly the sale of cheese is greatly curtailed by the fact that most of the cheese on the market cannot be eaten except at a risk of disarranging the whole digestive system of the eaters. How the difficulty is to be overcome is a problem for the cheesemakers' conventions to solve.

Poultry Notes.

The country hen must not be given free range if that range includes shocks of corn. It means ultimately a hen so fat that she will not be good for laying and will be of little use for the table. The writer does not remember ever having seen an excessively fat hen reduced in fat to such an extent that she went to laying again. Practically a hen once fattened goes out of the egg-producing business. Old hens have a tendency to get fat and they especially must be kept away from corn in unlimited supply.

Keep the hens out of the hog yards and hog-feeding lots. The hen that is given access to these places is sure to become fat and lazy. She will in time take on so much weight that she will be of almost no use even for the table. We recognise the difficulty of doing this, in a large number of cases, but the farmer must know that it is imperatively necessary to restrict such privileges if he wants to succeed in the production of eggs and poultry flesh. In case the yards are so arranged that exclusion is impossible it will be advisable to keep the fowls yarded during much of the day, permitting them to roam only after their crops have been well filled with the food that is serviceable for producing eggs and flesh. With full crops the fowls will care less to hunt grain, but more to collect a supply of grass, when that is obtainable.

Fresh eggs the year round is the desideratum with the consumer. Any deterioration in quality discoverable by the eater means a certain loss to the demand. Every purchaser of any product knows how quickly he stops purchasing when he begins to find his purchases bad in quality. The rule applies to eggs more than to most other products, because an egg even slightly stale savors of putrefaction and is disgusting. Could we know that all eggs are strictly fresh the sale would be enormously increased. It is, therefore, to the interest of all poultrymen and farmers to produce a steady stream of eggs the year round, and not have them come in overwhelming supply at certain seasons of the year. More attention should be paid to producing fall and winter eggs that an equilibrium may be established. With proper control of the egg supply there need never be anything but good fresh eggs sent to market.

The original cabbage has developed into many different forms, such as kale, Brussels sprouts and cauliflower.

Good animals never come by chance or haphazard methods.

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

Can't Tread on His Toes—Hammer Hand Sling for Miners—Searchlights for Firemen—The Growth of the Finger Nail—Recent Inventions.

Searchlights for Firemen.

The New York fire department is about to add a complete portable electric searchlight plant to its apparatus. The searchlight wagon will go to fires with the engines, etc., and it is believed it will add greatly to the efficiency of the force, both in saving life and property. It resembles a fire engine in general appearance, but instead of a pump it has an engine and dynamo. There are two searchlights, each with an eighteen-inch lens. These will be carried on a platform behind the driver's seat. They can be used either from the platform or removed and carried to any desirable point of vantage, all communication with the generator being kept up by means of flexible cables which are insulated with rubber. The lights are provided with devices for quick regulation, so that the light may be spread out over a wide area, or confined and directed to any particular point. The purpose of the apparatus will be to aid the firemen in laying the hose, setting ladders, etc., also to light up the front of buildings where people may be in danger and to project light into the buildings themselves.

How Bells Are Tuned.

When certain bells in a chime produce discord they can be tuned. The tone of a bell may be raised or lowered by cutting off a little metal in the proper places. To lower the tone the bell-tuner puts the bell in his lathe and reams it out from the point where the swell begins nearly down to the rim. As the work proceeds he frequently tests the note with a tuning-fork, and the moment the right tone is reached he stops the reaming. To raise the tone, on the contrary, he shaves off the lower edge of the bell, gradually lessening or flattening the bevel, in order to shorten the bell, for of two bells of equal diameter and thickness the shorter bell will give the higher note. A notable instance of bell-tuning, according to La Nature, recently occurred at Lausanne, where twelve bells, in three neighboring steeples, had only seven separate notes, and produced a most curious discord.

The Growth of the Fingernail.

The rate of fingernail growth is thus touched upon by Edward Blake in his "Study of the Hand." The pace of growth varies very much, not only at different ages, but in different individuals of the same age. Influenced by many external and internal conditions, the pace also varies in the same person, from time to time. Observations as to the growth in men at different ages show that at 21 years the nail was replaced in 126 days, at 31 years in 159 days, at 32 years in 88 days, at 55 years in 110 days, at 67 years in 144 days. It is curious that in this growth the swiftest grower was a tuberculous subject who had a sharp attack of blood spitting during the observation. Sea air is said to quicken the growth of the nails, profound grief has been credited with the power of destroying them.

Preserving Milk by Pressure.

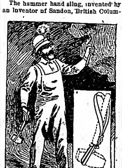
At the West Virginia agricultural experiment station at Morgantown remarkable results have been obtained through the application of high pressures to milk inclosed in cylinders. The effect of the pressure is greatly to increase the length of time during which the milk can be preserved. The general conclusions from the experiments are that pressures from thirty up to 100 tons per square inch will postpone the souring of milk for twenty-four hours. Thirty tons' pressure continued for one hour generally delays the souring just about twenty-four hours. A similar pressure continued for ten or twelve hours preserves the milk for from three to five days. Ninety tons' pressure for one hour postpones souring for four days.

Ruining Costly Guns.

One great disadvantage of smokeless gunpowder, tending to offset its many advantages, is its corroding action on the interior of a gun. Prof. Roberts-Austin recently made a report on the subject, showing that fine weapons are liable thus to be quickly ruined.

Hammer Hand Sling for Miners.

The hammer hand sling, invented by an inventor of Sandon, British Columbia, will be a great assistance to miners at all times, but practically when engaged in drilling an overhead hole. The large cut shows the hammer hand sling in use, while the smaller one is a perspective view, the hammer being shown in dotted lines in position in the sling. The invention has for its object the transference of the weight of the hammer from the handle grasped by the hand to the wrist or forearm by a sling connecting the head of the hammer and the wrist of the operator and a clutch connecting the handle of the hammer to the sling, so that the workman can swing the hammer and strike the drill without the laborious effort of grasping the hammer handle constantly. Overhead drilling is particularly hard, because of the severe strain on the muscles of the hand in merely holding the hammer, and this is entirely removed by the use of the sling, the construction of which is fully shown in the cut.

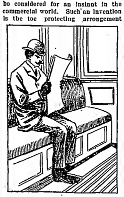


Explosive Force of Cordite.

The cordite used by the British artillery has a ballistic power, that is, a projectile force, nearly four times as great as the black powder previously employed. In the 3-inch 12-pound field piece, where formerly four pounds of pebble powder was the service charge but one pound of the cordite is now used, and increased safety is secured owing to the fact that the cordite charges are not exploded by being struck with bullets, and the danger from the explosion of the ammunition carriage thus eliminated. If the cordite is fired in a chamber which it completely fills, a pressure of 120 tons to the square inch results, as against 43 tons with the black powder, but in actual practice a vacant space is left in the powder-chamber, so as to keep down the maximum pressure to 16 tons in the bore of the gun.

Can't Tread on His Toes.

Ingenious but feebly indicates the originality of many inventions of that class which are practically useless, the slight convenience or advantage they afford being too insignificant to be considered for an instant in the commercial world. Such an invention is the toe protecting arrangement shown in the illustration. It is intended for use in street cars, where in these days of concentrated business districts they are usually quite as many persons standing as seated. Naturally in a crowded car a person, once in a lifetime, perhaps, has his toes trodden upon, but it is doubtful if any company would consider equipping their cars with the toe pockets here illustrated. They are formed of a strong raised slanting board, supported at intervals, placed close to the foot of the seat, and underneath which one can place his toes and rest in security without having to shift his feet to allow someone to get in or out of the car.



Recent Inventions.

For use in picking fruit a new device is formed of a sack, to be secured to the person, with a short, flexible tube connecting a flaring mouth to the bag, and a longer tube suspended on the end of a short pole to reach nearby fruit and deliver it to the bag.

In a new device for measuring bolts of cloth without unrolling them a flexible strip of steel is graduated for bolts of different widths, the measure being inserted in the bolt midway between the inner and outer folds, to obtain the approximate width of all the folds.

A new attachment for window sash balance is designed to ring an alarm when the window is moved, the shaft on which the pulley is suspended being extended through the window casing and ending in a pair of clappers, which are revolved inside a bell when the window is moved.

To raise water from the ocean level by utilizing wave power a new apparatus has a rigid structure set near the shore, with a long trussed lever pivoted to rise and fall when actuated by a float at the outer end, a pump being set at the short end of the lever to raise the water.

An improvement in rocking chairs has been patented by a Massachusetts man, the under frame of the chair supporting a pair of flat springs, which are free to rise and fall under pressure, the rockers resting on the springs and forming a spring seat and rocker combined.

Envelopes can be rapidly and neatly opened by a new implement, which has a metallic base to rest on the desk, with a flange on one side, at the bottom of which is a thin blade of steel, which enters the fold of the flap and cuts it off as the envelope is drawn through.

A Ready Answer.

"I am so ambitious," said the egotistical man, "that some day you may see me bring the earth home."

"If you bring it on your feet," cautioned his meek wife, "don't forget that the door-mat stands in the vestibule, and that the last time these halls were scrubbed I did it myself."

Derivation.

A Cleveland man mentioned recently that he had a theory which, it seemed to him, explained the origin of the name appendicitis.

Of course he was asked to reveal it.

"Why," he said, "it is probably derived from a-penned-up-seed-it-is."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"I—I changed a $10-bill for a man on the train," said an old man who arrived at the Union depot in Cleveland the other day.

"And you got two counterfeit fives for it, of course?" replied the depot policeman. "Well, it serves you right. A man of your age ought to have some sense about him if he's ever to get any. I can't help you any, and I wouldn't—"

"Oh, but I don't want any help," interrupted the old man. DEATH OF MR. MOODY

THE FAMOUS EVANGELIST PASSES PEACEFULLY AWAY.

Cause of Death Was a General Breaking Down Due to Overwork —Family Realized for Several Days That the End Was Near—He Was Conscious Almost to the Last and Conversed With His Family—Was Almost Free From Pain at the End.

East Northfield, Mass., Dec. 24.—Dwight L. Moody, the evangelist, whose fame is world-wide, died at his home here at noon yesterday. His family were gathered at his bedside and the dying man's last moments were spent in comforting them.

Early in the day Mr. Moody realized that the end was not far off and talked with his family at intervals, being conscious to the last except for a few fainting spells. Once he revived, and with wonderful display of strength in his voice, said, in a happy strain:

"What's the matter? What's going on here?"

One of the children replied: "Father, you have not been quite so well, and so we came in to see you."

A little later Mr. Moody talked quite freely to his sons, saying:

"I have always been an ambitious man, not ambitious to lay up wealth, but to leave you work to do. Are you going to continue the work of the schools in East Northfield and Mount Hermon and of the Chicago Bible Institute?"

As the noonday hour drew near the watchers at the bedside noticed the approach of death. Several times his lips moved as if in prayer, but the articulation was so faint that the words could not be heard. Just as death came Mr. Moody awoke as if from slumber and said with much joyousness:

"I see earth receding; heaven is opening; God is calling me," and a moment later he expired.

The death of Mr. Moody was not unexpected, although his temporary recovery from illness was hoped for by his relatives and friends. The cause of death was a general breaking down of his health, due to overwork. His constitution was that of an exceedingly strong man, but his untiring labors had gradually undermined his vitality until that most delicate of organs, the heart, showed signs of weakness. His exertions in the West last month brought on the crisis, and the collapse came during the series of meetings at Kansas City. Last week a change for the worse prepared immediate friends for what was to come. This week, however, the patient improved steadily until Thursday, when he appeared very nervous. This symptom was accompanied by weakness, which much depressed the family, who were anxiously watching the sufferer. Thursday evening Mr. Moody appeared to realize that he could not recover, and he so informed his family. During the night the patient had spells of extreme weakness and at 2 o'clock yesterday morning Dr. Wood was called at the request of Mr. Moody in order that his symptoms might be noted. A hypodermic injection of strychnine caused the heart to beat stronger. At 7:30 yesterday morning Dr. Wood was called again and when he arrived he found the patient in a semi-conscious condition. Then it was the family was called to the bedside, where they remained until the end came.

SLID INTO THE SEA.

Terrible Disaster at Amalfi, on the Gulf of Salerno.

Rome, Dec. 24. — A terrible disaster took place at Amalfi, the popular tourist resort on the Gulf of Salerno. About 2 o'clock an enormous rock, upon which stood the Capuccini hotel, slid bodily into the sea with a deafening roar and without a moment's warning, carrying with it the hotel, the old Capuchin monastery below the Hotel Santa Calerina and several villas.

Many people were buried in the debris, which crushed four vessels to the bottom of the sea, destroying their crews. The mass of earth which slipped was about 50,000 cubic yards.

The population is in a state of terror, fearing fresh calamities. Troops have arrived upon the scene and begun rescue work. It is believed that the loss of life is heavy, including a number of monks and the occupants of the hotel. As yet it is impossible to ascertain the exact number.

Amalfi is a small but lively town of 7,000 inhabitants situated at the entrance of a deep ravine, surrounded by imposing mountains and rocks of the most picturesque forms. The Capuchin monastery was founded in 1212 by Cardinal Pietro Capuccino for the Sisterians, but came into possession of the Capuchins in 1583. The building, which stood in the hollow of the great rock that rose abruptly from the sea to a height of 258 feet, contained fine cloisters.

Had a Narrow Escape.

Gallipolis, Ohio, Dec. 24.—The home of Luke Darst of Cheshire, was burned last night. Darst and eight children were asleep in the second story. An alarm was given and the father rushed from the house and bade his children to jump from the high windows into his arms. Seven of them were rescued in this manner, but Clarence, a ten-year-old boy, was burned to death.

Fire in Her Hold.

London, Dec. 24.—The British steamer Vulcan, Capt. Nulla, which arrived at Hamburg Dec. 18, from Galveston, via Fayal, where she was towed in with loss of propeller, has had a fire in her hold which has been smouldering, and seventy bales of cotton have been damaged.

At Binghamton, N. Y., John Edgar Gardiner, in order to get his picture in print, shot his young wife and then killed himself. He was sixty years of age, his wife twenty-nine.

Fresh Beef for the Philippine Army.

Washington—Military and naval authorities in the Philippines are engaged on plans which will furnish the army and navy in that quarter with fresh meat as a daily ration. Three of the navy ships have been established as a line to transport beef and mutton between Manila and Brisbane, Australia.

Want Guillotine Abolished.

Paris—Active measures are being taken by prominent men here to abolish capital punishment in France and prohibit public guillotine executions.

WOOD TAKES CHARGE.

Formally Installed in the Governor General's Office.

Havana, Dec. 23—Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood formally took charge of the governor general's office at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. His first act was to accept the resignation of the members of the advisory cabinet of Gen. Brooke. These officers, after considering the question over night, had decided to insist on retiring. Their decision meets with public approval. Almost without exception they had rendered themselves obnoxious to the majority of Cubans. One prominent Cuban said:

"The chief act of the advisors of Gen. Brooke, if they wish to rehabilitate themselves with their countrymen, is to resign and thus cause forgetfulness."

The Lucha, contrasting Gen. Brooke's with Gen. Wood's advent, says:

"Gen. Brooke's proclamation was unfortunate as it contained errors. Gen. Wood, although promising nothing, speaks volumes by his quite determined manner of taking charge of affairs. He has captivated everyone."

Gen. Chaffe is receiving numerous congratulations upon his appointment to be a brigadier general in the regular army. It is believed here that the post of chief of staff will be abolished and that Gen. Chaffee will succeed Gen. Wilson as the governor of Matanzas-Santa Clara, or will remain in Havana-Pinar del Rio, Gen. Ludlow succeeding Gen. Wilson. It is also believed that no governor will be appointed for Santiago province, but that an experiment in civil government on a much broader scale than ever will be initiated there under Gen. Wood's supervision from Havana.

Gen. Wood visited the prison and penitentiaries and seemed much pleased, although he would not comment on his observations. He was accompanied by Gen. Chaffee and Gen. Ludlow.

There have been no fresh developments in the case of the arrest of the ten customs appraisers and the whole matter is being thoroughly investigated.

At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon the temperature in Havana was 73 degrees, Fahrenheit.

STRUCK IT RICH.

Mr. and Mrs. McConnell Will Proceed to Enjoy Their Klondike Wealth.

Chicago, Dec. 23.—Dr. Luella Day, who two years ago left here for the Klondike, and whose death was reported in a snowslide, arrived at the Auditorium hotel and was registered by Edward McConnell, also a Klondiker, as his wife. Mrs. McConnell "struck it rich" near Dawson, and her husband, who had already been years in the Alaskan gold fields, owns several rich claims. Mrs. McConnell declared that after a couple of years, which she and her husband intended to spend in travel, she will return to Chicago and erect a home and hospital for the treatment of crippled children.

CONTRACT LABORERS.

A Number of Recent Arrivals Are Sent Back to Germany.

Baltimore, Dec. 23.—The local immigration authorities are making desperate efforts to keep contract laborers out of this country, and last week thirty who had come here on the steamship Munchen were returned to Germany. On the Hanover, which arrived on Monday, were 100 men who have no money and who are bound for Pennsylvania. It is suspected they are contract laborers and they are detained at the immigrant house at Locust Point pending an investigation.

BOUTELLE SERIOUSLY ILL.

Congressman Suffering From Congestion of the Brain.

Boston, Dec. 23.—Congressman C. A. Boutelle of Maine, who is at Young's hotel, has been taken seriously ill. The nature of his trouble is not given out. Every endeavor was made to keep the congressman's illness quiet. A bulletin given out this morning says that the congressman was suffering from congestion of the brain, induced by a severe attack of indigestion. It was the opinion of the physicians that the malady is only temporary.

Mormons Not Wanted.

Charleston, S. C., Dec. 23.—Mormon elders have established a church at which eight Mormon elders are at work near Ridgeland. The state legislature has been asked by the people of Hampton county to work for a law to extirpate the elders, and say that prompt legislation may save them the trouble the other states have recently had in trying to rid themselves of the sect.

Will Call an Extra Session.

Jefferson City, Mo., Dec. 23.—Paul B. Moore, private secretary of Gov. Stephens, in an interview yesterday, expressed the opinion that Gov. Stephens would call an extra session of the Missouri legislature some time in January in an endeavor to secure the enactment of a law for the taxation of franchises. Gov. Stephens is out of the city.

Dr. Williams Dead.

Atkinson, Wis., Dec. 23.—A telegram from Santa Barbara, Cal., announces the death of Dr. Edward H. Williams, senior partner of the Baldwin Locomotive works of Pennsylvania. Death was due to heart trouble. Dr. Williams was prominently connected with early railroads in Wisconsin. He was knighted by the king of Sweden and Norway.

News of the Northwest

TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

Five Persons Lose Their Lives in an Ice Jam in Alaska.

Vancouver, B. C., Dec. 22. — A dispatch from Dawson, dated Dec. 14, recounts a terrible tragedy which took place near Ogilvie. Mrs. J. Rumball, Mrs. Dumbottom, Henry Kelly and two MacNamara brothers, hailing from Minneapolis, were caught in an ice jam. Their boat being small, it was crushed and all perished. Another tragedy is reported from White Horse, where three men named T. Smith, F. Batty and John McIntosh, were engaged in salvaging the cargo of the steam scow Linderman. Being unexpectedly struck by a heavy swell their boat filled and sank. The men were not seen after the boat disappeared, and it is supposed they were carried under the ice.

It has developed into the richest copper vein in this district, and the new owner intends to tunnel under the city, and as soon as the deal was closed yesterday afternoon they started to sink a shaft which will be put down 1,000 feet at the corner of Broadway and Arizona streets, within half a block of the two principal hotels and the city hall.

WORK OF CONGRESS

Washington, Dec. 19.—The currency bill which was debated all last week was passed yesterday by the house by a vote of 190 to 150. It had the united support of every Republican in the house and of eleven Democrats, Messrs. Clayton, Driggs, Fitzgerald, Levy, Ruppert, Scudder, Underhill and Wilson of New York, Alier of Pennsylvania, Denny of Maryland and Mr. Thayer of Massachusetts. All the other Democrats voted against the measure or were paired against it except John Walter. Smith, governor-elect from Maryland, Mr. Stallings of Alabama and Gen. Joseph Wheeler of Alabama. Mr. Stallings has not been present in the house this session owing to illness, and one of his colleagues announced that if present he would have voted in the negative. Gen. Wheeler is serving in the Philippines. When the speaker announced the result the Republicans cheered lustily. After the vote the speaker rather unexpectedly announced the committee selections, and the reading of the lists was followed with intense earnestness by the members whose opportunities for distinction depends so largely upon their committee assignments. The only incident in connection with the reading of the lists was Mr. Bailey's interrogatory of the speaker as to whether Gen. Wheeler's name had been placed upon the committee on ways and means. Speaker Henderson responded in the negative. Announcement of the death of the late Representative Bland of Missouri, which occurred last summer, caused an early adjournment.

In the Senate.

What the senate may accomplish in the way of legislation for the Philippines during the present session is problematical, but that the question will be thoroughly discussed is indicated by the number of resolutions bearing upon it being introduced. In opposition to the retention by the United States of the Philippine islands two resolutions were introduced yesterday, one by Mr. Tillman of South Carolina, and the other by Mr. Bacon of Georgia. Each resolution purposes to yield the islands to a government to be established by the Filipinos themselves. Mr. Morgan of Alabama addressed the senate briefly upon the necessity of legislation to control trusts, and had his joint resolution against them referred to the judiciary committee.

HOUSE COMMITTEES.

Speaker Henderson Proceeds According to Precedent.

Washington, Dec. 19.—Speaker Henderson yesterday announced the committees of the house of representatives. It proved to have very few surprises, as the speaker preserved the time-honored custom of following precedent as to old members, leaving them in their old chairmanships and places and gradually advancing them as vacancies occur. The important new chairmanships are those of Mr. Brosius of Pennsylvania, chairman of banking and currency; Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio, merchant marine and fisheries; Mr. Southard of Ohio, coinage, and Mr. Cooper of Wisconsin, the newly formed committee on insular affairs.

The new members of the ways and means committee are McCall and Long, Republicans, Newlands, Silver, and Cooper, Democrat. Appropriations and foreign affairs also get a considerable amount of new blood. Military affairs has the largest new membership, six Republicans and three Democrats. The membership of the insular committee is notable in being a "committee of chairmen," the heads of ways and means, appropriations, foreign affairs, commerce, post-offices, etc., being represented also on this committee. The new members of the house receive full consideration from the speaker, although following custom, they necessarily take the lower places on the committees. The Democratic members receive fewer places than in the last congress, as the larger Democratic representation in this house compelled a reduction in the number of places for each.

Washington, Dec. 20.—Discussion in the senate of the financial measure drafted by the majority of the committee on financial affairs will begin on Thursday, Jan. 4, the day after the holiday recess. This announcement was made in the senate yesterday by Mr. Aldrich of Rhode Island, chairman of the financial affairs committee. Mr. Aldrich declared his purpose to press the measure to a passage as soon as possible. Mr. Allen of Nebraska took the oath of office.

In the House.

The house was in session two hours yesterday. A large number of perfunctory resolutions for printing, leave for committees to sit during the sessions, etc., necessary to get the committees under way were adopted and the several portions of the president's message were distributed in accordance with the usual custom. Speeches were made by Mr. Graw, the venerable ex-speaker of the house, in defense of the administration's course in the Philippines, and by Mr. Bell, a Colorado Populist, criticising the president's utterances upon the prosperity of the country. Scores of the members left for their homes yesterday afternoon to spend the holidays.

Washington, Dec. 21. — In the final session of the senate yesterday before the holiday recess Mr. Pettigrew of South Dakota, in a characteristically incisive speech demanded to know whether it was to be the policy of the representatives of the administration to suppress proper facts and information when called for by a senator. He said he believed an effort was being made to prevent the testimony taken in the war investigation commission being sent to the senate, and declared his intention not to submit to suppression of information to which people in his opinion were entitled.

Taking Maj. Gen. Brooke's farewell proclamation to the people of Cuba as a text, Mr. Hale of Maine briefly congratulated the general upon the work he had accomplished in Cuba, and said he could now see the dawn of time when the people of Cuba would be independent.

Mr. Morgan of Alabama offered an amendment to Mr. Bacon's resolutions guaranteeing to the people of Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines a republican government, and Mr. Hoar of Massachusetts introduced a resolution declaring how the people of the island possessions of the United States should be governed.

In the House.

No business was transacted at the brief session of the house yesterday. The time was occupied by a filibuster against the motion to adjourn. The Democrats and some Republicans did the filibustering in order to give Mr. Graw, the venerable ex-speaker of the house an opportunity to reply to some statements made Tuesday by Mr. Gaines of Tennessee. Mr. Payne, the majority leader, was defeated on two roll calls. Mr. Richardson chafed him on his defeat in a good natured manner. After Mr. Grow had made his statement the house adjourned until 12 o'clock, Jan. 3, 1900.

FAREWELL TO BROOKE.

Banquet Tendered to the Departing Governor General.

Havana, Dec. 24.—Sixty-five persons were present at the farewell banquet tendered to Gen. Brooke yesterday at the Paris restaurant. Gen. Mario Menocal presided and Mr. Ernest Lee Conant acted as toastmaster. Senor Llorente, in proposing the health of Gen. Brooke, said:

"Gen. Brooke was called upon to govern Cuba under the extremely difficult conditions of transition from the old, narrow system to the new, liberal regime, and he did so without injuring the rights of any one. Cubans will remember him with gratitude and love."

Maj. Gen. Wood, who spoke briefly in response to words of welcome, said:

"The United States is in Cuba in the person of representatives who intend to carry out a great work and to fulfil strictly the promises of the United States congress. As for myself I can only do what the president has sent me to do; but I hope to enjoy the esteem and confidence of the Cuban people as Gen. Brooke has enjoyed them."

Gen. Ludlow said: "Those American officials who remain behind may count themselves fortunate if, when the time comes for them to leave the island, they are followed by the respect and good wishes of those whom they in turn leave behind as Gen. Brooke is about to do. The Cubans have had no better friends than the American officers."

Gen. Brooke, responding, said in part: "I shall always remember the long hours of toil in Cuba, but I shall also ever recall the kindness shown me by all Cubans, especially by those who realize that the Americans are their best friends."

Gen. Brooke will leave to-day for Tampa. A squadron of the Seventh cavalry and a battery of the Second artillery, with a band, will escort him from the palace to the wharf. A major general's salute will be fired from Cabanas as the steamer leaves the harbor at 1 o'clock. A governor general's salute will be fired in honor of Gen. Wood.
